On policy issues, the convention backed the position taken by Pres. John F. Griner and rejected, 647-232, an attempt to drop a no strike pledge from the union's constitution.

Supporters of the move cited similar action taken by other public employe unions and argued that the constitutional provision implied acceptance of "second-class citizenship" by federal employes.

Opponents stressed that dropping the restriction would not change the federal law which prohibits strikes and would make it more difficult for the union to win congressional support for its immediate goals.

Delegates voted unanimous approval of a strong civil rights resolution which endorsed the recommendations of the Kerner Commission and created a Fair Practices Dept. in the AFGE "to further equal opportunity for all in our union, in government employment, and in the nation."

The resolution also urged each local to form its own Fair Practices Committee.

There were election contests for all top offices, but incumbents won handily. Griner defeated Dennis Garrison of Huntsville, Ala., by a margin of more than 4-1. Exec. Vice Pres. Clyde Webber and Sec.-Treas. Esther F. Johnson also won easy re-election.

The per capita increase raises the monthly dues to the national organization from $1.10 to $1.60 over a two-year period. Ten cents will be earmarked for a building fund.

Installation of national vice presidents previously chosen in district caucuses brought in the first Negro executive council member in the union's history. Royal Sims, formerly president of the AFGE's national council for the Veterans Administration, was installed as vice president for the union's Pennsylvania-Delaware district.

Lodges Become Locals

The AFGE took a step to conform to standard trade union terminology by substituting the term "local" for "lodge" to designate its basic units.

In another constitutional change, delegates adopted a provision advancing the executive vice president to the presidency if a vacancy should occur.

The convention also recommended that a full-time Wage Board representative be appointed in each district to deal with special problems affecting blue collar government workers.

Phantom Jets Urged For Israel's Defense

New York—The AFL-CIO urgently called on the Administration to provide Phantom Jets to Israel so that it can deter aggression and preserve its national existence.

The federation's executive council said the government should "lose no further time" in providing Israel with arms, especially jet planes. World peace as well as the fate of Israel is at stake, it declared.

Goaded on or guided by the Kremlin, the "aggressive Arab rulers have rejected every offer by Israel for a lasting and just peace in the Middle East," the council asserts.

The growing threat of full scale war in the Middle East has been aggravated by "the swift massive Soviet rearming of the United Arab Republic and other aggressive Arab forces," and the stepped-up training of guerrillas "for unceasing murderous attacks and sabotage against the civilian sectors" of Israel, the council asserted.

Mediation Solves 60% Of Disputes

New York—AFL-CIO's Internal Disputes Plan maintained its successful use of mediation with the percentage of cases settled on this level running at 60 percent so far this year.

Since the plan was initiated in 1962, 810 complaints have been received and 481 have been settled at the first-stage mediation level.

Of the 292 determinations by impartial umpires, violations of the plan set up under Article XX of the federation's constitution were found in 97 cases.

The Executive Council subcommittee set up under the plan has received 53 complaints of non-compliance with the determinations of the impartial umpires and achieved compliance in 27 cases. Non-compliance was found in 13 cases, six were withdrawn and seven cases are pending.

Five unions are currently under sanctions required by the plan: Air Line Pilots, National Maritime Union, Railroad Signalmen, Switchmen's Union, Typographical Union.

Election Viewed As Key To Senior Citizen Gains

New York—The election of the Humphrey-Muskie ticket is the key to continued progress in meeting the needs of the nation's older citizens, especially improvements in medicare and social security, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the Golden Ring Council of Senior Citizens.

The seniors jammed the ballroom of the Hotel Commodore to hear Meany, Democratic Vice Presidential Candidate Edmund S. Muskie and Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen, whom they presented with the council's first Wilbur Award.

Noting the progress of the past eight years and the job still ahead, Meany compared the Republican and Democratic platforms on the social security and medicare issues and the candidates. The GOP, he noted, doesn't even mention medicare and offers no real hope of progress in social security benefits The Democrats are pledged to expand both.

The Job Ahead

"Our job in the days ahead," he stressed, "is to see to it" that Humphrey and Muskie, "clearly the team for our time, are elected."

Muskie in a brief talk stressed that new efforts must be made to improve and expand medical services and health care along with other social and economic programs so that the nation is "one society" with none of it walled or sectioned off.

Cohen called for a 10-point bill of rights for senior citizens, including a 50 percent increase in the social security benefit level and a minimum benefit of $100 a month.

He proposed also transforming the present federal-state welfare system into an exclusively federal system with 100 percent federal financing. "We could have nationwide eligibility with some alternatives for such variables as rent. And I propose a simplified method of administration using a declaration of income rather than a long, complicated, involved needs investigation."

While the aged have benefited greatly from the programs that have been inaugurated in the past decade, they "still get far less than what they should expect from the world's wealthiest nation," Cohen asserted.

His bill of rights includes an adequate retirement income, modern, comprehensive health care for all the aged, advanced rehabilitation services, decent housing, health research, broadened opportunities for employment, meaningful participation in society, conveniently located community services, leisure-time activities, assurances of independence.

AFL-CIO Leaders On Trade Panel

Pres. Johnson has named three labor leaders, including AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, to his Public Advisory Committee on Trade Policy.

I. W. Abel, president of the Steelworkers, and George Harrison, chief executive officer of the Railway Clerks, also were appointed to the 34-member committee.

The committee will provide views and recommendations on trade matters linked to a long range study of U.S. foreign trade policy, including the effect on jobs.

The study is being conducted for the President by his special representative for trade negotiations, Ambassador William M. Roth.

Incumbents Winners in 2 Primaries

Incumbents won handily in primary elections in Massachusetts and Washington.

Four Democratic congressmen from Massachusetts faced what had appeared to be strong challenges. All were renominated, however—Edward P. Boland, Harold Donohue, Torbert Macdonald and Philip J. Philbin.

Washington state Republicans picked a 43-year-old Negro, Art Fletcher, a former professional football player, to run for lieutenant governor on the ticket with Gov. Daniel J. Evans. He will oppose the three-term incumbent Democratic lieutenant governor, John Cherberg. State Attorney Gen. John O'Connell won the Democratic gubernatorial primary.

In Washington's Senate race, incumbent Warren G. Magnuson easily won renomination and will face a conservative Republican state senator, Jack Metcalf.

A runoff Democratic primary in Oklahoma picked John B. Jarboe, a political newcomer, to face the entrenched nine-term incumbent Republican congressman, Page Belcher.

'No Other Alternative'

THE CONSTITUTION of the AFL-CIO, in both its preamble and statement of objects and principles, categorically commits the federation to political action for the betterment of American society.

This is a continuing obligation, applicable to all levels of government, but it assumes its greatest importance every four years, when the American people choose a national Administration and thus determine the policies under which the nation as a whole will be governed.

Thus every presidential election is vital. But this has never been more true than in 1968, when the domestic and international problems facing America have assumed crisis proportions.

The very nature of the presidency focuses public attention upon the personalities of the candidates of the major parties and to a lesser extent upon the vice presidential candidates. But the choice is not limited to personalities. There is also a choice between two programs for dealing with the issues of the day—the platforms developed by the two parties after extensive committee hearings, and adopted by their respective conventions. These platforms are, in a real sense, as revealing as the personalities of the candidates in determining what the nation can expect from each side.

It is our deep conviction that both the Democratic candidates and the Democratic platform merit the wholehearted support of American workers.

We do therefore recommend, advise and exhort all members of each affiliated union to support the Humphrey-Muskie ticket with all the energy at their command.

We are convinced that the facts set forth in this study leave no other alternative. And more than that, we believe Hubert Humphrey is uniquely qualified to lead America onward toward that better future he himself has envisioned throughout his career.

With full appreciation of the urgency of our time and the grave decisions that lie before this nation and with complete faith in America's ability to meet these problems, we pledge ourselves to work unstintingly for the election of Hubert Humphrey, Edmund Muskie and all candidates for Congress who share their views and ours.

Their victory will be the victory of America.

A THIRD CANDIDATE for the presidency is in the field this year—the former governor of Alabama, George Wallace.

For the first time since 1948 and the second time in this century a candidate is seeking the highest office in the land on a program of hate. Mr. Wallace has no platform, no policies and no program for America—save racism and hatred.

His pretense to be the friend of the worker is especially galling to the American labor movement. The record of low wages, poor working conditions, high crime rates, high illiteracy rates, anti-unionism, segregation and prejudice in Alabama testifies to the falsity of that claim.

Mr. Wallace warrants the open contempt with which we view his candidacy.

With Both Hands

Discontent Clouds Progress:

Nation Seen Closer Than Ever To Goal of Free Society for All

The following is excerpted from the statement by the General Board of the AFL-CIO on 1968 party platforms and candidates.

FOR NEARLY EIGHT years the United States has enjoyed a period of uninterrupted economic growth, ever-increasing prosperity and basic social reform without precedent in the nation's history.

To recite the whole record would take volumes, and undoubtedly historians in future generations will write volumes about it. Suffice it to say here that as a result, the overwhelming majority of Americans have higher real incomes, greater economic security and greater material well-being than any people, any time, anywhere.

And along with this, full equality for all Americans in every aspect of life has been firmly established by law; educational opportunities have been so vastly broadened that the day is in sight when every young person can get all the education he wants and can absorb; the elderly have been freed from the scourge of medical bankruptcy; consumers have been given a substantial degree of protection against usury and fraud; the minimum wage—the soundest weapon against poverty—has been strengthened and extended; a whole range of measures have been undertaken to beautify, to purify, to conserve and otherwise to enrich the environment in which the people live.

All these gains and more have been made, we are convinced, because during these years the federal government has followed a concept long ago advanced by the AFL-CIO—the concept of investment in America.

It is with this same conviction that we approach the manifold problems that remain; problems both in domestic and foreign affairs which are causing widespread discontent in a nation whose people, as a whole, enjoy unprecedented affluence.

There can be no quarrel with the discontent of those who have been left behind—who have had only a small share, or none at all, in the affluence of the great majority. We in the AFL-CIO have said repeatedly that a society which does much for the majority and little or nothing for the minority is a society that needs changing. But the change must be to build, not to tear down; to invest more, not less; to develop new programs for unmet needs, not to abandon that which, while good, needs further improvement.

We join in the discontent of those who have been left behind. We are determined that the minority must—and will—share as well in the wealth of America.

But there is other discontent, which we do not share and which we abhor. Included in this group are some who, out of ignorance, fear and mindless hatred, stimulated by cynical demagogues, would deny to Negroes equal rights and opportunities.

Finally there are those whose discontent stems primarily from the war in Viet Nam. They cry "peace" as though other Americans wanted war—and as though Hanoi wanted an honorable peace.

Responsible Americans, who dissent on the war, have done so with reasonable recognition of the intransigence of the other side. Too many, however, are deaf to reason and more than willing to provoke, in the name of "peace in Viet Nam" ugly disorders in the streets of America.

These extremists include some whose loyalties are not to the United States or the democratic cause. But the extremists have so inflamed the Viet Nam issue and their vile and false attacks have been so over-publicized by the sensation-seeking press, radio and TV, that the basic reason for America's involvement in Viet Nam—the defense of freedom from aggression—has been all but forgotten.

Our faith in America has never faltered. We believe in the inalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness; we believe in liberty and justice for all. These may be old-fashioned notions to some of the very young. They may be rejected by some of the middle-aged who owe all they have to these principles but now would deny them to others.

Yet it is upon these fundamentals that the future of this country depends, and their extension to other lands is still, as it was almost two centuries ago, the one best hope for all the peoples of the world.

Surely if that hope is to be kept alive, we in America must remain true to our own creation—a free and humane society of free and equal citizens, all able to develop their own talents to the utmost, in whatever direction each individual may choose.

America has not yet attained that goal, though it is closer now than ever before. We in AFL-CIO believe the goal can be and must be reached.

Gains on Negative Appeal:

Wallace Rides Wave of Hate In His Campaign for Power

The following is excerpted from "Racism, Reaction and George Wallace" by Griffing Bancroft, which appears in the September 1968 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

A CLOUD HANGS OVER the political land. A few months ago it was barely discernible on the horizon. Now it has grown to storm proportions, threatening not only our outmoded electoral system but also the very concept of majority rule.

There have been third party movements in the past. But this is not, like most of them, a crusade for economic or social reform promising a more abundant life for the people. Its appeal is essentially negative.

Nor is it any longer purely sectional, as was the Dixiecrat third party in 1948. This one seeks to rouse up discontented white people in all sections.

Finally, more like some movements in foreign countries than here, it is essentially a one-man affair. The American Independent Party is George Wallace and George Wallace is the American Independent Party.

In 1958 Wallace entered the Democratic primary for governor. He was still taking a comparatively moderate position on civil rights but his opponent, John Patterson, ran on an all-out segregationist platform and Wallace was defeated, 314,000 to 250,000.

Wallace has denied a statement attributed to him by several writers after this, a statement that Patterson had "out-segged" him or, as some put it, "out-niggered" him and that it would never happen again. Whether Wallace said it or not, it never did. All traces of moderation, all lingering traditions of Populism, were dropped.

He went out for governor again in 1962, now running almost entirely against the federal government. In the campaign, he promised to "stand in the schoolhouse doors" to preserve segregation. This time he won, defeating his more moderate opponent, state Sen. Ryan de Graffenried by 70,000 votes. In his inaugural speech, Jan. 14, 1963, Wallace fairly shouted his defiance.

"I draw the line in the dust and toss the gauntlet before the feet of tyranny," declared the bantam governor. "I say segregation now, segregation tomorrow, segregation forever!"

Meanwhile, Wallace's confrontation with federal authority to test his promise of "segregation forever" was not long in coming. On June 11, 1963, five months after he took office, Gov. Wallace did, indeed, "stand in the schoolhouse door" or, more precisely, in front of the registration center for the University of Alabama along with his state troops and armed highway patrolmen.

There were similar gestures in other Alabama schools, all with the same results. At this point, late in 1963, Wallace embarked on a national speaking tour and announced plans to enter some Democratic presidential primaries in 1964. This he did and, while he didn't win any, he made a surprisingly good showing in some.

In Wisconsin he got 230,000 votes and in the border state of Maryland he came close—43 percent of the vote—to nosing out Sen. Daniel Brewster, who ran as a stand-in for Pres. Johnson. This was Wallace's first show of strength outside the deep South, a taste of power he would not forget. But, after the Republicans nominated Barry Goldwater, whose views on states' rights and many other matters, except race, closely paralleled those of Wallace, the Alabama governor withdrew.

In the final elections in 1964, Alabama voters were not allowed to vote for Pres. Lyndon Johnson. They were permitted only to choose between an unpledged slate of presidential electors and one pledged to Goldwater. The President's name did not appear on any ballot. Goldwater won.

Alabama remains one of the least progressive states and Wallace as governor did little to change it. Sales tax rates soared to among the highest in the nation. For the first time in many years, such state agencies as the highway patrol interfered in union organizing drives. Alabama ranks 48th among the states in per capita income, $900 a year below the national average. It is one of 16 states without an effective minimum wage law and only seven states rank lower in jobless benefit payments. It is near the top in illiteracy: only two states—Mississippi and South Carolina—spend less per pupil in public education.

Far from doing much about all this, Wallace kept devoting more time to attacking the federal government although the federal government currently spends twice as much in Alabama as it gets out in taxes.

Wallace's campaign is probably the most anti-intellectual movement since the Know-Nothing party in the last century. Whether he calls them "theoreticians," "bureaucrats" or "people with pointed heads," the target is the same: students, teachers, political scientists.

Wallace seeks again to raise the specter of domestic communism, the radical left, which has been used so successfully in the past by such practitioners as the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy, to stir up the radical right. But Communists alone are no longer enough. Wallace usually lumps them all together: "activists, militants, socialists, anarchists, Communists." Take your pick.

Finally, there is something Wallace is for: "law and order." Everyone is for this but everyone does not agree on how to achieve it. Wallace's answer is simple: naked force and the denial of certain fundamental rights which are being upheld by the Supreme Court.

Bridging the Gap:

Arts, Cultural Activities Widen Labor's Community Services

THE LABOR MOVEMENT is expanding its range of community service programs to meet the needs of new workers and to broaden community cultural activities, an AFL-CIO spokesman reported.

Appearing on Labor News Conference, Leo Perlis, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Community Services, said that demonstration projects in the arts, man-to-man guidance for hard-core unemployed workers coming on the job, and around-the-clock community agency referral services conducted from neighborhood fire houses are now under way in a number of urban centers. The AFL-CIO produced public service interview is broadcast Tuesdays, at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network.

Perlis said the experimental cultural arts programs are directed at bridging the gap between large numbers of citizens and the local arts establishment.

"The primary objective," he said, "is to encourage AFL-CIO members and their families to fulfill themselves as total human beings" through participation in the "artistic and cultural opportunities in the community." With the cooperation of existing institutions and the union members who work in the professional fields, it is hoped that mobile museums, concerts, theater and other cultural events can be brought into working-class and poor neighborhoods—perhaps right into the union halls—where they would be more accessible to low and middle-income citizens.

THE UNION spokesman also reported the establishment of a "buddy system" of worker-to-worker help for hard-core unemployed coming on the job. This effort, he said, is being carried on in conjunction with the National Alliance of Businessmen's drive to put 500,000 hard-core unemployed into meaningful jobs over the next three years. The union "buddy system," he said, is designed to help the new worker find himself, "stay on the job and become a useful citizen in his community and an effective worker in the plant."

The 24-hour-a-day agency referral service was launched by the AFL-CIO Fire Fighters to "help people who have problems at all times of the day and night," he said. He noted that "there isn't a single community" that now has such a service.

IT WAS ON JUNE 26 that Justice Abe Fortas was nominated for Chief Justice of the United States and Judge Homer Thornberry for Justice of the Supreme Court.

To date, there has been no vote taken on their confirmation.

It is generally conceded that two-thirds of the members of the Senate—give or take a few—will vote for confirmation.

It is important to understand the philosophy and character of this little group to understand what is happening. Broadly speaking, it is the core of the infamous Republican-Dixiecrat coalition that has tried to build roadblocks to progress in recent decades.

There are exceptions, however. Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois has wiped his hands of them. So has Sen. Thruston Morton (R-Ky.). Some southern Democrats, believing that both Fortas and Thornberry are exceptionally competent men, will support confirmation.

Publicly, the leader of the anti-Fortas cabal is Sen. Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.), who could be dubbed a supreme Senate opportunist.

This, he feels, is an opportunity to block the confirmation of men who would carry on the liberal record of the Warren Court and, if Richard Nixon should be elected President, would give Nixon the opportunity to fill the Chief Justice post and probably the official one currently held by Fortas.

Griffin has shown that he is an opportunist in other areas. Back in 1959, when he was a member of the House, he suddenly became the front man for those who had whetted their knives for the American labor movement. The result was the Landrum-Griffin bill.

If Griffin is again the front man in the anti-Fortas cabal, as is indicated, the real leader is the Senate's most obvious prototype of a John Bircher, Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.). And Thurmond is the southern leader for Nixon.

What Fortas opponents know, but blatantly ignore, is that a judge votes not his own personal views, but his interpretation of the law and one could well conflict with the other.

So the issues raised are phony. Here are some:

QUALIFICATION—No one has seriously raised the issue of credentials, experience or temperment of the nominees. Both are given top rating by the American Bar Association. And in the case of Fortas, the Senate has already confirmed him as an Associate Justice.

LAME DUCK—Pres. Johnson is not a "lame duck" in the sense that he has not been defeated for office. But Presidents have nominated in their last terms—ever since John Adams appointed John Marshall. And Adams was a real lame duck in the sense that he had been defeated in the elections.

"SOFT ON CRIME"—This is strictly a political issue. Fortas' view was expressed in June 1965 when he said: "We must establish, without exception, the rule of law. We cannot tolerate lawlessness or the conditions which bring it about."

Thurmond fully ignores Fortas' stand which gives police sweeping power to frisk suspects.

"CRONYISM"—To quote from the Trenton, N.J., Trentonian: "We doubt that the Republicans give a tinker's damn whether Fortas or Thornberry are pals of the President. What they really have in mind is to stall confirmation until a new, and hopefully, conservative President comes in next January. Then they will be able to place 'our man' on the bench."

PORNOGRAPHY—This is probably the most unwarranted charge of all against Fortas. He is charged with approving two films that a few Senators think pornographic. However, Fortas cast the deciding vote in a 5 to 4 decision that upheld the conviction of publisher Ralph Ginzburg for "pandering" obscene books and magazines.

AN EXPANDED RANGE of labor movement community service programs to meet the needs of new workers and broaden community cultural activities was outlined by AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis, center, on Labor News Conference. Reporters Murray Seeger, left, of the Los Angeles Times and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc., questioned Perlis on the AFL-CIO produced program broadcast on Mutual Radio.

The Platforms and the Candidates . . .

The following is excerpted from the statement adopted by the AFL-CIO General Board on Sept. 18, 1968, in New York.

The Platforms

LABOR LEGISLATION

The Republican platform praises the "key role" of organized labor in American life, and proposes a "re-examination" of the 40-hour week with a view toward reducing it. It also includes a highly qualified endorsement of wage-hour improvements.

The platform promises vigorous enforcement of the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin Acts and the "addition of new protections (for workers) where needed." In the light of Republican-sponsored bills now in the hopper—to destroy industry-wide bargaining, adopt national "right-to-work" legislation, substitute labor courts for the time-proven National Labor Relations Act and outlaw multi-union bargaining—this can only mean a promise of a wave of anti-union attacks.

The platform would deny to young workers in industrial training programs the protection of the minimum wage. It also attacks, in somewhat disguised language, recent decisions of the National Labor Relations Board.

The platform attacks "crippling economic strikes" and "government intervention" that results in a settlement that raises wages. It promises to stop such "intervention," without saying how.

The platform has nothing at all to say about unemployment compensation, workmen's compensation, occupational safety, situs picketing, or the extension of the National Labor Relations Act to farm workers and others now denied its protection.

The Democratic platform promises to review and update the National Labor Relations Act to reinforce the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively. It endorses repeal of Section 14(b) and the legalization of situs picketing; pledges to withhold government contracts from firms that violate the act; speed up board procedures in unfair labor practice cases, and enforce "free speech" for unions as well as employers.

The platform calls for the extension of NLRA protection to farm workers and others now excluded. It advocates the improvement and extension of wage-hour coverage, federal minimum standards for unemployment compensation and federal action to promote health and safety on the job.

AFL-CIO analysis: It is evident that the framers of the Republican platform do not accept the real nature of free collective bargaining. Although the platform gives lip service to organized labor's accomplishments, its whole thrust is an attack on union strength. Its silence on specific points, such as the protection of farm workers, is shocking.

The Democratic platform offers a clear and straightforward program for correcting the major shortcomings of the National Labor Relations Act and the other protective legislation so vital to wage-earners. It is a strong and clear document of support for collective bargaining and free unions.

JOBS AND NATIONAL ECONOMY

The Republican platform places its whole reliance, both as to economic expansion and jobs, on private business, assisted by tax gimmicks. Its only other proposals are unification of overlapping federal manpower programs and the establishment of a national "job opportunity data bank" to assist in matching unemployed workers with unfilled jobs.

The Democratic platform, while asserting the primary importance of economic growth to the elimination of poverty, pledges to make the federal government the employer of last resort for those who cannot find other jobs. It calls for continuing the active role of the federal government, through fiscal policies, economic planning and other ways, in seeking "the twin objectives of full employment and price stability." It offers a specific program for expanding manpower training services.

AFL-CIO analysis: In essence the Democratic platform calls for an intensification and extension of government policies which are the basis for the vast economic growth of the last eight years and the affluence of the great majority of Americans. The Republican platform, without offering anything more specific than "fiscal integrity," would clearly reverse most or all of those policies, and in our view bring about a return to the periodic recessions of the past.

URBAN CRISIS

The Republican platform unreservedly acknowledges the existence of the urban crisis and the necessity for federal action to meet it. However, even in this section the platform repeatedly backs away from full federal responsibility by stressing the encouragement of self-help by communities and the investment of "sweat equity" by homeowners. While referring to the need for "new cities," the platform says nothing about public housing, nor does it deal specifically with the extent of the housing shortage. It proposes "economic incentives" to attract private capital into the low-cost housing market.

Open housing is not mentioned at all.

The Democratic platform also gives due importance to the involvement of private capital in urban rehabilitation but stresses the primary role of the federal government. It proposes a new federal banking structure to assist urban development projects of all kinds. It sets a target of 2.6 million new housing units a year. While promising "such incentives as may be essential" to enlist private enterprise in the attack on slums, it recognizes that some of the most urgent urban needs can be met only by federal action.

Open housing is warmly endorsed without reservations or exceptions.

AFL-CIO analysis: Although the Republican platform's position on urban problems represents a considerable advance in the party's thinking, it does not assert unequivocally the need for the federal government to act as well as to provide "leadership." In fact, instead of facing up to the need for making the American system work better for the poor, the Republicans—through the use of tax credits and tax gimmicks—would make the system work better for the affluent. The Democratic platform gives full recognition to the complexity of the urban crisis and the absolute need for a national approach to them. The Republican silence on open housing is further evidence of its compromise with racism.

LAW, ORDER AND JUSTICE

The Republican platform acknowledges that "frustrations" stemming from "economic and social injustice" are a contributing cause of urban riots, and promises to "alleviate and remove" them. But except for urging better coordination among law-enforcement agencies, the platform offers no program for preventing or coping with future outbreaks except "decisive action to quell civil disorder." By inference, at least, it relies upon the application of existing police power with a heavier hand.

The Democratic platform undertakes to answer in specific terms a question raised by the report of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders: "How can we as a people end the resort to violence while we build a better society?" Its answer includes better-trained and better-paid police; the development of open communications and close cooperation between the police and "every element of the public"; full exchange of information among communities on the handling of problems, as well as coordination of law-enforcement agencies.

These significant paragraphs follow:

"A respect for civil peace requires also a proper respect for the legitimate means of expressing dissent. A democratic society welcomes criticism within the limits of the law. Freedom of speech, press, assembly and association, together with free exercise of the franchise, are among the legitimate means to achieve change in a democratic society. But when the dissenter resorts to violence he erodes the institutions and values which are the underpinnings of our democratic society. We must not and will not tolerate violence.

"As Pres. Johnson has stated, 'Our test is to rise above the debate between the rights of the individual and the rights of society by securing the rights of both.' "

AFL-CIO analysis: The Democratic platform much more closely reflects the position set forth by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in his appearances before the two platform committees. The relevant passage in his presentation is printed in the detailed platform comparison which accompanies this statement. Here is an excerpt from it:

"No believer in democracy can condone crimes of violence, no matter what the provocation. Riots, assault, arson, looting and murder are not avenues of protest; they are attacks on society. Those who call for more adequate police protection against these crimes—and those who call most urgently are the ghetto residents themselves—are fully justified.

"But 'law and order' alone, without regard for justice, can be corrupted into a pretext for tyranny. True law and order is not served by equipping police with tanks and machine guns as though the ghetto were the enemy and not the handful of criminals inside it. Yes, better police work is needed; but the way to get it is through better-trained and better-paid policemen, operating in a context of justice, not through the indiscriminate use of force against innocent and guilty alike. Nor is true law and order served by ill advised legislative attempts to dilute the constitutional rights of all Americans in the name of police power.

"By all means let there be law and order. Let there be law and order in the cities, but not by the creation of a garrison state. Let there be law and order in the enforcement of civil rights statutes and the application of other social welfare legislation. Let those who cry for more police in the slums cry also for more jobs, more housing and more schools for the prisoners of the slums. Those, too, are tools of law and order.

"Merely seeking to repress disturbances without effective action to correct their causes will only intensify the basic conflict."

This is the spirit in which we hope the next Administration will approach the problem of law, order and justice. The Democratic platform offers sound hope and the Republican platform little hope that this spirit will prevail.

CIVIL RIGHTS

The Republican platform avows its concern for those disadvantaged by their minority status, recognizes that non-whites in particular suffer from a higher incidence of poverty and pledges to "attack the root causes of poverty and eradicate racism, hatred and violence." It does not say how.

Although the platform mentions Negroes and Mexican-Americans in a passing way, most of its few words on civil rights are devoted to American Indians and Eskimos.

Neither the reports of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders nor of the Commission on Rural Poverty are mentioned at all; nor, as noted above, is there any reference to open housing.

The Democratic platform gives a ringing endorsement to the findings of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders and commits the party to "wipe out, once and for all, the stain of racial and other discrimination from our national life." It also accepts the report of the Commission on Rural Poverty.

The platform calls for a positive program to help and encourage victims of past discrimination. It pledges to enforce existing civil rights statutes and propose new ones if necessary. It gives "first priority" to stronger enforcement provisions against job discrimination. It recognizes the basic need for every American to share fully in the benefits of economic progress.

AFL-CIO analysis: What little the Republican platform says about civil rights is worthy enough, but is just about the least that a major national party could say without embarrassment. In vivid contrast the Democratic party wholeheartedly espouses a specific, detailed attack on discrimination and deprivation of every kind.

EDUCATION

The Republican platform accurately delineates the nation's fundamental educational goals. It endorses more and better Head Start programs (though not by that name), post-high school vocational education and the principle that lack of means should not be a barrier to higher education. It proposes to establish a commission to study the quality and relevance of American education.

The platform is less frank when it comes to funds. It favors loans and grants to colleges and universities to help them expand. It advocates a "flexible program" of student aid, combining federal, state and private efforts. But it seems to place most reliance on more tax gimmicks—credit for parents of college-age children, plus tax deduction "to encourage savings" for college costs.

The Democratic platform has fewer generalities and many more specifics—Head Start, the Teacher Corps, better teacher recruitment, university involvement in public education, improved vocational schools, broader adult education and more generous state and federal school aid to ease the burden on property taxes. It calls for more money to do this, with extra emphasis on Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, which provides special federal aid for schools serving large numbers of children from low-income families.

The platform flatly asserts the right of every citizen to as much education and training as he wants and can master.

AFL-CIO analysis: On this as on many other issues the difference between the platforms is less one of ends than of means. Both parties envision a nation with unlimited educational opportunities for all. Both recognize the special needs of pre-school children from deprived families, and many other needs as well. But the Democrats are prepared to invest in all of this, from the bottom to the top of the educational ladder. The Republicans, as the level of schooling increases, rely mainly on tax gimmicks that would be helpful to the affluent but of no use at all to the really poor whose needs are greatest.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND WELFARE

The Republican platform proposes to increase social security benefits through an automatic cost-of-living escalator, and raise the ceiling on earnings permitted without loss of benefits. It says welfare and poverty programs should be "drastically revised" to liberate the poor from "debilitating dependence" and to promote family unity and work motivation. It cites lack of "creative and responsible participation from among the poor" as the greatest among a "host of failures of the War on Poverty." It suggests that more poor people in depressed areas should start businesses of their own. The platform does not even acknowledge the existence of medicare.

The Democratic platform favors cost-of-living adjustments for both social security and welfare payments, but only after both have been raised to adequate current levels. It correctly hails medicare as one of the nation's greatest social welfare advances and pledges extension of its coverage to the disabled, to expectant mothers and to infants. It places more stress on doing away with poverty than with assuaging its pains, reasserting a commitment to that end and promising to re-examine existing anti-poverty programs. It also calls for greater participation by the poor themselves, and improvements in welfare systems.

AFL-CIO analysis: The idea of applying a cost-of-living escalator to social security benefits is a beguiling one and has long been advanced by Republicans in Congress. What's wrong with it, as the Democratic platforms observes, is that benefit levels are not and have never been adequate. Adoption of an escalator would keep them from getting worse but would effectively prevent them from ever getting any better. This is not nearly good enough for us, for the beneficiaries or for the nation.

Agreement by both platforms that the public welfare system needs to be more humane is a year late for members of Congress from both parties voted to make it measurably less humane only a year ago—a decision that is scheduled to go into effect next year. This decision must be wiped out and congressional members of both parties should abide by that platform promise.

By ignoring the very existence of medicare. the Republican platform takes an even less progressive position than the American Medical Association.

TAX REFORM

The Republican platform reflects the party's traditional faith in big business as the primary source of progress in America. One of the most glaring of all tax loopholes, the depletion allowance for producers of oil and other natural products, "must be continued." Block handouts to the various states should replace specific federally-financed programs. Tax exemption for state and local bonds should be continued. Tax gimmicks cited earlier should be substituted wherever possible for direct federal outlays for everything from housing to education.

The Democratic platform promises to revise federal taxes "to make them more equitable as between rich and poor." It says all "tax preferences" that do not serve the national interest should be eliminated.

The platform endorses a minimum income tax for persons of high income "no matter how many tax shelters they use." It also calls for a corresponding reduction in taxes on very low incomes. asserting that no one below the poverty level should be required to pay income taxes. A tax structure firmly based on ability to pay is reaffirmed as the goal of tax policy.

AFL-CIO analysis: On no other issue is the philosophical difference between the parties so sharply defined. The Republicans favors a tax system that deliberately gives special benefits to big corporations and to wealthy individuals whose income is derived from sources other than wages or salaries. The Democrats call for a tax system based on ability to pay. It is obvious that no matter how much concern the Republican platform may express about the plight of the deprived minority, the effect of the party's tax program would be to further enrich the affluent at the expense of wage and salary earners, and widen the already intolerable gulf between the haves and the have-nots.

CONSUMER PROTECTION

The Republican platform contains a single paragraph on consumer affairs, tucked away in its section on the poor. It pledges to "strive for fairness for all consumers," to promote consumer education and vigorously enforce the "numerous" protective laws now on the books. It also promises active support for "the many consumer-protection initiatives and organizations of private enterprise."

The Democratic platform praises by name the consumer protection laws adopted in the last few years and promises further legislation to improve the safety of drugs and to penalize deceptive sales practices. It proposes to consolidate the various consumer functions of government in an Office of Consumer Affairs, which will also represent consumer interests within governments and before the courts and regulatory agencies. It calls for intensified consumer education programs, both federal and state.

AFL-CIO analysis: The Republican platform obviously approached the consumer issue without enthusiasm, and its reliance on private enterprise for further safeguards is appointing the wolf to guard the sheep. While the Democratic program is less comprehensive than we proposed, it does recognize in a positive way that more legislation is essential and specifically pledges itself to do this job.

VIET NAM AND FOREIGN POLICY

The Republican platform charges that American policy in Viet Nam "has failed—militarily, politically, diplomatically." It at no point recognizes that the war is being waged to defend the freedom of South Viet Nam—a cause first undertaken, and rightly so, by Pres. Eisenhower, and since carried on by his successors.

The platform assails increased American involvement in the fighting without reference to actions by the other side which brought this about. It pledges a "program for peace" without offering one. It talks of "purposeful" negotiations without mentioning the need for some like purpose in Hanoi.

On other foreign policy matters the platforms finds much to criticize but has little but generalities to offer as remedies. It brushes off in half a sentence a proposal to "revitalize" NATO.

The GOP platform does, like its Democratic counterpart, pledge military aid to insure the defensive abilities of Israel.

The Democratic platform accurately states the aims of the war in Viet Nam and suggests a series of specific steps that should be taken if there is an appropriate response from Hanoi. These steps include the cessation of all bombing in the North, when such action will not endanger American servicemen; mutual withdrawal of all foreign forces, and the selection of a postwar government in South Viet Nam by free elections under international supervision. The platform also sets forth a postwar program for the economic, political and social development of South Viet Nam, and the economic develpoment of the region as a whole.

In other passages the platform reaffirms support of the United Nations and the Alliance for Progress, praises the accomplishments of foreign aid and calls for greater participation in aid programs by nations which once were recipients. The achievements of NATO are praised, and its validity upheld despite occasional "political differences" with some allies.

AFL-CIO analysis: It is not unusual for the party which is out of power to base most of its case on criticizing the present and promising that "new leadership" will make the future better. The Republican platform carries this process to an extreme in its Viet Nam and foreign policy passages. The Democratic platform, although the subject of widely-publicized debate in committee and on the floor, does not follow the easy course of saying nothing in order to offend no one. It offers what seems to us to be as realistic a program as could be evolved in a period of worldwide uncertainty and rapid change.

The Candidates for President

The Republican candidate, Richard M. Nixon, has been a public figure for two decades and has thus compiled a long record on foreign and domestic issues.

As this General Board noted when Mr. Nixon last sought the presidency eight years ago, there is nothing in his record as a member of Congress or as Vice President to suggest that he understands the constitutional obligation to "promote the general welfare" means the advancement of the social and economic well-being of the American people as a whole.

The unprecedented domestic progress of the last eight years has come about as a result of policies and programs which Mr. Nixon actively opposed when in office. Obviously the future of these programs cannot now be entrusted to a man who fought or feared them. The fate of medicare, to cite only one example, would be placed in the hands of a man who in 1960 described it as "too extreme."

The nation is now being assured that there is a "new Nixon." It is possible, of course, for the passage of eight years to bring a greater measure of maturity. But the question can fairly be raised whether the years have made him wiser or merely more expedient.

Expediency was certainly the outstanding feature of his campaign for the Republican nomination, including as it did an open and unabashed alliance with the most flagrant racists in his party's southern wing, culminating in Strom Thurmond's control of Nixon policies at the Republican convention.

The same doubts arise with respect to foreign affairs. It is true that Mr. Nixon has until now made no statement on the war in Viet Nam. But on other matters, he has shown the same tendency to haste and rashness which characterized his "anti-communist" forays of earlier years.

The American presidency is the most important and most powerful office in the world. America cannot risk electing a man who so sorely fails to measure up to its responsibilities.

The Democratic candidate, Hubert H. Humphrey, has also been in public life for more than 20 years, and he, too, has built a long record as a senator and as Vice President.

Rarely before have rival candidates for the presidency had such nearly parallel and completely different careers. Often they dealt with the same issues at the same time. The comparison is direct and the contrast is total and in every respect Mr. Humphrey is the superior man.

From his first elective office as mayor of Minneapolis to the present day, Mr. Humphrey has been an ardent and effective champion of human progress. He originated many and fought for all the social and economic measures Mr. Nixon opposed. When the Kennedy-Johnson Administration took office in 1961, Mr. Humphrey, as Senate majority whip, played a major part in the enactment of these measures. Since 1965 he has been the Vice President, carrying out with distinction the heaviest responsibilities ever assigned to that office.

Neither this nor any other summary can do justice to Mr. Humphrey's contributions to American life. It was he who in 1948 led the uphill fight which at long last put the Democratic party unequivocally behind the full achievement of civil rights. He spoke out against witch-hunting when others cowered before Joe McCarthy's terror tactics. He eloquently defended the integrity of the labor movement against a tide of Congressional and editorial hostility.

Throughout his public career, he and we have fought side-by-side in every legislative struggle to improve the conditions of livelihood for America's people and in opposition to those who would make personal progress at the expense of their fellow citizens. Never have we found Hubert Humphrey faint-hearted or afraid. Never has he retreated from the battle.

In all of these struggles, Hubert Humphrey gave no thought to what was popular, what was expedient, what would redound to his benefit. He applied only one test—what was right.

There is not the slightest doubt that as President, Mr. Humphrey would dedicate his boundless energy, his wide-ranging imagination and his outstanding administrative talents to the pursuit of his vision of the future—a nation from which poverty, fear, ignorance and hatred have been banished, a nation with equal and unlimited opportunity for all, in a world of free men and free nations.

Although Mr. Humphrey has been most closely identified with domestic matters, he has a broad background in foreign affairs, including service on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee as well. Mr. Humphrey's consistent goal as senator and Vice President has been to strengthen the cause of peace by every practical means, not by bluster or brinkmanship but by calm, firm and patient negotiations, and by helping underdeveloped nations to find freedom and economic security.

Seldom has so qualified a candidate for President been placed before the American voters. Never has a presidential candidate been so totally committed in word and deed to the fulfillment of the American dream. Never has there been a presidential candidate more clearly identified with the aspirations of America's workers.

The Candidates for Vice President

The Republican candidate, Spiro T. Agnew of Maryland, has been modestly successful during his nearly two years as governor of a normally Democratic state—the only public office he has held above the municipal level. Elected as the candidate opposed to racism, his subsequent record made him so acceptable to even the Strom Thurmond reactionaries in the Republican party that he was named to the second spot on the ticket. As a campaigner, he immediately chose the "low road."

Nothing in his gubernatorial career indicates that he has the slightest qualification for the presidency—the only realistic yardstick by which to judge a man who would be President if tragedy struck.

The Democratic candidate, Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, was elected to the Senate in 1958 after four outstandingly successful years as governor of a previously Republican state, preceded by three terms in its legislature. In the Senate his quiet competence and hard work have won him the respect of his colleagues regardless of party. He organized and led a number of the successful campaigns for key social legislation.

Mr. Muskie's long experience and demonstrated skills in both the executive and legislative branches of government offer complete assurance that if tragedy should befall the President, the office would fall to a man fully prepared to fill it with distinction.

Unions Push Voter Drive In Connecticut

Hartford, Conn. — A vigorous register-and-vote campaign is labor's best weapon against the threat of anti-labor legislation posed by right wing political forces, Connecticut AFL-CIO Pres. John J. Driscoll warned at the annual state labor convention here.

"A year ago," Driscoll told 600 delegates from more than 250 unions at a three-day gathering, "we could look back on legislative and economic achievements secured by the close teamwork of labor and liberal forces. Now we must look ahead with apprehension to the threat of national anti-labor legislation which a potential victory of right wing political forces makes very real."

Union members must remember, Driscoll said, that victory in the legislative field is won only by "solid organizational work on registering our members, informing them of the issues and the candidates, and then turning out at the polls."

The convention heard talks by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D), Gov. John N. Dempsey (D), Interior Sec. Stewart L. Udall and other guests. The delegates voted to support the California grape boycott and the strike of 10 unions against Hearst's Los Angeles Herald-Examiner. They also heard State Labor Commissioner Renato E. Ricciuti call for a $2 federal and state minimum hourly wage.

The convention adopted a state legislative program calling for a strengthened auto liability insurance law, an employer-paid tax on payrolls instead of city income taxes or an increased state sales tax, and a fourth major airport for the New York area on land to be dredged out of Long Island Sound.

The delegates voted to support Ribicoff and Representatives Emilio Daddario, William L. St. Onge, Donald J. Irwin and John S. Monagan for re-election. They endorsed Robert M. Sharaf in the New Britain area now represented by Thomas J. Meskill (R), and, for the first time in 10 years, voted no endorsement in a district where Rep. Robert N. Giaimo (D) has two opponents.

Bricklayers Approve 25c Per Capita Hike

Las Vegas, Nev.—The Bricklayers concluded their 70th convention after voting a 25-cent per member per month increase in per capita dues to finance a union research program and setting a winter work incentive program as a major union goal.

The convention installed all incumbent officers for new four-year terms. The five-day meeting was keyed to helping the 103-year-old union meet the challenge of new building methods and materials while preserving job opportunities for its members.

Delegates from 350 U.S. and Canadian local unions rejected a proposal for a 50-cent per capita increase but approved a substitute motion for a 25-cent increase to finance the hiring of a research director and staff.

The new department will, by convention direction, research new building products and techniques and decisions of the National Joint Board for the Settlement of Jurisdictional Disputes, the National Labor Relations Board and similar bodies.

It will send reports on these subjects to union representatives, assist them in assembling data required in jurisdictional proceedings, and prepare and present briefs in dispute cases.

Sponsors of a convention report cited a research study showing that prefabricated building materials may within 10 years supplant present methods of fabricating materials on the job site, and reduce the use of brick and tile. A professional research department and a vigorous campaign to recruit and train new members are needed to help preserve jobs in the trowel trades, the convention was told.

The delegates agreed to promote a program that would provide more construction jobs in the winter months by the use of plastic enclosure materials and space heaters, as in Canada, where the federal government pays subsidies to builders and homeowners to encourage year-around building.

Such a program, union Pres. Thomas F. Murphy reported, could add 10 hours to the average workweek and provide the equivalent of 35,000 more trained craftsmen.

The convention authorized the union executive board to devise a membership pension plan, establish an information center on building technology and new materials, provide space in 1971 membership dues books for the member's photo and social security number, and publish the voting records of all senators and congressmen.

The constitution was amended to provide that beneficiaries of war veterans killed in U.S. service shall receive a maximum death benefit to permit unions in adjoining areas to set up executive committees for joint action on organizing and other programs, and to allow contractors to retain union membership but not to vote on contract matters.

Besides Murphy, top officers are Treas. John T. Joyce, Sec. William R. Conners and 1st Vice Pres. George W. King.

John Moran Dies, Ex-CWA Leader

Boca Raton, Fla. — John J. Moran, retired vice president of the Communications Workers, died of cancer at Boca Raton Community Hospital. He was 74.

He had been a vice president of the CWA from 1949 until his retirement in 1956. Moran also was a vice president of the National Federation of Telephone Workers, the union that preceded the CWA.

Militant Membership:

Pressmen Consider New Unity Proposals

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Mergers and a more militant membership were the prime considerations of officers and delegates to the 39th convention of the Printing Pressmen here.

The union's board of directors recommended that the delegates "wholeheartedly endorse" the merger of the 13,000 member Stereotypers & Electrotypers with the 125,000-member Pressmen.

Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade warned, however, that achieving merger is a difficult process.

Outlining recent efforts he said that "it is about as easy to effect a merger between international labor unions as it is to print a four-color process job with only one plate and no rollers."

Stereotypers Pres. James H. Sampson was invited to attend the convention, but he was wrapping up his own union's convention at Palo Alto, Calif. At that meeting, the Stereotypers endorsed the proposal that would merge it with the Pressmen.

If consumated, the new organization will be called the Graphic Arts & Allied Trades Intl. Union.

On another subject, both the directors and DeAndrade noted a more militant attitude on the part of rank-and-file membership and their "over-riding concern for more in the pay check . . . and lessening interest in pensions." Membership has frequently sent negotiating committees back to the bargaining table after rejection of "not-good-enough" employer offers.

"The militant mood," the directors reported, "has pushed many locals to the brink of strike situations and a few locals found it necessary to use their strike weapon."

It has also caused many locals to abandon "long standing arrangements which call for arbitration of new contract terms if an impasse is reached in bargaining," they said.

DeAndrade cited a number of notable recent achievements by the Pressmen, among them the organizing of the Curtis Publishing Co. in Philadelphia, "a historic anti-union citadel," plus the press room employes of the Los Angeles Times, "a non-union, anti-union newspaper for almost a century." Press room employes of that newspaper are now covered by a collective bargaining contract negotiated by the international union.

Next is an endeavor to organize R. R. Donnelley & Sons Co.—with active AFL-CIO help, DeAndrade said. He added: "We believe it absolutely essential to achieve some type of responsible multi-plant bargaining with the chain newspapers such as Hearst, Scripps, Gannett and others.

Reviewing some of the merger activities of the international, DeAndrade said that, at least, they "resulted in a tremendous reduction in raids upon us and the virtual elimination of serious disputes relating to jurisdiction."

A seven-point agreement with the Typographical union covers jurisdiction and the ITU talks will "resume soon," DeAndrade said.

Rail Operating Unions Seen Close to Merger

Hollywood, Fla.—Creation of a single union representing all the operating crafts in the railroad industry in North America was predicted here by Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, one of the four unions participating in the unification plan.

Gilbert's remarks were made at the convention of the Railroad Trainmen, another of the unions involved in the move, where he said, "Unity is now close to reality—closer than at any other time in our history."

Gilbert told the 1,100 BRT delegates and officers that the only alternative to unification is a continuing erosion of strength at the bargaining table, while the other side, the railroads, gather more strength through bigger and bigger corporate mergers.

The theme throughout Gilbert's address was the need for "strength through unified action." He stressed the advantages which would come to rail labor with the formation of the United Transportation Union, an organization made up of the Railway Conductors & Brakemen, Trainmen, the Switchmen, and the BLF&E.

Gilbert said that while the combination of factors has brought about the need for unification of the unions, the increasing cost of operating small independent unions on one hand and the advantage of a large, strong union on the other were the overriding arguments in favor of unity.

He pounded away at the "strength" advantage when he said of the deliberations which led to the decision to merge the unions, "we found basically that the oldest trade union adage of them all was for us the most appropriate of all. In unity there is strength."

Gilbert then reasoned, "Today we might add to that adage . . . and in a union of unions, there is unlimited strength."

The BLF&E leader recalled that the railroads had unified their efforts in labor relations nearly 10 years ago, and since then "they have put up a united and highly successful front at the bargaining table."

Arguing for the cause of unity within labor ranks, Gilbert warned, "We can expect an even more difficult time at the bargaining table in the future and it is up to us to be prepared."

Noting what could be expected from the railroad management, Gilbert predicted confidently "We can expect more from ourselves in the future and they [railroads] can expect more from us also."

"They can expect us to work together smoothly. . . .

"They can expect us to prosper and flourish, even as they do, by our participation in a larger organization, serving a stronger membership at a smaller operating cost.

"They can expect us to act, and act quickly at any and all times to protect the welfare of our members. . . . In short they can expect to meet their equal again."

Throughout his speech, Gilbert stressed the point that little separates the thinking and activities of each of the crafts involved.

"We work together daily. We talk the same language. We cooperate in the yard or on the road so that we can return safely to our homes when our tasks are done," he said, concluding with "I am sure our endeavor will not fail."

Stereotypers' Merger With Pressmen Backed

Palo Alto, Calif.—The Stereotypers & Electrotypers Union at its convention here, approved a proposal for merger with the Printing Pressmen.

The vote came at the final session of the convention after two days of debate by the 110 delegates.

The merger plan must also be approved by the Pressmen, currently in convention at Bal Harbour, Fla.

If approval is granted, the plan calls for a joint constitutional convention of the two unions to set up the formal merger. Finally, both memberships will have to approve the new constitution.

The merger, if fully approved. would be another step in the movement toward merger of all major graphic arts unions. Merger proposals are being studied by all of the unions, and by the Newspaper Guild.

Earlier the Stereotypers received merger proposals also from the Lithographers & Photoengravers and from the Typographical Union. However, they voted first on the Pressmen's proposal and the other merger ideas died with that vote.

Vice President Ray Boland of the Pressmen had urged the merger, noting that the Stereotypers, who make the plates for the printing presses, had the "greatest affinity" with his union.

He also cited the Hearst attack on printing trades unions in the Los Angeles Hearld-Examiner strike and said the printing trades can only beat back such attacks through cooperation and merger.

The stereotypers have been gradually shrinking as a craft in the face of technological advances, such as offset printing, which does not use metal plates. The union's St. Louis local warned of present experiments of major newspaper publishers in using the offset process.

The Stereotypers, under the leadership of Pres. James H. Sampson, made several relatively minor changes in their constitution and bylaws. No elections were held at the meeting.

Walter Baker, president of the host San Jose local, welcomed the delegation as did Joseph B. Ridder, publisher of the San Jose Mercury News.

Bargaining Gains Seen:

IUE to Seek Strong Link Between Union, Community

New York—New steps forward in service and in the union's community and shop stewardship were spelled out by Pres. Paul Jennings in his keynote address to the 13th convention of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Jennings also served notice that the IUE will go forward with other AFL-CIO unions in coordinated bargaining so that the workers in the shop will gain their "fair share" in new-contract talks at General Electric and Westinghouse in 1969, and with other employers.

He said IUE intends to bring meaningful educational opportunity into collective bargaining agreements as a negotiated employer-financed benefit similar to pensions and welfare.

He announced also that the union will establish an office of consumer affairs within its Dept. of Social Action.

Delegates applauded addresses by Democratic vice presidential candidate Edmund S. Muskie, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, New York City Mayor John V. Lindsay, Pres. Shinryo Kiyota of Denki Roren, the Japanese electrical workers union, and other guest speakers, as the convention began its work.

Muskie challenged Republican presidential candidate Richard Nixon to spell out his position, to propose solutions in detail to America's domestic and international problems, and to submit himself to TV interview programs such as "Meet the Press".

In the eight years of GOP administration of which Nixon was part, Muskie recalled, there were 169 vetoes. Many of these were of bills on "the very programs that are now being urged by some, who were members of that administration, to deal with these problems, these human problems of our country—vetoes of housing bills, area redevelopment bills, failures to develop effective programs of federal aid to education, of medical care for the aged. All of these human programs came to a screeching halt in '52 to '60 . . . (and) the unrest, the dissatisfaction with our system of government as a way for grass roots people to get ahead, festered. . . ."

Wirtz stepped out of his official role to personally endorse the Humphrey-Muskie candidacy.

Charging that "anybody who calls Adlai Stevenson and Hubert Humphrey soft on communism speaks with a split tongue," Wirtz—who had been Stevenson's law partner—retraced Nixon's wobbly past record on various issues including nuclear bombs and civil rights.

Wirtz said in years to come after the Viet Nam war ends, America will have a peace dividend and a growth dividend of $110-to-$130 billion "to do the domestic things we ought to do."

And, he said, "we've got the know-how right now to provide jobs for every American in this country and make good on our promises for educating our children."

Lindsay praised IUE for its contributions to the betterment of life in New York City, citing as one example the sponsorship by Local 485 of a housing project at whose groundbreaking ceremony he participated recently.

Czech Invasion

Kiyota reported that Denki Roren protested the Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia the day after it occurred, and that the Russian action was so unpopular in Japan that even the Japanese Communist Party "has been forced to take a critical attitude for the first time."

The Japanese union leader reported on wage and hours gains by the Japan council of the Int. Metalworkers Federation, representing a million Japanese workers including the 400,000 Denki Roren electrical workers.

Jennings, in his keynote address, called for an international fair labor standards act, like the wage-hour law in the United States, so that goods imported into the country would bear labels attesting that they were made under fair conditions.

He also traced the growth of IUE's cooperation with electrical unions abroad to help these unions raise working conditions and eliminate low wages as a competitive factor. But, he said, corporations—many of them U.S.-based—have gone from one developing nation to another seeking low-wage labor and have shifted work from one location to another to maximize profits. IUE has helped these other unions and, in turn, has been helped by them when they pledged to refuse to handle work GE threatened to shift abroad during labor disputes.

TOTING A TRAY of cocktails and sporting a 31-inch stride, Karl Hertenberger crosses the finish line at Toronto City Hall Plaza in the Restaurant Employes fifth annual Intl. Waiters Race 15 seconds ahead of his closest competitor. Hertenberger set a new world's record of 3 minutes and 10.5 seconds over a quarter-mile course to lead his hometowners to victory over teams from Detroit and Montreal. Next year's races will be in Detroit with 15 teams expected to participate from Canada and the United States.

Chemical Union Votes To Join Reuther's ALA

New Orleans—The Chemical Workers Union voted unanimously to join the Alliance for Labor Action after an address by Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

Before calling for the vote, ICW Pres. Walter L. Mitchell read to the delegates a Wall Street Journal article reporting the AFL-CIO Executive Council's action warning affiliates that joining or supporting the UAW-Teamster alliance could lead to suspension or expulsion.

The resolution read by officers reports committee Chairman Cyril Moran concluded: "We do not propose to disaffiliate from the AFL-CIO today. Our recommendation is simply to join the new ALA and by so doing get down to the business of organizing our jurisdiction and help make this a better nation and world for all to live in."

In an address to the delegates on the opening day of the convention, Mitchell asked them to "non-concur" with a proposed salary increase for the union officers, but to adopt a 50-cent per capita tax increase.

He also urged adoption of a proposal for mandatory local union strike funds instead of the present voluntary setup.

He asked also that the international officers be given a four-year term, and local union officers a three year term "to create new and greater stability."

Mitchell cited bills before Congress designed to cripple the poverty program, abolish the NLRB and put labor under anti-trust laws as reasons for all-out efforts to elect pro-labor congressmen this year.

He was applauded when he hailed Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey as "the only presidential candidate with a 100 percent vote for the working man."

Mitchell reported that the ICW last year lost almost 29,000 members, over 25 percent of its membership, to automation and company moves, but gained almost 38,000 members for a net increase of 8,168. The union now has more than 110,000 members, he said.

Other convention speakers included Pres. Victor Bussie of the Louisiana State AFL-CIO and Charles Levinson, general secretary of the Intl. Federation of Chemical & General Workers Unions.

Humphrey Record Cited In Standing Up for Labor

Chicago—AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler reminded delegates to the 29th convention of the Railway Supervisors here that labor owes a particular debt of gratitude to Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey.

He recalled how the Democratic presidential candidate, as a U.S. senator, rose on the Senate floor in July 1959 to deliver an historic speech he titled, "What's Right with American Labor."

Noting that the speech came during a period "when labor was being castigated," Schnitzler added, "We in the AFL-CIO had no advance knowledge of Humphrey's talk nor where he got his factual material and we were pleasantly surprised by the wealth of information on labor he imparted to the Senate."

In other areas of his address, Schnitzler discussed labor's most important goals—attainment of expanded housing and education programs, equality for all and the elimination of poverty.

He called upon leaders and members of the union to take an active role in AFL-CIO affairs because "leadership of those with management training and experience, such as you supervisors have, is much needed in the labor movement."

Supervisors' Pres. J. P. Tahney reported to the convention's 100 delegates that the union has registered "substantial gains" in representation and in improving wages and working conditions over the past two years.

However, Tahney emphasized that "railroad supervisors must secure further gains in wages and work rules if they are to come up to the standards of other industries."

Failure to achieve such advancements, he said, will lessen the incentive for rail workers to become supervisors.

"There is a reluctance on the part of employes to accept promotion to supervisory responsibility because such duties are not adequately compensated," he declared, and "this is detrimental to the best interests of all, including the railroad managements."

Convention speakers included J. J. Duffy, director of labor relations for the New Haven Railroad; Gen. Solicitor James W. Nisbet of the Association of Western Railroads; William J. Thyer, compliance officer, Dept. of Labor; Joseph V. Martin of the Railroad Retirement Board, and Editor and Manager Ruben Levin of Labor newspaper.

Among resolutions adopted was one in which the union reaffirmed its long-standing policy of honoring all bona fide picket lines established to advance legitimate union goals.

Employers Found Shortchanging Workers of $80 Million in Pay

ceeded only in one year of the last 13—1966, when heavy overtime wage law violations were uncovered in the oil industry.

The $80 million represented the amount of wages illegally withheld from the pay of 421,916 workers, divided as follows: 169,344 who were paid less that the minimum wages set by the Fair Labor Standards Act—the major wage-hour law; 296,037 who got less overtime pay than they were entitled to; 11,987 who were not paid the prevailing wages set by the McNamara-O'Hara Service Contracts Act, and 6,622 entitled to more money under a 1963 law barring wage discrimination because of sex.

Some workers were affected by more than one violation. That brought the total of violations above the number of individual workers, the department explained.

The total of $80 million in underpayments was made up as follows: minimum wages underpaid, $20.4 million; overtime $54.5 million; service contracts $2.5 million, equal pay $2.48 million.

The investigators, on their visits to business places, also uncovered the illegal employment of 12,562 minors, they reported.

Last year, as in preceding years, the government's enforcement efforts succeeded in getting employers to pay less than a third of the amount illegally withheld from employes. As a result, some $53 million in illegal underpayments remains uncollected for fiscal 1968 alone.

In these cases, the aggrieved workers must sue the employer for reimbursement, or ask the Secretary of Labor to do so on their behalf. In many cases a collection suit is never brought, particularly where workers have no union representation.

Previous Labor Dept. reports showed a steady rise in underpayments found and amounts recovered from fiscal 1956 through fiscal 1966.

The rise for 1966 to $89.9 million in underpayments dipped to $76 million for 1967 but then resumed its upward climb in the last fiscal year to $80 million.

The 1968 figures disclosed a sharp upward climb in underpayments under the two-year-old Service Contracts Act—from $262,000 in fiscal 1967 to $2.6 million last year.

The report for the last fiscal year was the first full-year compilation since the department's Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Division instituted a "quickie" investigation procedure to measure compliance with the 1966 FLSA amendments. The first stage of the amendments took effect Feb. 1, 1967. The second and following stages will be reported on later.

The AFL-CIO Dept. of Research said the reports show a continuing need for a sustained inspection program. Violations are undoubtedly more widespread than the figures indicate, it said, because investigators can visit fewer than 5 percent of the total establishments in any one year.

$1.60 Basic Minimum

The wage-hour law requires payment of not less than $1.60 an hour to covered employes of firms in interstate commerce.

The Equal Pay Act of 1963 prohibits wage discrimination based on sex for employes subject to the minimum wage law.

The Service Contracts Act requires that workers for private employers doing government contract work must be paid the prevailing wage and fringe benefits for their area, as determined by the Secretary of Labor after hearings.

Paul Givens, 76, Dies; Headed Stone Cutters

Indianapolis — Funeral services were held here for Paul A. Givens, president of the Journeymen Stone Cutters for 20 years until his retirement in 1957. He died at 76, six months after his union merged with the Laborers.

Givens joined the union in 1909. He also was active in the Indianapolis central body of the former AFL and the Building Trades Council for many years.

Registration Killed:

Senate Bill Restricts Sale of Guns, Ammo

The Senate voted to bar interstate mail order sales of all types of firearms and ammunition, but turned down proposals for registering guns and licensing gun owners.

Its bill, passed 70-17, also bars over-the-counter sales of firearms to persons from other states, except that residents of an adjoining state may purchase weapons if permitted by the laws of both states.

Sales of rifles and shotguns to persons under 18 would be barred; earlier legislation prohibits handgun sales to persons under 21.

In some respects, principally the complete ban on ammunition sales by mail, the Senate bill is stronger than the House-passed measure. A conference committee will try to reconcile the differences to clear the way for final passage.

The AFL-CIO strongly supported the strengthening amendments adopted by the Senate. "The tragic assassinations of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King and the toll of wounding and death by gunfire . . . have dramatized the need for such a law," AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wrote senators.

Amendment Defeated

The principal registration and licensing amendment, offered by Sen. Joseph D. Tydings (D-Md.), was defeated, 55-31.

As it was, the Senate action on mail order sale of long guns reversed a 53-29 defeat of a similar measure proposed by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) last May—a month before the second of his brothers was assassinated.

In other congressional developments:

A labor-backed construction safety bill won majority support in a House vote, but failed of the two-thirds margin needed to pass it under a suspension of the rules procedure.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.), would set safety standards for federally-assisted construction projects comparable to those provided under the Walsh-Healey Act for firms selling products to the government and the Service Contracts Act for firms providing services.

"The construction industry is the only major industry which has no federal standards for safety on government contracts," House members were reminded in telegrams from the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Yet the industry's accidental death and injury rate is second only to mining, BCTD Pres. C. J. Haggerty and Legislative Dir. Walter J. Mason told the House.

Voting for suspension of the rules and passage of the bill were 134 Democrats and 62 Republicans; opposed were 86 Republicans and 50 Democrats, all but six from the South.

The AFL-CIO strongly urged the Senate to take up a House-passed bill extending the Manpower Development & Training Act—and asked senators to support a bipartisan amendment to provide public service jobs for the hard-core unemployed.

The threatened filibuster against the confirmation of Abe Fortas as Chief Justice put a squeeze on the time available for the Senate's other business.

Amendment Backed

Biemiller expressed hope that the MDTA bill will be brought up quickly and said labor "vigorously supports" the amendment sponsored by Senators Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), and Winston L. Prouty (R-Vt.).

He said the amendment would "provide badly needed public service jobs in both public and the private sector" and "meet the urgent needs called for by the Automation Commission, the Kerner Commission, and the Crime Commission."

Looking ahead to 1971, Congress cleared for the President's signature a bill calling for a White House Conference on the Problems of the Aged that year. The first such conference was held in 1961 and many of its recommendations for legislation to aid the nation's elderly have been adopted.

U.S. Study Finds Elderly Gouged By High Profits of Drug Industry

A government study group has charged that the drug industry is reaping "exceptionally" high profits and the elderly are bearing the brunt of high drug prices.

A 110-page report of a Task Force on Prescription Drugs has leveled criticism at almost all other facets of the system under which drugs are developed, marketed and prescribed.

The task force, which has been studying the drug industry since May 1967, accompanied its report with more than 20 recommendations for improving such matters as drug control, classification, prescription and pharmacists' education.

In a letter of transmittal to Sec. of Health, Education and & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen, the task force's head, Dr. Philip R. Lee, an HEW assistant secretary, said the group will have additional recommendations in the future.

On the subject of profits, the report cited one study which found that the drug industry never ranked lower than third among 41 industries in annual after-tax income as a basis of net worth between 1956 and 1966.

Another study found that among 31 major industries, the drug industry averaged 18.1 percent return on capital investment, compared with a 9.7 percent average return for the entire group.

Dismissing manufacturers' claims of "financial risks" in developing drugs, the report said, "the exceptionally high profit is not accompanied by any peculiar degree of risk."

In fact, it noted, when a drug maker undergoes any loss on "a gamble" on a drug, "the record would seem to show, he generally covers it by substantial profits on other drugs."

The report found that the elderly had far greater need for prescription drugs than any other population group and that many could not meet their needs out of income, savings and insurance coverage.

"Their inability to afford the drugs they require may well be reflected in needless sickness and disability, unemployability and costly hospitalization," the report said.

Noting that the problem is "destined to become increasingly serious," the task force recommended that the Social Security Administration expedite studies now under way as to the feasibility of including prescription drugs under medicare.

The task force hailed the drug industry's $500-million-a-year research and development program as producing some impressive new drugs, but it stressed that much of the program's output represented duplications or slight modifications that "provide only minor contributions to medical progress."

The report raised a number of basic questions about the ability of American doctors to prescribe the appropriate drugs for their patients.

It said most of the information to physicians comes in the form of "subjective" advertising and mailings of free samples and that many of them lack time to make an objective judgment.

It listed prescription abuses, such as over-prescribing, prescribing drugs that are unsafe or not useful, and prescribing drugs which are essentially the same as less costly products.

In this area, the report said differences between the effectiveness of brand-name drugs and less costly equivalents have been "grossly exaggerated" by advertising. It suggested consideration of marketing new drugs only under their generic names.

Among major recommendations, the report called for:

HEW conferences with the drug industry; organization of doctors and consumer groups to find ways to increase the safety of drugs and bring down their prices; revision of patent and trademark laws on drugs; legislation requiring that all containers of prescribed drugs be labeled for identity, strength and quantity of product; development of better pharmacy courses; publication of continuing guidelines for doctors on drugs, and a "compendium" listing all lawful drugs, their uses and effects.

FCC Charges Conflict of Interest In Huntley's Attacks on Meat Law

The Federal Communications Commission found a "substantial conflict of interest" in news commentator Chet Huntley's attacks on the federal meat inspection law.

It sharply rebuked the National Broadcasting Company for having "fallen short" of its responsibilities to the public by not assuring the integrity of its news operations. Furthermore, the FCC said, the network did not live up to the "fairness doctrine," which requires "a reasonable opportunity for the presentation of conflicting viewpoints."

Huntley had extensive cattle interests during the period of his broadcasts, the FCC noted. But while the network knew of this, listeners did not, and NBC editors passed without change scripts sharply attacking meat inspection, making unsubstantiated charges against federal meat inspectors and ridiculing Betty Furness, the President's consumer adviser, for getting "terribly excited about clean meat."

The FCC's condemnation of the Huntley-NBC role was in effect unanimous.

Actually, it was a 5-1 decision, but the dissent by Commissioner Nicholas Johnson argued that the FCC should have taken stronger action than merely sending "a nasty letter."

Johnson said the Huntley case raises "significant questions" on industry practices involving conflict of interests, especially since so many stations, and even networks, are owned by conglomerate corporations, with extensive financial interests. He said the FCC should have ordered full hearings on the issue in connection with the pending license renewal application of an NBC-owned station in Los Angeles.

The call for an FCC investigation of Huntley's conflict of interest role was originally made by Rep. Neal Smith (D-Iowa), a sponsor of the 1967 meat inspection law.

Among the "gross misstatements" he cited in Huntley's broadcasts over the NBC radio network was a claim that "in New York, this reporter knows, truck drivers and other employes of the wholesale district are now quitting their jobs to become federal (meat) inspectors and they talk openly of the fringe benefits . . . monies under the table in return for that misleading inspection stamp."

In fact, Smith noted, no former truck drivers have been employed as meat inspectors and there has been absolutely no indication, or even allegation, of bribery.

NBC issued a statement following the FCC's blast asserting that the "whole issue is very complicated and we will have to give the matter further study before commenting on it."

Huntley said the FCC "has exaggerated out of all proportion my financial interest in cattle raising."

He said he sold his Montana cattle ranch last spring and his $15,000 investment in a cattle feeding operation in Iowa and ownership of livestock worth about $20,000 together represent only about 2 percent of his net worth.

New Orleans Workers Win Union Rights

New Orleans—This area's labor movement directly, and the American Legion convention indirectly, are credited with helping a new union win recognition from the city Sewerage & Water Board.

The board agreed to recognize newly chartered Local 1992 of the State, County & Municipal Employes after learning that sewer and water employes planned a "work moratorium" on a day that thousands of Legion delegates were in town. They got the word from Local 1992 and from the Greater New Orleans AFL-CIO, whose affiliates urged the board to grant recognition.

The board's recognition was reluctant. It agreed to talk over "terms and conditions of employment" with the union, but only for its own members. Talks are due to start at once for the city employes, who have no legally-guaranteed bargaining rights.

Meany: Candidates Judged on Record

Cites Duty To Inform Members

Vice Pres. Humphrey has earned labor's support through a "perfect" voting record in Congress and by his performance in every public office he has held, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared on a nationwide television and radio broadcast.

Meany appeared on NBC's Meet the Press program to answer questions from a panel of newsmen. Nearly all of the questions dealt with labor's political role in the election campaign.

Meany told the panel the AFL-CIO considers it "part of our job" to inform union members of the records of candidates for public office.

On the basis of the records of the candidates, Meany predicted, "a great majority" of union members will vote for Humphrey, even though some have been "deceived" by the "demagogic appeal" of George Wallace and some are "traditionally Republican."

Meany stressed that "if the record favors Mr. Humphrey and not Mr. Wallace or Mr. Nixon," it is a record written by the candidates themselves in their public careers. "We didn't make the record."

Questioning Meany before the television cameras were Stanley Levey of the Scripps-Howard newspapers; Hobart Rowen, Washington Post; Peter Lisagor, Chicago Daily News, and Russ Ward of NBC News. Neil Boggs of NBC was the moderator.

Issues Cited

The AFL-CIO measures candidates by their record on "the things we believe in," Meany said. He cited such issues as consumer protection, social security, housing, medicare, minimum wage legislation, equal rights, safety protection for workers on the job and farm labor protection.

He said there isn't a single area of labor concern "where Humphrey hasn't been leading" the drive for progressive legislation.

A number of questions related to the appeal of Wallace to union members.

Meany noted that union members are not basically different from other voters. "They represent pretty much a cross-section of America" and labor's leadership is probably "ahead" of many union members in its firm opposition to racial discrimination in all areas—off as well as on the job.

Humphrey Stresses Stake For Workers in Election

Abel Links Wallace to Union Foe

Pittsburgh, Pa.—A top aide of George C. Wallace is ignoring the labor law of the land and is trying to break a strike by the Steelworkers in Selma, Ala., USWA Pres. I. W. Abel charged.

Abel, who is also chairman of the National Labor Committee for Humphrey and president of the AFL-CIO's Industrial Union Dept., said "this shows the real feelings of the Wallace camp toward the working man."

He said workers employed at the Bush Hog Co. in Selma selected the USWA as bargaining agent in a recent secret ballot election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

The vice president of the company is Earl Goodwin, co-chairman of the national fund raising campaign for George Wallace.

"The company, with Mr. Goodwin helping to call the shots, waged a bitter campaign against the organizing efforts of our union and now the company is violating the law by refusing to bargain collectively with the union," Abel asserted.

He said that after the Steelworkers won the certification election the company charged the union with improper conduct during the election. However, he added, the NLRB conducted a thorough investigation of the charge and upheld the union's right to represent the employes.

"This anti-worker company is now resorting to other legal delays in an effort to thwart the wishes of its employes for union representation," Abel said. "The company is also trying to recruit strikebreak-

Refuses to Bar Strikers:

House Rejects Move To Gut Food Stamps

The House voted down, 187-158, a new Republican attempt tc disqualify strikers, persons involved in any "labor dispute," anc needy students from the food stamp program.

It then went on to give 245-98 approval to a House-Senate conference agreement extending the food stamp program through 197C and raising the amount of money available for the program.

The AFL-CIO had strongly urged the House to approve the conference report and reject a motion by California Republican Charles Teague to insist on the striker ban.

The original House-passed bill had included the prohibition on food stamps for families needing help because their incomes and savings had been depleted by long strikes. The Senate bill contained no such provision and it was dropped by the House-Senate conference committee.

When Teague proposed to senc the bill back to conference witl instructions to restore the anti-un ion measure, Rep. Leonor K. Sulli van (D-Mo.), told the House how Teague and his allies had sought tc gut the food stamp program.

The striker ban motion, she said. "is sponsored by enemies, no friends, of the food stamp program It was originally adopted in committee by the votes of members who then voted against the bill. even as so amended."

Defeat of the Teague motion was accomplished with the the help of a bit of congressional log-rolling.

A number of liberal Democrats served notice on conservative farm area colleagues that they were getting a bit tired of providing the votes needed for farm aid legislation without some reciprocity on bills to help people in cities.

It was no coincidence that a bill extending the basic farm program for another year was brought up in the House on the same day as the food stamp program. It was passed,

Raps Nixon Position on Farm Strike

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey stepped up the pace and sharpened the tone of his campaign for the presidency as he delivered slashing attacks on his opponents in addresses to two state AFL-CIO conventions.

Appearing before more than 1,500 delegates to the California AFL-CIO convention in Sacramento, Humphrey assailed Republican Richard M. Nixon for failing to do his "homework" on the Farm Workers' grape strike and boycott. He challenged Nixon to join him in urging growers and the union to negotiate an end to the dispute.

"The alternative is clear," he told his cheering, table-pounding audience: "Bargain or boycott."

A day earlier, at the Minnesota AFL-CIO convention in Minneapolis, the Vice President told 1,000 delegates from unions in his home state that Nixon as a congressman and senator had never voted with working people "on a single issue."

He repeated his challenge to the GOP candidate to meet him in face-to-face debate "so the voters of this country can really compare our stands on the issues that really count."

As for third-party candidate George C. Wallace, Humphrey denounced as a "fraud" Wallace's claim that if elected he would "restore law and order" to the nation's cities. Citing federal crime statistics, the Vice President declared hat the rates for murder and other crimes of violence "were higher in Alabama while he was governor than in any other state."

Nixon's 'Statistical Juggling' Hit As Scheme to 'Confuse Workers'

Republican presidential candidate Richard Nixon is ignoring facts and resorting to "statistical juggling designed to confuse the American worker," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared.

Meany leveled the charge in refuting a Nixon statement, issued Sept. 23, contending that workers have been "marking time for the last three years because of the economic policies that my opponent applauds."

Meany recalled that Nixon had opened his campaign on Labor Day "with a falsehood," claiming that the average worker has lost $1,000 in income through inflation since the last presidential election.

"The AFL-CIO promptly nailed that claim," Meany said, "pointing out that since the last presidential election the average worker with a wife and two children had gained more than $400 in real wages after deductions for price increases and taxes."

Turning to Nixon's latest charges, Meany said the facts show that pay envelopes over the past three years "have kept pace with, and exceeded, price increases brought on by the profit and pricing policies of giant corporations."

"During this same period," he continued, "the American worker has won substantially higher minimum wages, a vastly improved social security system including medicare, badly needed housing legislation and a federal education program that was long overdue."

Meany also noted that during the past three years the nation "has

Illinois Bell Strikers Vote To Ratify Pact

Chicago—A five-month strike of 12,000 telephone installers and other plant workers against Illinois Bell Telephone Co. ended when members of five Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers' locals voted to accept wage increases of $11 to $27.50 a week in a three-year contract.

The strikers returned to work after voting in a referendum conducted by IBEW System Council T-4. The vote was 5,523 in favor of the long-term pact, 192 for an 18-month wage reopener only, and 2,862 for continuing the work stoppage that began Apr. 18.

Illinois Bell said the improvements would add $56 million to its payroll costs. Union Chairman Robert A. Nickey said the strikers accepted the long-term pact because of "economic pressure" and not because they felt the offer was adequate.

The new contract raises the top scale for plant craftsmen from the present $160.50 a week to $188 in three steps: $14.50 this year, an additional $6 next year and $7 more in the final year, plus other contract improvements.

In July the strikers solved a crisis for the Democratic national convention by agreeing to install telephone equipment in the convention hall while continuing their strike at other locations. Payment for the work at union rates was deposited in a fund which the IBEW Council used for strike benefits.

U.S. LABOR'S assistance to unions in Latin America has been an important factor in raising living standards there, Gen. Sec. Olavi Previatti of the National Confederation of Industrial Workers in Brazil told the AFL-CIO Executive Council in New York. He spoke at the invitation of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Housing, Food Lead August Price Rises

The cost of living rose three-tenths of 1 percent in August, marking the 19th consecutive month of increase, the Labor Dept. reported.

The Consumer Price Index, at 121.9 percent of the 1957-59 base period, was 4.3 percent above August 1967. Goods and services that cost $10 a decade ago now cost $12.19.

Gross average weekly earnings of production workers rose to a record high of $109.16 in August, an increase of 29 cents since July and $5.86 from August 1967. The pickup over the month was due to a one-tenth of an hour rise in the workweek, as average hourly earnings remained at $2.85.

For the worker with three dependents, weekly take-home pay averaged $96.29 in August, up 22 cents over the month. A worker with no dependents had a net pay of $87.39, a gain of 21 cents over July.

Real Earnings

After adjustment for the monthly price increase, real spendable earnings averaged $78.99 for the worker with three dependents and $71.69 for the worker with no dependents, down 8 cents and 6 cents, respectively.

Higher prices for housing, up five-tenths of 1 percent from July, led the climb of major items on the CPI. A 2.3 percent rise in mortgage interest contributed greatly to the overall increase in housing costs.

Retail food prices went up four-tenths of 1 percent instead of declining as usual in August. Restaurant meal costs continued a long-term increase. They were up five-tenths of 1 percent over the month and 5.3 percent above a year ago.

Apparel prices, including the cost of boys', men's and women's clothing, rose in August, as did the prices of gasoline, furniture and major appliances. Prices of new cars and television sets declined.

Service Charges Rise

Charges for all types of consumer services rose four-tenths of 1 percent in August. Utility and public transportation costs increased two-tenths of 1 percent, home maintenance services, four-tenths of 1 percent; and personal care services, three-tenths of 1 percent.

Medical care services advanced less than usual, three-tenths of 1 percent. These costs have led the index increase over recent years. Doctors' and dentists' fees and hospital charges were all up from July.

About 100,000 workers will receive pay increases based on the rising CPI. Some 80,000 employes in aerospace industries will receive boosts ranging from 1 to 4 cents an hour. Other increases will range up to 8 cents an hour.

Rubber Workers Urged To Build Defense Fund

Denver—Pres. Peter Bommarito of the Rubber Workers called on the union's 26th convention here to build up a $15 million defense fund and enact a dues increase.

In a report to the 850 delegates, Bommarito said restoration of the fund—depleted by a 1967 strike against the nation's five largest rubber companies—is a key to success in future negotiations.

The dues increase, he pointed out, will help the URW meet ever-mounting expenses, develop new programs and strengthen its current drive to bring more workers into the union.

The convention proceeded into extensive debate on a defense fund and dues increase proposals, which requires a two-thirds approval; heard addresses from a number of speakers, and prepared to act on a long list of resolutions.

The defense fund proposal offered the convention would cost each union member $5 per month for 18 months, beginning Nov. 1, 1968, and ending April 30, 1970. Contracts with the "Big Five" rubber firms expire in April 1970, and 250 other contracts run out between that month and November 1971.

The proposed dues increase would be $1 per month, 50 cents of which would remain in the locals with the remaining 50 cents going into the general fund of the international. Current dues range from $4 to $5.75 monthly, with $1.25 earmarked for the defense fund.

Meanwhile, the delegates unanimously re-elected Bommarito to his second term in office. An ex-tire builder from Detroit, he was first elected in 1966 to succeed George Burdon. Prior to that, Bommarito had been a vice president since 1960.

The convention also unanimously re-elected Kenneth Oldham to his second term as vice president and Ike Gold to his fifth term as secretary-treasurer.

In his address, Bommarito stressed that a strong defense fund will enable the union to enter its next round of negotiations with "a spirit of militancy that will be needed to match the arrogance of the major rubber companies and their mutual aid pact."

He pointed that a defense fund should not be considered a strike fund, but a fund to prevent long, nationwide strikes in the industry, adding:

"We must make this fund a formidable obstacle to future company obstinance and make the companies realize that bargaining in good faith means just what it says."

The situation between management and the union, he continued, is much like two powerful nations, each afraid to move against the other because of the "deterrents" held by both sides.

"The chance of being provoked into a strike in the face of a strong defense fund is much less than when that fund is inadequate—as it was at the time of our strike in 1967."

Gold reported to the convention that the strike last year, which lasted for 14 weeks, cost the union $12.5 million, nearly half of which was borrowed from other unions.

Among speakers addressing early sessions of the convention were Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther; Charles Levinson, general secretary of the Intl. Federation of Chemical General Workers; and Dir. William Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

'Due Process' at Stake:

Stalemate Continues In N.Y. School Strike

New York—Representatives of a "decentralized" school board walked out of a meeting with Mayor John V. Lindsay and the Teachers' union and later refused to comply with an order by the president of the city Board of Education to "facilitate the normal return" of 110 teachers to their classrooms Sept. 27.

The stalemate that triggered a strike over job security for teachers continued as the AFL-CIO News went to press. The United Federation of Teachers—Local 2 of the AFL-CIO Teachers—announced its 53,000 members will stay on strike until 10 teachers dismissed summarily by the Ocean Hill-Brownsville local district in Brooklyn, and 100 others blacklisted by the local board for staying out in support of the fired teachers, are restored to their jobs without harassment or penalty.

The dispute erupted last May when 19 teachers were notified in their classrooms that their services were being dispensed with, effective immediately, without any charges being formulated or any appeal procedure set up.

An additional 300 teachers walked out of the district's eight schools, and 110 of the 310 were still out when the 900-school system was scheduled to reopen in September. The others transferred out of the district.

The union held its members out of their classrooms for two days, until the Greater New York board agreed to guarantee their job security and their right to due process of law. The walkout was resumed when jeering, shouting crowds prevented the return of teachers to class in Ocean Hill-Brownsville. The strike continues, despite assurances from the mayor and the central board that settlement is just around the corner.

"This is basically a dispute over due process," UFT Pres. Albert Shanker told an overflow meeting of the AFL-CIO city central body at Hotel Commodore here.

It is not a racial issue, Shanker said, though a majority of pupils in the eight-school district are Negroes and Puerto Ricans. The issue is whether or not the city, and the central board, will enforce the contract they have with the teachers, he declared.

A group of black trade unionists, headed by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph, supported the union's stand in advertisements in New York City newspapers. (Excerpts, Page 6.)

Michael Harrington, board chairman of the League for Industrial Democracy, released a statement by 20 prominent professors and writers in support of the union's position. It declared:

"The real issue now is job security. It is the right not to be fired arbitrarily by your employer because he doesn't like the color of your skin, or the way you wear your hair, or the political opinion you hold."

The 800 delegates representing 1.2 million union members roared their approval of a motion pledging full support of the teachers' stand. Also they authorized Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of the New York City AFL-CIO and the other officers to take any further action they deem necessary at a special executive board meeting.

Van Arsdale told the council that the teachers are striking for a basic trade union principle—the sanctity of a legal contract.

Last week the AFL-CIO Executive Council, at a meeting here, pledged full support to the UFT in a statement branding the dismissal of teachers "union-busting." The council accused Lindsay of threatening to jail Shanker for striking but taking no action against the rebellious local school district leaders.

National Health System Urged to Assure Care

Assuring all citizens adequate health care at a reasonable cost as a matter of right is going to require a National Health Insurance system, an AFL-CIO spokesman told a blue-ribbon health panel in Washington.

Existing "non-system" medical care is "uncoordinated, unorganized and fragmented," Richard Shoemaker, assistant director of the Dept. of Social Security, declared.

He testified before the National Advisory Commission on Health Facilities named by Pres. Johnson in 1967 to find ways of improving health care. Its 15 members include AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Sullivan, also president of the Service Employes.

Shoemaker deplored an increasing breakdown in the delivery of health services in a nation that already is spending "a greater percentage of its gross national product for health than any other country in the world."

He cited soaring medical costs, overcrowded hospitals, exhorbitant doctors' fees and the fact that "the much-vaunted 'doctor-patient relationship' is non-existent for a substantial and growing number of people."

Pointing to "lofty and well-meaning statements" that universally agree "that health care is the right of every citizen," Shoemaker emphasized that the "right" can only be attained by "a universal system of financing health services."

Pending the adoption of such a system, Shoemaker urged the commission to call upon the federal government to give support to strengthening comprehensive group practice, prepayment health plans and increasing their numbers.

He pointed to a study by the National Advisory Commission on Health Manpower which found that these plans (GPPPs) provide "high quality health care for 20 to 30 percent less cost than the traditional fee-for-service systems."

Other figures submitted by Shoemaker showed that such plans have a hospital utilization rate of but one-half the rate of traditional forms of health insurance and "make physicians' services more efficient so that fewer of them are needed in relation to patient population."

Noting that the nation can be expected to spend many billions in the future to remodel obsolete hospitals, Shoemaker said, "If group practice pre-payment plans were the predominant form of medical practice, we would have more beds and obsolete hospitals could actually be torn down."

And, he added, "If GPPPs were the predominant form of medical practice, we would not need more physicians."

Strike Fund Approved:

IUE Delegates Roar Support Of Humphrey-Muskie Ticket

New York—Enthusiastic endorsement of Hubert H. Humphrey for President and Edmund S. Muskie for Vice President was voted by the 13th convention of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers here.

The convention re-elected Paul Jennings as president and David Fitzmaurice as secretary-treasurer, by acclamation, for four-year terms.

An IUE strike insurance fund was approved by a 2,186-623 roll call vote. It will be financed by a $1-per-month per-member increase in dues and per capita payments starting Jan. 1, 1969. It would provide at least $12-per-week-per-member benefits to locals on authorized strikes starting July 1.

The nearly unanimous Humphrey-Muskie endorsement—only one delegate voted "no"—came at the end of of a five-day convention. The 800 delegates and alternates and their guests had applauded vigorously each time a speaker referred favorably to Humphrey, who was invited but could not come, and they gave repeated whistling ovations to Muskie, who did come.

Among guest speakers were AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Pres. Johnson's consumer aide Betty Furness, Executive Dir. Bayard Rustin of the A. Philip Randolph Institute, Executive Dir. William Hutton of the National Council of Senior Citizens and Pres. Shinryo Kiyota of the Japanese electrical workers union, Denki Roren.

The delegates' pro-Humphrey feelings were clear from the start. They lustily applauded Jennings' keynote prediction that the convention would endorse Humphrey.

Jennings declared that "all kinds of appeals of fear" and about "law and order" are being heard and are going to be heard, and "certainly we do need a new respect for law and order." But, he added, "we will not get it from a bully who stood in a school doorway in defiance of law and order" to prevent a girl from attending school because of her color, "nor from a candidate who advocates shooting of looters. This is America, where human life is held in the greatest of respect, not the Berlin Wall.

Not Fear but Challenge

"These advocates of despair who see violence as the only answer are responding to the problem of our nation with fear," Jennings continued, but "fear is the response of the trapped. We are not trapped. We are challenged to rise up and meet the root cause of discrimination, of poverty, of unemployment and, yes, of racism. It is a challenge that America can meet. . . ."

The IUE leader warned that "if we are going to be swept away over a single issue of disorder and lose sight of the many basic problems facing our country, we will wake up on Nov. 6 having put a racist in the White House who will seek to destroy not only the labor movement but all the things that people like us . . . have striven so many, many years to put together."

Meany, to whom the IUE delegates gave standing ovations, recalled the struggles that the labor movement has had to make over the years to get laws on the statute books protecting wage-earners. The laws "did not come as a gift from the political segment of our society," he recalled, "nor from the great captains of industry."

Here Meany cited workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation, factory protection laws, social security, medicare, the common school education system, minimum wage laws. Meany, who used to be president of the New York State AFL, recalled the battle "we fought through committees in the state legislature" years ago to compel employers to install exhaust fans to protect workers from inhaling harmful dust. And he recalled, too, "the bitter opposition from the State Manufacturers Association."

Turning to present problems, Meany said, "Yes, we are concerned about law and order. . . . Of course, we feel concerned when we see certain disturbances, but we are practical enough to look behind those disturbances and say, 'Yes we want law and order but we want to correct every injustice that exists that is making a contribution to the disorder we see.'" Citing the problem of the ghettos, the AFL-CIO leader said we must "remake" them, bring in job opportunities, education and decent housing.

"I don't think we should accept the society," he said, "that brings affluence to the great majority and leaves a small minority behind." Among these he included the "working poor"—those who work all week long and are paid so little they have to go to the government for food supplements "to keep their children from starving."

GOP Recessions

Then he looked back to recall that labor's advances came under Democratic Administrations, and he recalled the "shambles" of 10, 12, 14 millions unemployed under Hoover and the three recessions in the eight Eisenhower years, compared to mounting prosperity under the Kennedy-Johnson and Johnson-Humphrey Administrations.

He cited Humphrey's Senate voting record of 199 "right" votes on 199 key issues, as compiled by the AFL-CIO, and contrasted it to Nixon's record of 59 unfavorable votes on the 69 key votes in his Senate tenure.

The strike insurance fund and other constitutional amendments including one on officers' salaries will be sent to the local unions for referendum approval. The salary change would permit the IUE executive board to raise the president's salary by up to $2,500 per year to a $35,000 yearly maximum and the secretary-treasurer's salary by up to $1,875 per year to a $30,000 yearly maximum. The maximums have been $25,500 and $22,500.

MEDAL OF HONOR winner S/Sgt. Kenneth E. Stumpf receives congratulations from Pres. Johnson at White House ceremonies as five Viet Nam veterans were awarded the Medal of Honor. Stumpf, a member of the Lithographers & Photoengravers since 1964, was cited for his grenade attack on several enemy bunkers—knocking out two of them. The apprentice lithographer from Menasha, Wis., is a member of LPIU Local 88(L).

Two Rail Unions Win 10-11% Pay Increases

Chicago—The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen have negotiated a new contract with the nation's railroads calling for across-the-board 11 percent wage increases over two years plus major new benefits.

BLFE Pres. H. E. Gilbert said the settlement provides pay boosts of 2.5 percent effective Jan. 1, 1968; 3.5 percent on July 1, 1968; another 2 percent on Jan. 1, 1969, and a further 3 percent on July 1, 1969.

In addition, BLFE members meeting certain minimum requirements will receive a single sum payment of $50 and firemen in special types of terminal service and runs with total daily mileage of less than 100 miles will get an additional 40 cents a day.

The pact also brings improvements in vacations and holidays, and new liability insurance protecting employes required to travel in connection with their work.

Gilbert said the agreement, covering 30,000 firemen, proves "that solutions can be found to disputes if the parties have a sincere will to find those solutions."

He charged that lack "of the same type of collective bargaining" due to stalling tactics of railroads is keeping the union and the carriers "miles apart" in trying to settle a dispute over the manning of diesels.

Dispatchers Agree

Meanwhile, in Washington, the Train Dispatchers also announced a new agreement covering their 3,400 members on the railroads.

The contract provides a 10 percent wage increase, 5 percent of it retroactive to July 1, 1968, 2 percent effective on Jan. 1, 1969, and 3 percent on July 1, 1969. The ATDA said it already had "the equivalent" of an additional 1 percent won by other rail unions.

The two latest settlements bring to nine the number of rail labor organizations that have reached agreements for their members through 1968 negotiations. The unions, all told, represent some 400,000 workers.

In other areas:

- Government mediation was underway in Washington in an effort to resolve the wage-rules dispute of the Railroad Signalmen. It said that results of a strike vote, to date, finds members voting solidly to strike if necessary to get a settlement.
- Two other unions, the Locomotive Engineers and the Conductors & Brakemen, both unaffiliated, have invoked mediation in their unresolved disputes.
- Six shopcraft unions, who usually bargain through the AFL-CIO Railway Employes Dept., are preparing to serve wage notices on the railroads. They are the Machinists, Boilermakers, Sheet Metal Workers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Railway Carmen and Firemen & Oilers.

$110 Minimum Negotiated at Home for Aged

New York—Pay increases up to 57 percent of former wages for employes of the Workmen's Circle Home for the Aged have been negotiated by Hotel & Allied Service Employes Local 144; affiliated with the Service Employes.

A minimum hiring rate of $110 a week is provided in the final year of a new three-year pact ratified by the union and Louis Silver, home administrator. Formerly it was $70, union Pres. Peter Ottley said.

Wage increases are $18 a week, retroactive to July 1; and additional raises of $12 and $10 a year apart for employes—maintenance workers, porters, kitchen and laundry workers, maids, nurses' aides and orderlies. Also provided is a 35-hour week and overtime at time and a half.

Local 144 represents 18,000 service employes of hotels, nursing homes and hospitals, along with "front service" hotel employes and registered and practical nurses.

House Beats Food Stamps Striker Ban

189-172, over strong GOP opposition. Then a number of rural area Democrats, including House Agricultural Committee Chairman W. R. Poage (D-Tex.), voted with the liberal bloc to defeat the food stamp recommittal.

The conference report, which still requires final Senate approval, would raise the ceiling on food stamp expenditures from last year's $225 million to $315 million for the current fiscal year, $340 million for the 1970 fiscal year, plus $170 million to continue the program through the first half of the 1971 fiscal year—up to Dec. 31, 1970. The House had originally passed an "open-end" authorization, permitting expenditures of whatever amount proved necessary.

Pres. John F. Kennedy directed an experimental food stamp program immediately after his inauguration in 1961 and Pres. Johnson in 1964 won congressional approval to expand the program and make it permanent.

Low-income families—based on standards set by county welfare agencies—are able to buy food stamps at a discount and use them for food purchases at retail stores. In general, the greater the need, the less the cost of the food stamps.

Improvement of the program was a key goal of last spring's Poor People's March.

IOWA AFL-CIO CONVENTION delegates in Cedar Rapids take time from their deliberations to join Grain Millers Local 100 on picket lines at Penick & Ford Ltd., where 500 workers have been on strike since Aug. 1 in a contract dispute.

Iowa Delegates Carry Policies to Plant Gate

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—Delegates carried their policy resolutions directly to the plant gates during the Iowa State AFL-CIO's annual convention here.

Rising at dawn one day, delegates and their wives fanned out to factory gates and office entrances throughout the city to greet arriving workers with political literature.

The COPE material handed out dealt primarily with the "anti-union record" of George Wallace, showing that "he opposed programs for unions and workers as Alabama's governor," James J. Wengert, state AFL-CIO secretary-treasurer, reported.

On another day, the convention adjourned early and delegates joined members of Grain Millers Local 100 on picket lines at Penick & Ford, Ltd., a wet corn processing firm and subsidiary of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. Some 500 employes have been striking there since Aug. 1 in a contract dispute.

The delegates, meeting as a State Committee on Political Education, endorsed Democratic Gov. Harold E. Hughes for the U.S. Senate and Paul Franzenburg, Democratic state treasurer, to succeed him as governor, along with Democratic candidates for other state offices.

They also endorsed incumbent Democratic Congressmen John C. Culver and Neal Smith, from the state's second and fifth districts, and Democratic congressional candidates in the first, third, fourth and sixth districts: John Schmidhauser, John Van Eschen, Bert Banstra and Jerry O'Sullivan.

The committee urged unions to bolster their participation in an Iowa Voters Committee, which is conducting a vigorous register and vote drive throughout the state.

Varied Actions

Resolutions adopted by the regular convention, attended by 271 delegates, called for state legislation to require safety standards in employment, a wage collection and wage payment law and a state minimum wage law.

Other resolutions urged a $2-an-hour minimum wage under the Fair Labor Standards Act and extension of the law's coverage, full bargaining rights for public employes, a number of improvements for federal workers and support by Iowa unions for the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner strikers' fund.

The convention voted an increase in the Iowa federation's per capita dues by eight cents over the next two years to reach a per capita of 23 cents by Jan. 1, 1970. The additional income will go toward financing an Iowa AFL-CIO newspaper.

Convention speakers included Ralph Helstein, vice president of the Meat Cutters who served as president of the Packinghouse Workers until the merger of the two unions, and COPE Dir. Al Barkan.

There was no election of officers, since Pres. Hugh D. Clark, Wengert, and the state federation's vice presidents, were elected to two-year terms at the 1967 convention.

Farm Wage Base Upheld In California

Sacramento, Calif.—The State Court of Appeals voted unanimously to uphold the validity of new and higher minimum wages for 100,000 women and children on California farms and directed the State Industrial Welfare Commission to enforce the new wage floors immediately.

Three 3rd District judges ordered suits by the California Farm Bureau dissolved. Also they upheld payment of a overtime at time-and-a-half rates for all work in excess of eight hours a day, or 40 hours a week, by women and minors hired to pack and process crops on and off the farm.

The new minimums will rise from $1.30 an hour for women farm workers to $1.65 and from $1.10 to $1.35 for minors.

The new rates were established by the Industrial Welfare Commission last September after extensive testimony by the California AFL-CIO and other proponents of higher minimums. They were held in abeyance, however, after the filing of three lawsuits by agriculture and business interests.

The growers argued in their suits that the minimums were illegal and that the welfare commission had no authority to order them under existing federal statutes, including the 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act.

Judge Leonard M. Friedman, in a 42-page decision concurred in by Judges Edwin J. Regan and Fred R. Pierce, ruled that the IWC had full legal authority to act.

The ruling came on an appeal to the court on behalf of the workers by California Rural Legal Assistance, an arm of the Office of Economic Opportunity, with the support of State Attorney General Thomas C. Lynch. State AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts reported.

O'Callaghan New Chief of Deck Officers

New York—The Masters, Mates & Pilots elected new top officers and voted to call a special convention to consolidate all MM&P local unions, now semi-autonomous, into an organization with four divisions—offshore, inland, pilots and government employes.

By secret ballot referendum, members chose Capt. Thomas F. O'Callaghan, secretary-treasurer since 1965, as president; Vice Pres. Charles M. Crooks, former president, as secretary-treasurer, and Capt. William M. Caldwell of Portland, Ore., as vice president.

O'Callaghan defeated Pres. Lloyd W. Sheldon, 2,507 to 2,342. Crooks got 2,468 votes to 2,387 for Robert H. Nelson. Caldwell won from Capt. Robert L. Jones of Houston-Galveston, Tex., 2,644-2,210.

Six changes in the union constitution were approved by union members who are shipmasters, deck officers, pilots and marine personnel employed on rivers and harbors. Among the changes was one making the international president the executive officer of the union, and another authorizing the chartering of locals of associated maritime workers.

Offshore members—those sailing in deepsea vessels — approved a change in rules governing their employment through union port offices.

Balloting was conducted by a union committee and a CPA firm.

'Profits Are Great—What Did We Make on Wages?'

To Cure Inequities:

Federal Aid Termed Vital to States, Cities

There is no alternative to federally financed programs if America is to wipe out the "economic and social inequities that divide the nation," an article in the September issue of the American Federationist emphasizes.

The article in the AFL-CIO magazine, titled "Federal Aid—Best Bet to Crack State and Local Problems," tells why states and cities are unable to raise sufficient money for vitally needed education, health, welfare and job programs.

The author, Arnold Cantor of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, reports that federal grants-in-aid, "channeled where the needs are greatest," are the most equitable means of financing these programs.

"The concept of the federal government entering into partnerships" with state and local governments to help finance programs dates back to the "land grants" for education in 1862, Cantor says. He notes that from grants for agricultural and highway programs in the early 1900's, the partnerships reached major significance in the depression 1930's in the area of social welfare and have since expanded in education, health, jobs and welfare.

In recent years, he continues, Congress has centered on grants-in-aid for education, housing, community development and anti-poverty programs—and now the focus is on these and other needs as they relate to the nation's urban crisis.

The growth of federal aid for urban areas, with much of it now going into federal programs directly tied to cities, "reflects the emphasis upon pinpointing the needs that are greatest," Cantor writes.

'Undistinguished'

"It also reflects a recognition," he adds, "that state governments have not particularly distinguished themselves in responding to the critical needs of most large cities."

Meanwhile, the cities are increasingly encountering trouble in collecting revenue, he says, because middle-income families and businesses are moving to the suburbs—a situation that steadily "narrows the tax base" of city governments.

In the face of this, the article declares, "the cities' needs for improvements in education, housing, health, mass transit and community facilities and services have soared."

Although states have added new levies and raised tax rates in the past 20 years to finance programs and services, Cantor reports, combined state and local debt rose by some 120 percent over the 1956-66 decade.

In contrast, he points out, federal peacetime expenditures have generally kept pace with receipts since the end of World War II. While the federal debt has increased, it has fallen sharply in terms of total wealth—from 98 percent of the gross national product in 1948 to 44 percent in 1967.

The federal government, the article states, mainly through personal and corporate income taxes has been able to raise the revenues necessary to carry out its functions, including an increase in its grants-in-aid to states and localities.

A Fair System

"And, although there are many loopholes and inequities pointing to considerable room for improvement," it adds, "the federal income tax system is . . . a relatively fair one."

As for the states and localities, not only have they not been able to raise sufficient funds for public service needs, "their methods of taxation seldom result in a fair sharing of the tax burden," the article asserts.

It criticizes states for relying "on sales taxes which unfairly burden low and moderate-income groups" and cities for depending upon "property taxes which seldom meet either fairness or revenue-raising goals."

A Bureau of Census chart, accompanying the article, shows that generally states with the highest per capita income rely least upon the federal government for revenue, while the lowest income states are the most dependent.

Revenue Recipients

For example, New York and Connecticut, among states with high per capita income, received only 8.6 and 12.6 percent of their total revenue from the federal government in 1965-66. Conversely, Alabama and Arkansas, among states with low per capita income, received 27.6 and 27.5 percent of their total revenue from U.S. funds. They ranked fourth and fifth among all states in federal revenue as a percent of total revenue.

The system of federal grants-in-aid is by no means perfect, Cantor writes. Grants can be targeted more efficiently and strengthened and state and local governments "can pull more of their share of the weight in partnerships" by reviewing and performing tax systems, he says.

However, in the final analysis, he concludes, federal grants-in-aid must be given "major emphasis" if America "is to mount a direct frontal attack on the economic and social inequalities that are dividing the nation."

McClennan Takes FireFighters' Reins

The presidency of the Fire Fighters changed hands Sept. 21 as officers elected at the union's convention 30 days earlier began their terms.

W. H. McClennan, who has been vice president for the New England area, began his two-year term as president. William D. Buck, president of the Fire Fighters since 1957, became the union's first president emeritus, with advisory duties and status as a delegate-at-large to the union's conventions.

Per Capita Hike Voted:

Pressmen Delegates Back Merger Move

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Printing Pressmen moved a step closer to merger with the Stereotypers & Electrotypers as delegates to the union's 39th convention here supported a call for the unifying action to balance the power of huge business conglomerates.

Delegates also voted a 15-cent per capita monthly increase for all members and three 10-cent increments for specialty craft members.

Convening earlier in Palo Alto, Calif., the Stereotypers had approved the merger plan with the Pressmen. The final merger agreement must be approved by the membership of both unions.

Although there was opposition for continued merger discussion with printing trades unions other than the Stereotypers, delegates agreed to have the union's board pursue the talks.

In an appeal for support of continued merger efforts, IPP&AU Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade said, "If we don't get together, we are going to die separately."

Also urging merger were guest speakers Pres. John J. Pilch of the Intl. Typographical Union, and Pres. John Connolly of the Bookbinders.

Pilch told the Pressmen that "industry is well on the way to accomplishing complete conglomeration, while we in many segments of labor suffer from fragmentation."

He said the printing crafts "need merger and welding of conglomerates to combat the industry trend."

Connolly called the union mergers a matter of survival.

The 15-cent dues increase will go into effect next Jan. 1. The first of the 10-cent tax assessments for specialty members will be added in 1970. Two additional assessments will go into effect in 1971 and 1972.

Concerned with the plight of the union's Los Angeles local—and other newspaper craft unions—officers initiated a fund for the embattled members with a $500 donation out their pockets. A collection was taken on the floor for the Hearst Los Angeles Herald-Examiner members and delegates were urged to continue the collections within their locals.

A resolution backing the 2,000 members of the 10 AFL-CIO unions involved in the Hearst strike and lockout urged a unified effort from all labor organizations to give regular financial aid and moral support. It also called on union members to support the "don't buy" campaign against firms who continue to advertise in Hearst publications.

Following an appeal from United Farm Workers Vice Pres. Andy Imutan, the delegates voted a contribution of $5,000 and supported the grape boycott against the California growers. Touched by Imutan's appeal, the delegates also passed the hat and raised an additional $2,315 for the striking grape pickers.

UNIONS MUST UNITE to match the power of huge business combinations, Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade told delegates to the Printing Pressmen's convention in Bal Harbour, Fla. The convention moved closer to merger with the Stereotypers and voted to continue talks with other printing unions.

Grady Retires As Officer of Bill Posters

New York—The Bill Posters presented veteran Sec.-Treas. John J. Grady with a gold life membership card and elected John J. Heister of New York Local 2 as his successor at the union's convention here.

Grady, now 76, was first elected in 1944. He declined another term and was feted at the convention banquet after being named secretary-treasurer emeritus. Grady announced he will stay in office only long enough to "break in" Heister, who has been assistant business agent of Local 2.

Pres. John Gavin of Cleveland, O., and four incumbent vice presidents were re-elected for three-year terms. Casper Frederick of Local 94, Detroit, was named to succeed Vice Pres. Orville Sullivan, who did not run for another term.

The delegates voted to raise per capita payments of local unions from $1.40 to $1.50 a month per member; increased the minimum monthly dues of members from $4 to $5; and chose Philadelphia as the site of the 1971 convention.

Grady said a threatened raid on West Coast locals by an unaffiliated union was headed off by agreement.

The Bill Posters were founded in 1901.

700 Join in Tribute To Jacob Friedrick

Milwaukee—Jacob F. Friedrick, whose career as a labor and civic leader spans half a century, was honored here Sept. 21 by about 700 unionists public officials, educators and friends.

Friedrick, 76, will retire next spring after nine and one-half years as president of the Milwaukee County Labor Council and eight years as secretary-treasurer of the old AFL Milwaukee Federated Trades Council.

The chief speaker at an appreciation dinner, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, said Friedrick "has no equal anywhere in the United States" among presidents of central labor councils.

Biemiller said Friedrick's greatest influence was in the field of education but that he also was an early champion of civil rights.

Noting that Friedrick tried to abolish a color ban in the Machinist 40 years ago, Biemiller said: "the labor movement has now accepted what he was preaching 40 years ago."

Friedrick is a member of the University of Wisconsin Board of Regents, the only trade unionist ever to serve on that group. He was president of the board for two terms.

Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D), who as governor in 1960, appointed Friedrick, said, "I have never been more proud of an appointment."

Sen. William Proxmire (D) said "I cannot think of anybody in labor or education who has contributed more to both fields" than Friedrick.

Mayor Henry W. Maier and County Executive John Doyne praised Friedrick for his service as an informal adviser to public officials.

Friedrick also has had many years of formal public service, including 34 years as chairman of the Milwaukee Sewerage Commission and 36 years on the Unemployment Compensation Advisory Committee. He has been on that committee since it was formed in 1932.

Friedrick had helped develop Wisconsin's unemployment compensation law, first in the nation. He worked closely with the late Prof. John R. Commons, noted economist, on both unemployment insurance and establishment of the University of Wisconsin School for Workers, a pioneer venture in worker education.

Born in Hungary in 1892, Friedrick came to Milwaukee when he was 13. He attended public schools and learned the machinist trade. He has been a member of the Machinists' union since 1913 and served as business representative from 1919 to 1929.

For the next six years he was labor editor of the old Milwaukee Leader. From 1935 to 1945 he was general organizer for the Federated Trades Council and was AFL regional director from 1945 to '51.

Friedrick was an early advocate of national health insurance and is recognized as an authority on workmen's compensation.

A strong supporter of "the Wisconsin idea," dating back to the times of Commons and the economic reformers at the university, Friedrick has continued to work closely with the academic community. He received an honorary doctorate in 1955.

Under his leadership, the labor council has been an effective lobbying force for education at all levels.

Midwest Labor Editors Weigh 'Generation Gap'

Columbus, Ohio—Serious problems concerning youth confront organized labor today. But the so-called generation gap is not a patented problem for unions. It haunts all of mankind.

It was in this setting that the Midwest Labor Press Association adopted the theme of "Organized Labor and the Generation Gap" for its annual conference Sept. 19-21 at Ohio State University.

In addition to hearing addresses on the subject, more than 50 midwestern editors took to the field in a series of eight on-the-spot workshops to witness how centeral Ohioans are attempting to cope with their youth problems. To conclude their program, the editors exchanged spirited discussion with a panel of newspaper, radio and television reporters.

Keynoting the conference was Prof. Simon Dinitz of the OSU Dept. of Sociology, who declared today's youth problem has come about because of a breakdown of the once bonding family structure and a breakdown of the community concept.

Denzil "Shotgun" Pleasant, a youth leader from Dayton, delivered the MLPA's third annual Eugene V. Debs Memorial Lecture. The speech consisted of questions and answers about what "Shotgun" is doing to help youth in his city. He recently was presented the Liberty Bell Award of the Dayton Bar Association for his role in stopping a riot in Dayton's ghetto area.

At the annual NLPA business meeting, Ray Dickow, editor of the Butcher Workman, was elected president of the association, succeeding Leslie Orear, formerly of the Packinghouse Workers. New secretary-treasurer is William Scoggins of Steelworkers Local 1011, Gary, Ind.

Vice presidents elected to serve one-year terms included Robert Kite, Illinois; Bernard J. Schuck, Indiana; Charles Borsari, Ohio; Leona Nichols, Kansas; Frances D'Hondt and Paul Morris, Michigan; Clarence Lawson, Minnesota; Meyer Goldman, Missouri; Rudolph Desanzo, Pennsylvania, and Fred Nolting, Iowa.

West Virginia Unions Gird for Election Drive

Charleston, W. Va.—Nearly 400 delegates to the fifth special convention of the West Virginia AFL-CIO met here to form political strategy for the November elections.

Delegates reaffirmed their endorsement of Democratic gubernatorial candidate James M. Sprouse, and endorsed five Democratic Congressional candidates in the statewide races.

Sprouse pulled an upset victory in the primary election as a reform candidate backed by the AFL-CIO and the liberal community.

In his opening address, State AFL-CIO Pres. Miles C. Stanley delivered a blistering attack on George C. Wallace and Richard M. Nixon. Stanley called upon former supporters of Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy and the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy to back Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey. "I say to them: if you're so mad that you're not going to vote this year, you're not mad enough. If you can't get mad at Richard Nixon and George Wallace, then there is something wrong with you."

Stanley drew applause from the delegates when he labeled the Wallace candidacy as the "growth of a native fascism in America that is every bit as dangerous to America as was Hitler and Mussolini. The movement led by George Wallace has so many parallels to the rise of Hitler, that such comparisons are not funny."

Stanley said the Wallace-Nixon candidacies are a more serious threat to labor than the Goldwater candidacy of 1964. He told the delegates that they have to work harder than ever before to bring the facts to the people.

In other actions, the delegates passed resolutions which included support for open housing, a state labor relations act, consumer protection, and group health.

A banquet session of the convention honored retiring director of Steelworkers District 23, Paul Rusen. Delegates heard a taped message from Arthur J. Goldberg lauding Rusen's "positive contributions to the cause of working people everywhere."

North Dakota Labor Rallies To Humphrey

Fargo, N.D.—A resolution for political "neutrality" was overwhelmingly rejected at the North Dakota State AFL-CIO convention and delegates went on to vote a unanimous endorsement of the Humphrey-Muskie ticket.

The convention also called for the election of the Democratic candidates for governor, lieutenant governor, Senate, House and state public service commissioner.

A major effort to repeal the state's "right-to-work" law was mandated by the convention in a resolution terming the ban on the union shop "a mockery and an insult to North Dakota labor."

The issue was dormant in the 1965 and 1967 legislative sessions, but State AFL-CIO Pres. Wallace Dockter said the time has come for a vigorous repeal campaign.

Other resolutions adopted included opposition to corporate farming in North Dakota, endorsement of a boycott against Hearst publications in support of the Los Angeles strike, and continued support of COPE.

Esther Peterson, assistant secretary of labor, addressed the convention banquet, stressing the role of women in the labor movement.

Carl Winn, AFL-CIO regional director, told the delegates the choice was theirs as to whether the program adopted at the convention would remain merely "words on paper" or whether "it will be the inspiration for each of you to take back to your own organization and put into action."

The Wallace Sickness

MR. WALLACE is totally unqualified to be President of the United States. Indeed, he offers his ignorance and inexperience as credentials. Any ordinary citizen, he argues, could do better than the "pointed heads" in both parties who have been running the government. Referring to critics who say that he knows nothing about foreign policy, he said recently to an audience in Cape Girardeau, Mo., "Well, I ask you, what do the Republicans and the Democrats know about it? They've been in charge of the government in the last 50 years and we've had four wars, we've spent $122 billion of our money [on foreign aid], we're about broke, and we've got less friends than we've ever had, and we've got the Communists running wild in the United States."

The country has heard this loose talk before, although Mr. Wallace probably has the distinction of being the first candidate for President to promise that if anyone lies down in front of his car he will murder him by driving over his body.

This lurid threat which is part of Mr. Wallace's standard speech epitomizes his call to violence. He speaks of law and order, but it is the lawless order which the vigilante imposes with his rope and the Ku Klux Klansman with his bullwhip. Mr. Wallace does not attack Negroes by name, but he promises in effect, to curb radical students and hairy Yippies and liberal government officials with the same harsh physical force which the white South once inflicted upon the Negro. He is the political expression of the school burners and the church bombers and the night riders.

AMERICANS HAVE NOW to ask themselves whether their discontents are so fierce, their grievances so woeful, that they are prepared to follow this apostle of violence and anger. . . .

There are businessmen, the so-called "fat cats" of Dallas and St. Petersburg and Los Angeles, who have made great fortunes in the last 30 years while the country was under political leadership which they scorned. Some of these men are now contributing to the Wallace campaign. They have to ask themselves whether in their insensate greed and political recklessness they are prepared to imitate the German industrialists of the early thirties and go on financing a demagogue whose ultimate aims they cannot foresee or control.

There are industrial workers who have achieved in these last years real advances in their standard of living and in economic security. They have to ask themselves whether they want so badly to "zap the Negro"—as one New Jersey labor leader put it—that they will vote for this smooth-talking adventurer.

There are young people who attend the Wallace rallies. They have to ask themselves—whatever reservations they may have about Hubert Humphrey or Richard Nixon—whether they really think the man poking his head above the bullet-proof lectern even remotely approaches the integrity, the intellectual breadth, the charity or compassion required of a President of the United States.

There is a sickness abroad in the land. It cannot be cured by looking away from it or pretending that it does not exist. The Wallace movement is an evil phenomenon. George C. Wallace is not fit to be President of the United States. He is not fit even to be discussed in presidential terms. This country has no need for his falsehoods and his slick innuendos and his invocations to violence and unreason. Every man and woman who casts a vote for him will bring shame upon this country. Let Americans decide now to have done once and for all with this demagogue.

Due Process Stressed:

Negro Union Leaders Support Teachers in N.Y. School Strike

The following is excerpted from an advertisement in New York City newspapers entitled "An Appeal to the Community from Black Trade Unionists" signed by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph and a score of New York Negro trade union leaders.

THE NEW YORK PUBLIC schools are being struck by the United Federation of Teachers. The atmosphere of the city is charged with tension. Threats have been made, and there is fear of an escalation of violence.

One of the most dangerous aspects of the conflict involving the UFT, the Board of Education, and the Ocean Hill-Brownsville governing board is that it has been portrayed as a racial issue—the UFT versus the black community, the UFT versus decentralization.

Nothing could be more tragic than this distortion. Nothing could more sharply aggravate racial strife or more cruelly prolong the school shutdown.

While we have not always agreed with the UFT, we must now speak out to correct distortions and to set the record straight.

We support decentralization and the goals of parents and community representatives, particularly those of the black community, for a meaningful voice in school policy-making. Local participation, to be effective, must occur in a framework which includes due process, a substantial investment of financial resources and a genuine commitment to quality integrated education.

The real issue in the Ocean Hill-Brownsville dispute is not decentralization. The United Federation of Teachers has made it clear that it accepts decentralization and will cooperate in its implementation. Indeed, the greatest peril to decentralization today is not the UFT but the widespread fear that decentralization will mean a repetition, throughout the city, of the confusion, uncertainty and conflict that occurred in the Ocean Hill-Brownsville district.

Due process is the central issue. It is the right of every worker not to be transferred or fired at the whim of his employer. It is the right of every worker to be judged on his merits—not his color or creed. It is the right of every worker to job security.

These rights have been denied to teachers in the Ocean Hill-Brownsville district by the local governing board. The 10 teachers dismissed by the board have been found innocent of any wrong-doing by the distinguished black judge, Francis Rivers.

If due process is not won in Ocean Hill-Brownsville, what will prevent white community groups in Queens from firing black teachers—or white teachers with liberal views? What will prevent local Birchites and Wallaceites from taking over their schools and using them for their purposes?

In this context we must ask: Will decentralization lead to apartheid education or to maximum feasible integration? Will our schools be dominated by a small minority that does not represent the majority but seeks to impose its will upon the community, or will genuine parent and community groups have a voice in the education of their children? Will teacher unionism—the most powerful force for quality education—be respected or destroyed?

WE RAISE these questions precisely because we realize the New York City school system has failed black and Puerto Rican children. Nevertheless, violations of the basic principles of democracy and trade unionism must not be permitted to continue or our school system will fall into shambles. We have no doubt that it will be the black and Puerto Rican communities and their children who will suffer most since the vast majority of them do not have access to private schools.

We believe that these teachers deserve the support of the entire community. We owe it to black children to speak out, and not to be silenced or cowed by self-appointed "community representatives" whose influence rests on the threat of intimidation or violence. If we do not make ourselves heard, they will appear to speak for the total black community.

Let us speak bluntly. For the black community, more is at stake than the schools. The issue is also whether the community can run its affairs democratically, with freedom of expression for all points of view, or whether we will be strong-armed by small cliques.

We call upon all New Yorkers to support the principle of due process for which the United Federation of Teachers is struggling. We especially urge the authentic voices of the black community—parents, ministers, and civic leaders—to join us in demanding a fair and just settlement of the teachers' strike.

To Curb Crime, Disorders:

Humphrey Backs Plan for Aid To Law Enforcement Agencies

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey has adopted the report of a special panel on order and justice as his program for handling the problem of crime in America. The following is a summary of the special panel's report.

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT must provide leadership in establishing a new federal, state and local partnership to deal with crime and disorder.

The Dept. of Justice should be reorganized to provide greater assistance to local law enforcement agencies. This reorganization should include:

- Appointment of a second Deputy Attorney General responsible for administering the Crime Control & Safe Streets Act.
- Development of federal law enforcement technical assistance teams to respond to local requests for help.
- Creation of regional criminal justice centers to develop and evaluate law enforcement programs and new ideas.

Substantial federal financial aid should be provided to state and local law enforcement officials to hire more police, to pay them higher salaries and to train them more effectively.

The federal government should assist in developing and financing techniques and projects which improve police-community relations so that the police can better serve the community and so that it will trust and cooperate with the police.

We must provide our courts with the manpower and modern administrative techniques that will enable them to assume the swift and sure justice essential to protect both the accused and the community.

With a recidivist rate estimated at 70 percent, it is clear that our prisons are becoming schools for crime. We should provide federal assistance to:

- Develop significantly different kinds of correctional institutions that are directed toward rehabilitation, not just custody.
- Recruit and train correctional personnel who can effectively supervise and rehabilitate convicted offenders, so that the public is protected against incorrigibles and other offenders are returned to useful, decent lives.

The federal government must embark on an ambitious and comprehensive research and development program to:

- Learn more about the cause of crime.
- Develop new law enforcement techniques and to design new crime prevention devices.
- Develop new communications, rehabilitation and training systems.

Citizen crime prevention programs should be expanded to enlist support on the local level for a just and efficient criminal justice system.

Since 1960, the increase in over-all crime can be accounted for almost entirely by the increase in juvenile crime. We must redouble our efforts to get at the root causes of crime among young people. We must prepare young people for meaningful employment and find jobs for them, providing better recreational facilities and improve school and home environments.

The active participation of business and labor—increasingly the target of organized crime—must be enlisted in halting the growing influence of this pervasive form of crime in America.

On the narcotics and drugs problem, we should take action to:

- Increase federal funding for treatment programs at all levels.
- Strengthen enforcement of federal narcotics laws—distinguishing between the unfortunate victims of drug addiction and the criminals who exploit drug addiction for profit.
- Strengthen intelligence and border surveillance to control importation of narcotics.

As we eliminate the misery of our slums, establish social justice for all Americans and eliminate discrimination, we will sharply reduce the threat of riots born of discontent. But as we seek solutions to these problems, we cannot tolerate lawlessness and riots.

The recommendations of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders to prepare for and deal with riots must be implemented.

The federal government should:

- Provide additional training for National Guard units in riot control, teamwork and planning;
- Maintain small, highly trained National Guard riot-control units on continual alert, for short-term service in any community;
- Stand ready to respond to any legitimate call from states or cities for military manpower in the event of massive disorders.

We need effective legislative action on gun control. Congress should approve this year legislation to ban interstate shipment and sale of rifles, shotguns and ammunition. If the states do not act, there should be federal legislation to require:

- A speedy system of registering all long guns and handguns and licensing all owners.
- Licensing of all importers, manufacturers and dealers in guns and ammunition, under reasonable standards which would assure responsibility.

Labor's Campaign:

Facts, Truth Seen Countering Wallace's Demagogic Spiel

AN AFL-CIO SPOKESMAN scored the George Wallace campaign as "demagoguery" that can best be offset by telling the truth about the kind of national administration Wallace would bring.

"Facts and education are now, and always have been, the answer to a demagogue," declared Albert J. Zack, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Public Relations. He made the statement on Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network.

"A lot of union members have been taken in by Mr. Wallace's demagoguery," because they are the group to most recently gain affluence and are "most worried that it might be taken from them," Zack said. But, their best protection, he declared, "is not a Wallace—not a racist—but their trade unions . . . the unions that won for them this affluence."

Organized labor's 1968 political education campaign among union members will lay heavy stress on the fact that "it costs the worker an awful lot of money to live in Wallaceland," Zack said. He pointed out that a worker in Wallaceland loses in his pay envelope, loses in protections against unemployment and on-the-job injuries, and loses the chance to give "his kids a good education—something they don't get in the state that Wallace was governor of—Alabama."

Zack discounted Wallace's chances in November. Wallace can only be a "spoiler," he said, and throw the election to Richard M. Nixon, who is "like an IBM machine—you put in a punch card and out comes a speech, and there is nothing in between."

He recalled that Nixon's political career began with the announced intention to "get the 'labor bosses,' as he calls them," and continues on that tack today by "trying to damage the American trade union movement." He charged that Nixon stands against everything the AFL-CIO and the American people think is good in America.

THE FEDERATION'S endorsement of the Humphrey-Muskie ticket, Zack stressed, was based on both the candidates' records and the 1968 Democratic platform. He said the campaign is tougher and the "stakes even higher" than in 1964. Labor will use all means of communication with union members to show why "Hubert H. Humphrey and Edmund S. Muskie are best for America . . . best for the entire world . . . best for the union member," he said.

Reporters questioning Zack were William Eaton of the Chicago Daily News and Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press.

By Press Associates, Inc.

ALTHOUGH THE 90TH Congress still has major legislation facing it, the political campaign inevitably turns eyes toward the 91st Congress.

Of course no one can predict the outcome of the elections and the make-up of the new Congress. Unquestionably the presidential race will have a major impact.

A Humphrey victory would assure a Democratic Congress.

If Nixon should emerge the victor, we'll obviously see some major changes.

Currently, the Senate has 62 Democrats and 37 Republicans. Before the electorate in November are 23 Democratic seats and 11 Republican seats. Seven of the Democratic seats are held by Southerners and no shift is expected. Republicans would have to win 13 of the other 16 seats to take control, and even their most optimistic boosters are not expecting this.

What does concern many trade unionists and liberals is that if some of their friends in key posts lose out, the result would be that although the Senate would continue to be Democratic, it could be an extremely conservatively-oriented Senate.

Those who think the Senate could be a bulwark against a House and a President, either undercutting or retarding social progress, might well study the history of the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition.

The Republicans would have to gain a mere 30 seats to assume control of the House of Representatives. Currently, there are 245 Democrats in the House, 187 Republicans and three vacant seats.

Republican control of the House would put Rep. Gerald Ford of Michigan into the office of Speaker. As far as voting "right" for the workingman, according to the COPE record, he did so only once out of some 75 key votes.

Republicans with comparable voting records would take over other key committees. Rep. Frank T. Bow of Ohio would take over the powerful Appropriations Committee. Ultra-conservative H. Allen Smith of California would become chairman of the vital Rules Committee and Rep. John W. Byrnes of Wisconsin, of similar view, would head Ways and Means.

As the 1968 political campaign progresses, some candidates are trying to disassociate themselves from the presidential nominee of their party. A few may do this successfully but, based upon history, it is hard to see how that will work for most.

THE ONLY TIME in recent history that the party of a successful candidate failed to win control of the House of Representatives was in 1956 when Pres. Eisenhower achieved this dubious distinction. He not only lost the House, but the Senate, too.

It is true that in so-called off-year elections, the party of the occupant of the White House often has lost seats in Congress. But, when candidates have to run in the same election as the presidential nominee of their party, the fate of all the party candidates is usually shared.

It follows that the election of Humphrey or Nixon cannot be isolated from their own political parties, especially outside the South. Although the spotlight may focus on the personalities of the top candidates themselves, other candidates have just as great a stake in the presidential election.

The picture that is most upsetting to most trade unionists and liberals is that of a Nixon in the White House trying to appease a large Wallace vote. And he would have behind him an ultra-conservative Congress.

This is why trade unionists and most liberals now feel that the only hope for continued social and economic progress rests with Humphrey's election.

THE DEMAGOGUERY of George Wallace can best be offset by the truth about the kind of national administration he would bring, AFL-CIO Public Relations Dir. Albert J. Zack, center, tells reporters William Eaton, left, of the Chicago Daily News and Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press on Labor News Conference. The public affairs program is broadcast Tuesdays on Mutual Radio.

How To Buy:

Labor, Credit Unions Promote Group Auto Insurance Plans

By Sidney Margolius

AFTER 20 YEARS of rising auto insurance rates and widespread cancellations, several labor, credit union and co-op housing groups are achieving at least beginning breakthroughs in group coverage.

Group insurance won't solve all problems. But it is one of the most readily available ways to trim part of the present high cost, and also to elimininate arbitrary cancellations.

For example, while auto insurance companies take 25 to 35 cents of your insurance dollar for selling and administration expense on their individually sold policies, Blue Cross takes only 4 cents on its group hospital insurance policies. Even private companies take only 8 cents for group health insurance.

Agent's associations naturally have fought the group auto insurance idea very hard. Until recently, most state insurance departments have refused to approve group plans. Thus, some 15 years ago the Oregon state insurance superintendent turned down the pioneering effort by the state's AFL-CIO council to set up a group plan. Instead the council worked out a modified plan with Nationwide Insurance Co. of direct purchase by individual members.

In New York too, electrical workers in one large Long Island plant were balked by that state's insurance department from setting up a group plan.

Now, however, the Michigan Credit Union League received approval from the Michigan insurance department for a group auto insurance plan for the league's own employes. This is believed to be the nation's first employer's employe "group rated" auto insurance plan, in which all eligible employes pay the same rate.

In California, too, a local union has a group auto insurance contract.

Even more significantly, the New Jersey AFL-CIO is negotiating for the first statewide group auto insurance program for union members. Richard A. Lynch, an executive vice-president, reports that after a steady string of rate hikes, the council first decided that working people needed their own "public defender" to represent them in rate hearings before the state insurance department.

THE LABOR COUNCIL hired a lawer. He showed state Banking & Insurance Commissioner Charles R. Howell that the companies were making more money on their investment earnings than their so-called "underwriting" losses. So Howell denied the latest increase the insurers had sought.

Housing cooperatives also are seeking ways to solve the problem of high costs and arbitrary cancellations for their members. The United Housing Foundation, which operates a number of housing co-ops in New York City, has set up its own insurance agency to provide auto coverage for co-op members at relatively low rates.

Salvatore Mirenda, insurance analyst for the Port of New York Authority, recently reported that some 20 companies in various parts of the country now sell group auto policies to employe groups. He estimates that group rates can and should be at least 15 percent lower than individual coverage

The Michigan league's plan at this time will be limited to its own employes. All are guaranteed coverage, and the rates are guaranteed for three years. Robert Vanderbeek, president of the League Life Insurance Co., points out that rates will be the same for everybody except for possibly about 1 percent of the employes with especially severe records.

The Michigan AFL-CIO also is studying the league's plan to see if it can be adopted for union members in that state.

In the new Michigan plan, the group insurance is placed with a private company (Farm Bureau Insurance Group). However, the league also is studying the possibility of setting up its own auto insurance company to provide insurance for all its members, just as the League Life Insurance Co. now sells life insurance at low rates to Michigan credit union members.

One of several results of the fight labor unions and the labor papers have made on behalf of drivers, is that state insurance departments now are more sensitive to the problem of cancellations. If you do get cancelled, get in touch with your state insurance department at your state capital, or its local office if you live in a large city.

Wirtz Cites California Data:

Farm Job Gain Laid To End of Braceros

LABOR SEC. W. WILLARD WIRTZ reported that "not a single foreign contract worker will be employed in California crops in 1968."

This will be the first year since 1942 that the California fruit and vegetable crop has not used foreign contract field hands, Wirtz said.

"The absence of foreign agricultural workers in 1968," he declared, "represents an historic step toward healing the migrant worker sore in California and in the entire United States."

This spring, for the first time in 27 years, no temporary foreign farm workers were admitted anywhere in the United States for employment.

Last year, Wirtz noted, there were no foreign contract workers employed in California crops between January and late September. But by mid-October there were 5,900 working in the state's crops.

Wirtz said that the termination of Public Law 78 in December 1964 "signaled the eventual demise of the century-old practice of importing foreign farm laborers to the United States."

"What has happened in the four years since the end of this infamous program," he said, "represents an impressive story of progress for domestic farm workers in the State of California."

WIRTZ CITED these "heartening developments" since the termination of the mass importation of foreign agricultural workers in California:

- A 15.5 percent rise in man-months of domestic farm employment between 1964 and 1968: from 801,000 to 925,000 for the first eight months of each year.
- A 25.2 percent rise in hourly farm wage rates (without room and board) between 1964 and 1968: from $1.35 to $1.69 an hour.

Wirtz said that in every month of 1968 employment among domestic seasonal farm workers in California has topped employment for these field hands in the 1959-64 period, the last six "bracero" years.

In August 1968, he said domestic farm employment in the state reached 168,600, compared with an average of 130,600 for the month in the 1959-64 period.

Despite the increase in farm wages over the past four years, the U.S. wholesale price index for fresh and dried fruits and vegetables was lower this July than it was in July 1964, he said.

In July 1968, the wholesale price index for these commodities was 108.2, compared with 108:9 in July 1964, the last year of the mass importation of foreign workers in the United States.

It is apparent from this, he said, that wages play a small part in determining the prices farmers get for their produce. Increases in retail prices are largely the result of increased processing and distribution costs.

Wirtz also cited "very impressive" increases in the production of several former bracero-using crops between the 1960-64 period and 1968, showing "progress for California farmers."

He pointed out these production gains in former foreign-using crops between the two periods: tomatoes for processing—up 59.1 percent; strawberries—up 29.8 percent; lettuce—up 27.3 percent; celery—up 12.3 percent.

Soup to Nonsense:

September Starts a New Year With Memories of a Pencil Box

By Jane Goodsell

REMEMBER SETTING off for the first school day of the year? Maybe you wore a new plaid dress, stiff new shoes and a bright red ribbon in your hair. You almost certainly had fat new tablets and a brand new pencil box.

I remember lavishing more time on the selection of a new pencil box when I was in the third grade than I now spend choosing a new sofa. The color of the little square pencil sharpener and the shape of the eraser mattered enormously, and I wriggled in agonies of indecision trying to make up my mind which was the very best.

In addition to my bright and shiny new things, I trudged off for the first day of school with bright and shiny ambitions. Each year I resolved not to get confused by long division and fractions, and to keep my new notebooks unmarred by angry red error marks. I promised myself to keep my margins straight, to indent properly and to look up in the dictionary any words I didn't understand.

I still get that back-to-school feeling every year when fall comes around. September is the real beginning of a new year, a fresh start at life. The formal switch-over in January is a meaningless ritual.

January is a droopy, aimless, tag-end time of year. The holidays are over, winter is at its bleakest and spring is still far away. By January, it is evident that this is not, after all, going to be a year of great accomplishment. Too many mistakes have been made and too many error marks chalked up.

SOMEONE (I believe it was W. Somerset Maugham, but I'm not sure) said, 'In hell it is always three o'clock in the afternoon." That's what January is like. Inertia hangs as heavy as the leaden sky, dulling the mind and depressing the spirit.

Autumn by contrast is brisk, zippy, lively. There is an exhilarating tang in the air, and the leaves are turning red and gold. Summer is drawing to a close and, by this time, you've ready to settle down to schedules: getting up to the alarm clock and sitting down to dinner.

September is a new beginning, a time for starting things. It is the season to launch projects, to sign up for committees, to take up jogging, to learn to play the clarinet and to clean out the medicine cabinet.

Millions in Grants:

Union Scholarships Mount As New College Year Opens

More and more young people are being helped to a college education by scholarships and grants from the nation's trade unions as a new academic year begins.

Some of the scholarships are granted without regard to union membership; others are reserved for members and their sons and daughters.

The Service Employes awarded scholarships worth $2,000 each over a four-year period to 10 students. The awards are made annually to children of SEIU members on the basis of high school records and College Entrance Examination Board tests.

Winners are: Robert E. Altomare, Bronx, N.Y.; Rosemary Birardi, North Merrick, N.Y.; John R. Mallin, North Smithfield, R.I.; Charles W. Singer, Jersey City, N.J.; Marvin R. Cox, Council Bluffs, Iowa; Stephen R. Dartt, East St. Louis, Ill.; Jerry DeCicco, Chicago; Nancy Ann Moen, Mt. Vernon, Wash.; Michael T. McGrorey, San Francisco, and Gabriel Edith Heinrich, Atikokan, Ont.

The Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers have announced 10 winners of scholarships of $1,000 each to be paid to the college or university designated. Started in 1959, the John P. Burke Scholarship Awards are a memorial to the man who led the union for 48 years, prior to his death in 1966.

The awards went to Daniel H. Abbott, Rumford Pt., Me.; Teresa Thompson, Pine Bluff, Ark.; Edward J. Arcuri, Hudson Falls, N.Y.; Bonita Herndon, West Linn, Ore.; Linda L. Fischer, St. Paul, Minn.; Penny R. Mendennall, West Salem, Ohio; James K. Smith, Williamston, N.C.; Suzanne Lamarre, Sturgeon Falls, Ont.; Gilles Gaudent, Baie Comeau, Que., and Richard J. Tomas, Campbell River, B.C.

Nine children of seamen are winners of $2,500 annual scholarships for four years awarded by the National Maritime Union. Competition for the scholarships, given each year, is administered for the union by Educational Testing Service. This year's awards bring the total scholarships given by NMU since 1958 to nearly $600,000.

This year's winners are: Charles E. Brooks and Jackie Chuong, New York City; Lillian Mulero, Brooklyn, N.Y.; Linda C. Pierce, Warwick, N.Y.; William B. Westerfield, Maywood, N.J.; Deborah M. Gillespie, Ludington, Mich.; Randall D. Wilkins, Clute, Tex.; Joiclyn M. Lloyd, New Orleans, and Joan Marie Ellingsen, Seattle, Wash.

The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers announced winners of 12 scholarships under its unusual program which provides $2,500 annually in four-year awards to permit IBEW members to study for degrees in electrical engineering. The candidates, union members of five years who are under 30, must be nominated by business managers of local unions.

IBEW Winners

The scholarships went to Michael J. Baldwin, Seattle; Michael A. Bello, Vallejo, Calif.; Jack Clancy, Denver; Richard E. Davis, Chicago; Charles E. Grunewald, Austin, Minn.; James N. Jewett, Kansas City; Lynn G. Manan, Wilmington, Del.; Wallace R. Mayfield, Stockton, Calif.; Paul W. Peresta, Cleveland; Jack C. Rowland, Phoenix, Ariz., and Jerry L. Skinner, Columbus, Ga.

Ladies' Garment Workers Local 190 has granted $2,400 scholarships to five children of workers in the knitgoods industry in the Philadelphia area: Margaret Polich, Nelson Valdes, Deborah Simms, Kathleen Wynder and Annaliese M. Niesz.

Two scholarships, of $500 each, have been awarded by Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Local 408 in New York. These awards by the optical workers local, open to members under 26 and children of members, are based on college aptitude tests and essays. Winners are Thomas Fazio and Seymour Eisenberg.

Another union granting scholarships on the basis of scholastic records and essays—Utility Workers Local 1-2 in New York—has granted 14 scholarships under its program this year. The scholarships range in value from $2,000 down to $500.

William G. Robinson received the top $2,000 award and Joseph Mayr won the second prize of $1,500. Four $1,000 scholarships went to Matthew K. Gilmore, Mary McCarty, Joseph E. Milvihill and Howard K. Weber. Eight $500 awards were given to Peter P. Farrell, Margaret MacLean, Robin S. Pascale, Jessie A. Rollison, Gerald J. Scilla, Alexander S. Balko, Irene R. Chiucchini and Anthony B. Abbruscato.

Winners of $500 scholarships are Albert Ramirez, Plainview; Pamel Gillis, San Antonio; Nancy Carol Smith, Abilene; Kathy Sue Jone, Marqez; Michalyn Miller, Dallas; Marci Stoterau, Arlington; Jo Nell Salling, Rosenberg; Mary Elizabeth Jones, Houston; Naoma Lane, Coleman, and Rebecca Camacho, Brownwood.

Contestants in the program, sponsored by the State Building Trades Council and 10 AFL-CIO unions, were judged on test scores, school record, financial need and essays written on the subject, "Strikes and Democracy."

Natchez City Workers Vote to Join Laborers

Natchez, Miss.—Employes of the Natchez city sanitation and street departments have voted in a secret ballot to be represented by Laborers' Local 747.

Workers of the departments voted 47 to 8 for union representation in an election authorized by Mayor Tony Byrne and the Board of Aldermen.

SOLIDARITY between the democratic trade union movement of France and the AFL-CIO is reaffirmed by Andres Bergeron, general secretary of Force Ouvriere as he presents his federation's 20th anniversary commemorative medal to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Earlier, in New York, Bergeron addressed the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

Tax Equity Stressed To Ease Plight of Poor

San Francisco—Organized labor believes that the nation's tax burden must be shared "equitably" and such equity "is best served through progressive taxes based on income," an AFL-CIO representative declared here.

By that yardstick, unions oppose sales taxes because they "depart from the principle of ability to pay, and shift the burden in the direction of those who can bear it least," said Arnold Cantor, Dept. of Research economist.

Cantor presented the federation's views on taxes at the 61st annual meeting of the National Tax Association. On hand were 600 tax administrators, educators and government officials.

An Unfair Tax

Sales taxes are levied on consumption and based on a premise that income marked for saving "shall enjoy privilege of tax exemption," Cantor pointed out.

Thus, he continued, they cannot help but be unfair to lower income groups since statistics show that "a smaller percentage of a smaller income is saved than that of a larger one."

In fact, he noted, it is mainly at the low end of the income scale where "consumption expenditures frequently exceed income."

Cantor stressed that since the nation now has a commitment to do something about the "crisis of poverty" amidst plenty, it would be foolish to compound the problem with increasingly unfair taxes.

Taxes to support the nation's expenditures to alleviate poverty should be based on ability to pay, he said, adding, "Now is certainly not the time to entertain tax policies that would aggravate a crisis situation."

'Regressive Methods'

Cantor cited statistics which show that general sales and property taxes now account for 60 percent of the tax revenues collected at the state and local levels, while individual and corporate income taxes make up only 14 percent of these revenues.

These figures, he added, prove that the states and localities "have more than exploited regressive tax methods" and now must turn to adopting "truly progressive taxes on income" if they are to provide necessary public services.

Cantor also lashed out at business groups who have recently advanced a "value added" tax as either a partial or full alternative to present federal corporate income taxes.

Although this tax is added during stages of production, Cantor said, it comes out as a "sales tax under another name" and is paid by the consumer in the final cost of the product.

In summary, Cantor concluded that since taxes are being used to iron out cyclical shifts and promote economic growth, "equity, though always important, has now become imperative."

Firm Ordered To Back Up Plea on Wages

A North Miami, Fla., firm failed to bargain in good faith when it refused to give the Steelworkers financial information to substantiate its claim of inability to pay better wages, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled.

The three-judge court upheld a 1964 decision of the National Labor Relations Board that Stanley-Artex Windows, a division of the Stanley Works, was pleading "inability to pay" when it told the union four years ago that it could not pay higher wages and other benefits and remain competitive. The board ordered the company to provide data to back up its claim.

The judges also supported other NLRB findings—that the strike resulting from the company's refusal to bargain was an unfair labor practice strike, that Stanley broke the law by failing to reinstate some striking employes to their former positions, and later by laying off recalled strikers instead of new employes.

On the ability to pay question, the court said company letters to employes, and the statement of a company negotiator, "crystallized into a claim of inability to pay more than it was offering and remain competitive."

If a claim of inability to pay "is important enough to present in the give and take of bargaining, it is important enough to require some sort of proof of its accuracy," the judges said, quoting a Supreme Court decision in NLRB v. Truitt.

The appeals court dismissed other union and company petitions and ordered Stanley to comply with a 1967 NLRB order.

Vocational Aid Education Bill Moves Ahead

would go up to $852 million for the 1970 fiscal year. Authorizations for most of the programs are continued into the 1971 and 1972 fiscal year, bringing the total for the four years above $3 billion.

- A new program of vocational teacher training grants and inclusion of training for new industrial skills in regular high school courses.
- Earmarking of 15 percent of construction funds for vocational schools and 25 percent of new program funds for ghetto areas.

Head Start Study

The Senate bill included a labor-opposed amendment transferring the Head Start program for preschool children from the Office of Economic Opportunity to the Office of Education. The conferees agreed to leave Head Start in OEO but instructed the President to recommend to Congress by next March whether the program should be shifted to another agency.

The conferees also directed a study, to be completed by next June on whether the poverty program's Job Corps should be phased out in favor of residential skill centers available to all young people.

A key section of the new legislation, which requires final approval by the House and Senate before going to the President, consolidates all vocational education laws within the 1963 Vocational Education Act and applies its standards in the allocation of federal funds.

The effect of this, the AFL-CIO said in testifying for the legislation, would be to provide up-to-date job training "in the total spectrum of all occupations."

Cigarmakers Pressing Organizing Campaign

The 34th convention of the Cigarmakers in Washington, D. C., focused on two major problems facing the 104-year-old union—automation and runaway cigar manufacturers.

In a report to delegates, Pres. Mario Azpeitia discussed the problems and reported on the union's efforts to offset them through increased organizing efforts.

He noted that while automation came early in the cigar industry—the first cigar-making machine was introduced in the early 1900s—"its impact has steadily increased, with more and more jobs being lost."

Azpeitia estimated that some 25,000 workers employed in the entire industry annually turn out about 8 billion cigars compared with a half century ago, when 125,000 workers produced about 4 billion cigars.

On the runaway issue, Azpeitia noted that three major cigar companies—Consolidated, General and Bayuk—are now operating plants in Puerto Rico.

He discussed the union's efforts in Congress to secure higher wage levels in the commonwealth—to remove the lure to runaways—and also CMIU's attempt to organize the Puerto Rico plants.

The latter effort is hampered, he pointed out, because "while workers there are underpaid by U.S. standards, they find the jobs an improvement over their former lot, and they fear the companies will leave if wages go up."

Southern Drive

To offset its problems, CMIU is "relentlessly" pushing an organizing drive among non-union cigar makers in the United States, particularly in Florida and Alabama, with help from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization, Azpeitia said.

New members gained during the past three years "just about balanced out" losses sustained by automation and runaways, he told the convention.

During a tour of Washington, the delegates placed flowers at the statue of Samuel Gompers, the AFL's first president and a pioneer leader of the Cigarmakers. The statue is located on Massachusetts Ave. between 11th and 12th Streets, N.W.

Humphrey Approved

The convention unanimously endorsed Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey for President. A resolution stressed his strong support for labor's goals and noted his endorsement would be "according to the Gompers' credo of supporting labor's friends."

Azpeita was re-elected to his sixth four-year term, and all of the union's incumbent vice presidents were also re-elected. They are Helen G. Milberger of Scranton, Pa.; Maude Lenz, Richmond, Va.; Mary Barber and Elimina Crews, Jacksonville, Fla.; Leona Wolford, Waycross, Ga.; and Mauricio Torre, Joe Burrescia, Louis M. Diaz and Frank Diez, all of Tampa, Fla.

New Negro Foundation Rejects Race Separatism

Philadelphia—Racial "separatism" as a way of life in America was soundly repudiated at a week-long founding convention of the American Foundation for Negro Affairs here.

Black leaders from all parts of the country, including representatives of labor, participated in the initial meeting of the new organization which will chart a "10-year plan" for Negro progress.

AFNA plans to set up branches in every state and divisions in cities to help direct Negroes into all areas of life, including government, science, arts, civil rights, education, religion, business and labor.

The organization also will serve as an information bureau on all Negro matters and set up ways and means of channeling incomes and resources of the Negro population into productive uses in the economy.

U.S. District Court Judge Leon Higginbotham, the foundation's president, condemned Negro extremists who advocate the separatist idea, which he said can only lead down the road to further "strife and polarization."

The organization, he told the 800 delegates, will seek to have "all the remaining barriers to integration eradicated rather than have barriers continued or voluntarily extended by the black community."

Samuel L. Evans, head of AFNA's board and chairman of the Anti-poverty Action Commission of Philadelphia, also contrasted the new organization's view with that of black power advocates and other extremists.

"Black hands must work together and within America if there ever is to be any hope for a harmonious American community," he declared.

Robert McGlotten of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights spoke up for labor, pointing out that integration of workers in jobs and unions serves as "a complete repudiation of separatism schemes."

Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, appearing during a campaign swing through Philadelphia, said the new organization can make certain that "your children won't have to suffer the indignities that some of you have suffered."

Other speakers included Dr. Horace Mann Bond, educator father of Georgia State Rep. Julian Bond, and Gov. Raymond Shafer of Pennsylvania, both of whom praised AFNA's objectives.

Pres. Frederick O'Neal of Actors Equity is one of nine persons named to serve on the board of directors of the new organization.

'Gimmick' Boomerangs:

Gift Grapes 'Sour,' Congressman Told

California grapes are not wanted, even as a gift, as long as those who pick them are deprived of decent wages and living conditions, Rep. Robert Mathias (R-Calif.) has learned.

Mathias delivered 150 six-pound packages of the grapes to colleagues in the House of Representatives and seemed surprised when some of the recipients returned them to his door.

"I'm squishy soft on California grapes," said Rep. James H. Scheuer (D-N. Y.) in a quote recalling one made by Maryland Gov. Spiro T. Agnew, the GOP candidate for vice president.

Rep. William F. Ryan (D-N.Y.) said some grapes are sweet "but grape workers have suffered with this bitter fruit for too long a time."

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez (D-Tex.) said the grape distribution was a "gimmick" and "beyond contempt" because it added up to strikebreaking.

The congressmen were joined by office staffs and others who told Mathias "thanks, but no thanks." They will refuse to eat struck grapes again until the farm workers win "what millions of workers have enjoyed for 30 years—protection under the National Labor Relations Act" in organizing and bargaining, they told reporters.

Growers Adamant

California grape growers headed by the Giumarra Co. have refused to recognize the grape pickers' union or to bargain with it. More than a dozen other employers, including the DiGiorgio Corp., Paul Masson, Christian Brothers and others have signed contracts with the union, the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, AFL-CIO.

In Delano, Calif., UFWOC announced that Dir. Cesar Chavez returned to light duty after release from O'Connor Hospital in San Jose, Calif. He was treated for an old back injury.

UFWOC also scored Richard M. Nixon, Republican presidential candidate, for saying the grape boycott has nothing to do with wages or working conditions, and that such disputes should be settled by the National Labor Relations Board.

The union said that Nixon, "as a lawyer, if not as a presidential candidate," should know that farm workers are not permitted by law to appeal to the NLRB, since they are excluded from the law's coverage. Also he should know, it said, that consumer boycotts are not illegal, as Nixon implied.

Church Backing

In another development, the general board of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the USA adopted a statement calling on members and affiliated bodies "as a matter of Christian conscience and witness" to refrain "from the purchase or use of California table grapes until such time as union recognition and assurance of good faith collective bargaining are granted by the California growers."

There is "convincing evidence," the church board stated, that the cause of the California farm workers in UFWOC is a just cause and that the growers' resistance constitutes a denial of social justice and provides the basis for "continued exploitation" of farm workers.

Chavez and UFWOC have been trying for more than three years to win better conditions for field workers. Their strike and boycott have the full support of the AFL-CIO.

Walter L. Mitchell Dies At Chemical Convention

New Orleans—Shocked and saddened delegates to the Chemical Workers convention here joined in a memorial service for the president they had re-elected just two days earlier to a seventh term.

Walter L. Mitchell, 53, collapsed in his hotel room Sept. 19 after the fourth day's session of the convention and died soon after in a New Orleans hospital of a coronary occlusion.

The hushed, solemn convention session the next morning opened with a eulogy delivered by Vice Pres. Thomas E. Boyle and a tribute by the convention's memorials chairman.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany expressed his "deep regret" in a telegram to Sec.-Treas. Marshall Shafer and the convention. He said Mitchell's "long service to the trade union movement has marked him as a dedicated supporter of the interests of working people."

Meany also wired the AFL-CIO's condolences to Mrs. Mitchell, a former labor attorney who met her husband during a Chemical Workers strike in the phosphate mining industry.

The executive board of the ICWU, under the union's constitution, was to meet after seven days to elect a successor from among the board's membership. Terms of union officers had been extended from two years to four years at the convention shortly before Mitchell's unanimous re-election.

Mitchell, a native of Florence, Ala., went to work as a laborer at the Tennessee Valley Authority chemical, phosphates and nitrates plant after he graduated from high school.

He took college courses at night and moved up to a laboratory analyst post at TVA. In 1941, he organized his fellow laboratory workers into a federal labor union, and subsequently became an AFL staff organizer and first president of the TVA Council of Office, Technical & Service Unions.

After wartime service, he was elected a vice president and southern regional director of the newly-chartered Chemical Workers, studied law at night, and went on to earn a master's degree in law. Mitchell was elected ICWU president in 1956 by a 26-vote margin—and was re-elected without opposition at every subsequent convention.

In a brief final business session after the memorial, the convention delegates approved a mandatory strike fund proposal and raised minimum dues to $6 a month. Earlier the convention had voted a 50-cent per capita increase.

Cleveland was chosen as the site for the 1970 convention, and Las Vegas for the 1972 meeting.

Committee Backs Nomination:

Filibuster Launched To Bar Fortas Vote

By David L. Perlman

Michigan Republican Sen. Robert P. Griffin took two and one-half hours to read a 50-page speech to a handful of his colleagues.

South Carolina Democratic Sen. Ernest F. Hollings propped up a book of political memoirs and read page after page to an almost empty Senate chamber.

And Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield warned the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition that if it succeeded in preventing the Senate from voting on the confirmation of Supreme Court Justice Abe Fortas as the nation's chief justice, it would be "at the expense of the constitutional structure of the federal government."

The long-threatened filibuster against the confirmation of Fortas was on.

After nearly three months of delay and hearings that added up to a thick, 1,404-page volume, the Judiciary Committee had voted 11-6 to recommend that the Senate "advise and consent" to the Fortas nomination.

The committee, one of the most conservative in the Senate, detailed and answered the objections raised to the nomination. It cited the strong endorsement from leaders of the American Bar Association and concluded:

"Based upon the record of the hearing and upon a lifetime of distinguished accomplishment, it is our opinion that Justice Fortas is extraordinarily well qualified for the post to which he has been nominated.

"The Committee on the Judiciary therefore . . . recommends the nominee's confirmation by the U.S. Senate."

The filibuster began when Mansfield made the routine motion to "proceed to the consideration" of the nomination.

The motion is subject to debate, and under the Senate rules it takes a two-thirds majority of senators present and voting to set a time limit on the debate.

In the tradition of filibusters—from civil rights to repeal of Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b)—little attention was paid to the speakers who droned away the clock.

One Republican taking part in the filibuster—Hawaii's Sen. Hiram L. Fong—said frankly that he had nothing against Fortas, except that the nomination was made by Pres. Johnson in his last year in office.

"I would vote for Justice Fortas if the new President proposed him," Fong declared.

Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen earlier indicated his support for Fortas, but the majority of Senate Republicans rallied behind Griffin and his southern allies.

As Mansfield and Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) noted, this is the first filibuster in the Senate's history against confirmation of a Supreme Court nominee. There have been times in the past when the Senate has rejected a nominee, but it has never been prevented from voting on the issue.

The Senate set aside a farm tax relief bill which had become a catchall for unrelated legislation to take up the Fortas nomination. One of the "riders" tacked on to the bill was a labor-opposed amendment by Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.) which would drastically reduce the federal share of medicaid grants for states which have extended the program to persons with low incomes but above the indigent level. The "economy" move was passed, 44-25.

The director of the Agency for Intl. Development, William S. Goud, came before the Senate Appropriations Committee to plead for restoration of $365 million cut by the House from the already heavily slashed authorization for the foreign aid program.

He warned that it would cripple the Alliance for Progress, declaring that the amount voted by the House is "inadequate to meet even minimum objectives." The $1.24 billion House appropriation figure is 51 percent below the President's budget.

The power of the economy bloc which has dominated Congress this year was reflected in the latest appropriations bill enacted.

It carried $625 million for the model cities program—for which the President had sought $1 billion.

It provided $750 million for urban renewal programs—against a budget request of $1.3 billion.

And it provided $30 million of the $65 million sought for rent subsidies for low-income families.

Abel Scores Wallace Aide As Union Foe

ers rather than abide by the honest, legally demonstrated desires of its workers."

Abel said that "Mr. Wallace likes to portray himself as a friend of Steelworkers and all others who work for a living, but his labor record in Alabama and the anti-union performance of his supporters expose his real attitude toward the working man."

"The record of Mr. Wallace and his supporters in defiance of the rights of workers stands in sharp contrast to the outstanding record of Vice Pres. Humphrey in support of the objectives of labor," Abel stated.

He also pointed out that "Mr. Wallace likes to talk about law and order yet here is a case of a top Wallace lieutenant, not only ignoring the law, but promoting violence by recruiting strikebreakers."

The Steelworkers president said "it would be a sad day for workers if the anti-worker philosophy of George Wallace ever was allowed to occupy a place of influence in America."

U.S.-Japanese Labor Set Up Closer Ties

A major step toward closer ties between Japanese and American trade unionists was taken during a recent visit to Washington by members of the Japanese Confederation of Labor (DOMEI).

Members of the Japanese delegation which included Takuma Shigeeda, DOMEI general secretary, and Osamu Arakaki, DOMEI international affairs director, discussed their relationship with the AFL-CIO during a luncheon meeting which they attended as guests of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Meany greeted the delegation on behalf of the AFL-CIO and also as president of the Asian-American Free Labor Institute (AAFLI). AAFLI is a non-profit organization formed recently to promote free trade union activity in Asia.

During the meeting, representatives arrived at certain basic agreements between DOMEI and the AFL-CIO which will be discussed further in early November when DOMEI Pres. Takita visits Washington.

Meanwhile, the AFL-CIO Executive Council, which met after the AAFLI-DOMEI gathering, agreed to form a permanent subcommittee which will continue discussions on a semi-annual basis with a similar DOMEI subcommittee.

Tobacco Union Elects Vogt, Boosts Dues $1

Chicago—The Tobacco Workers elected new top officers at their 14th convention here; raised dues $1 per month to finance a new-member drive, and called on Congress to remove some restrictions on the tobacco industry's marketing and advertising methods.

Under a constitutional change supported by the officers, John O'Hare, president of the 35,000-member union since 1944, and R. J. Petree, secretary-treasurer since 1940, were mandated to retire at 65. To succeed them the convention named Vice Pres. Howard W. Vogt of Richmond, Va., as president, and Vice Pres. Homer Cole of Louisville, Ky., as secretary-treasurer.

O'Hare will stay on the job in an advisory capacity until next June. Petree will move to Orlando, Fla., in December to "enjoy the company of his grandchildren," he said. Meanwhile the newly elected officers have taken over their jobs officially.

New four-year terms were voted by the convention for Vice Presidents Rene Rondou, Wallace A. Mergler, Roy N. Pegram, William L. Banks, Jr., Wilton M. Parrish and Elizabeth Williams. Elected to fill vice presidential vacancies were Rudolph Hobby of Durham, N.C., Bobby T. Curtis of Louisville, O. J. Shaw of Petersburg, Va., and Leslie D. Branch of Richmond.

In reports to the convention, O'Hare, Petree and Vogt all recommended a dues hike with revenues, to be divided equally between local unions and the international union, to improve services and expand organizing activities.

O'Hare reported that many tobacco firms are expanding into other industries. Vogt noted that a reduction in working hours won by the union in its contracts has helped preserve the jobs of some 1,500 workers.

The convention voted support of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education and its register-and-vote activities. It urged all consumers to back the boycott of encylopedias and other books produced at the struck Tennessee plant of Kingsport Press; asked improvements in the social security law, and called on Congress to bar federal labor law violators from federal contract awards.

Delegates asked also that the National Labor Relations Act be rewritten to give greater protection to worker rights, including farm workers not now covered by the law. They urged repeal of Taft-Hartley Section 14(b) permitting states to outlaw union shop contracts.

O'Hare has worked for the international union since 1935 in union label education work, as a staff representative and officer. Petree started as a local union financial officer in 1931 and became secretary-treasurer of the international in 1940.

Wirtz Order Bars Unproved Tests for Jobs

Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz has acted to bar federal contractors from using employment tests that fail to accurately or fairly measure a worker's ability to perform the job for which he is being considered.

Wirtz did so by ordering all agencies to require contractors to present "evidence that the tests are valid for their intended purposes" as a condition of eligibility for contracts.

The Labor Dept.'s Office of Federal Contract Compliance, with the agency involved, will study the evidence to see that it conforms with Executive Order 11246. This requires government contractors to provide equal employment opportunity.

The order, which sets a series of minimum standards for determining if tests are valid, initially covers present and future contractors with more than 2,500 employes. Coverage will be extended at six-month intervals eventually to include all companies under the Executive Order.

Wirtz's order covers "any paper-and-pencil or performance measures," including those used to judge general intelligence; mental, learning and intellectual abilities; aptitudes; knowledge; proficiency; personality and temperament.

The order will also prohibit the use of other selection tests, such as unscored interviews, application forms and records of educational and work history when these are not valid to job performance, Wirtz said.

"Frequently, such tests have been found to be the principle reason for the failure of members of minority groups to obtain jobs they could perform or to receive promotions they deserve.

"My order is designed to correct this injustice."

Steps Up Campaign:

Humphrey Stresses Stake of Workers

focused on statements by Nixon backing the big corporate growers against efforts of the AFL-CIO Farm Workers to win recognition and bargain collectively and labeling the union boycott of California table grapes "illegal."

Nixon should have known, Humphrey said, that "the strike and the boycott arise from the simple fact that there is no coverage for farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act."

The Vice President continued to press the point, declaring that protections under the federal labor law should be available to farm workers just as they are to all other workers and that he will propose such amendments when he is elected President.

Before arriving in Sacramento, Humphrey announced at a campaign stop in Los Angeles that he would also propose a major overhaul of the social security program to include a 50 percent across-the-board increase in retirement benefits over four years plus a "built-in system of automatic increases" to keep pace with rising living costs.

Humphrey's Target: 'Nixon's the One'

Minneapolis—The difference between being President and being Vice President can be seen in the eagles on the two seals of office, Vice Pres. Humphrey told Minnesota AFL-CIO delegates.

The President's eagle, he pointed out, clutches a "whole bunch of olive branches in one claw. and a sheaf of arrows in the other" as symbols of his authority in peace and war.

"But look at mine," he said, pointing to a single olive sprig and a lone arrow.

Asked whom he was saving the arrow for, Humphrey replied:

"Nixon's the one."

His plan, he said, calls for raising the minimum monthly benefit over the four-year span from the present $55 for an individual and $82.50 for a couple to $100 and $150. He would also eliminate the $4 monthly charge for doctor bill coverage under medicare and expand that program to protect the elderly from "the heavy cost of prescription drugs."

'A Real Stake'

Humphrey's speeches to the two labor conventions called on the unionists to carry the message that "every union member—every working man—every person on a salary has a real stake in the outcome of this presidential election."

He ridiculed Republican platform pledges and Nixon's campaign claims concerning the economy as he pointed out that during the eight years when Nixon and Eisenhower were in charge, the nation "had three separate depressions." By contrast, he observed, during the Kennedy - Johnson - Humphrey years since 1960, the nation has had "90 consecutive months of prosperity."

Under these Democratic Administrations, Humphrey noted, per capita income after taxes and allowance for living-cost increases rose 32 percent against only 9 percent under Eisenhower and Nixon.

"That ought to tell you the difference between Nixon and Humphrey, between the Republicans and the Democrats," he said.

"I do not accept the Republican-Nixon 'trickle-down' theory of economic growth—with all the benefits going in at the top and trickling down to the working man.

"I believe in fat Democratic paychecks—not lean Republican ones."

The Vice President stood firmly on the Democratic plank on the war in Viet Nam. It lays out a "path to peace," he said, and "everyone prays for success in the Paris negotiations." He went on:

"I want to make it clear: If the war still continues on Jan. 20, 1969, and if I am your President, the first priority of the Humphrey-Muskie Administration will be to search relentlessly, to use every power of the government to honorably end the war."

He cited his long record for peace—his sponsorship of the Peace Corps, of Food for Peace, of the nuclear test bomb treaty.

Then he called on Nixon once more to support action now on the anti-proliferation treaty now awaiting Senate ratification.

"That treaty must be ratified," Humphrey declared. "Our failure to ratify it would be a terrible blow to humanity."

Noting his opponents' emphasis on the issue of crime and violence, the Vice President pointed to the fact that he is "the only candidate who, as mayor, has actually succeeded in eliminating crime in a major city."

"The first thing I did as mayor of Minneapolis," he said, "was to bring in a program to pay decent salaries to our policemen and establish the first 40-hour week in any police force in the country."

He reminded his audience that Wallace's devotion to "law and order" was "nowhere to be seen when he stood in the schoolhouse door and defied the courts of this land."

Humphrey observed that while Nixon is no "racist," the Nixon-Agnew-Strom-Thurmond "axis" makes for some "strange bedfellows."

He recalled how Thurmond had walked out of the Democratic convention in 1948 after Humphrey had led the fight for a strong civil rights plank. Thurmond, he noted, walked into the 1968 Republican convention with its nominees. And it has been Thurmond and his fellow Dixiecrats, he said, who have persisted in attempting to limit the powers of the Supreme Court ever since its 1954 decision ordering school desegregation.

"That court can be changed for the next 25 years by the next President," Humphrey warned. "I know the forces that are trying to turn back the clock."

LABOR SUPPORTS Vice Pres. Humphrey on the basis of his record in public office, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said on the nationally televised Meet the Press program. From labor's viewpoint, Humphrey "has an absolutely perfect record" as a mayor, senator and Vice President—in sharp contrast to the public records of Nixon and Wallace, Meany said.

been engaged in a massive war effort to preserve the freedom of South Viet Nam and it has met this economic challenge without wage or price controls."

This preservation of a free economy, he added, represents "an extraordinary and unparalleled achievement of Administration policy, under the most difficult circumstances."

'Hard and Clear'

Nixon, he said, ignores these facts, but "no amount of statistical juggling" by the candidate can obscure the "hard and clear" truth:

"The American worker has been better off during the eight years of Kennedy, Johnson and Humphrey than at any other eight-year period in history.

"During that time, the worker engaged in manufacturing, married and supporting two children, has had a total increase in real wages of $14.30 a week. During the Eisenhower-Nixon years, the comparable figure was $6.84.

"During the eight years of Kennedy, Johnson and Humphrey there has been no recession; the Eisenhower-Nixon record was three recessions in eight years.

"During the past eight years, 10 million more people have become employed and unemployment has dropped by one million, a decline of almost 26 percent."

These are truths, Meany concluded, "and campaign oratory won't change them."

during the day—is directed toward all of the gripes and grievances that the people of America have," Meany commented.

"But we know Wallace's record. We know the standard of living in Alabama.

"We identify Wallace for what he is, not what he says he is, but what he is. And he is a racist, there's no question about it. He has proved this over the years."

And, Meany noted, while some union members in the North as well as the South "are being taken in by this demagogic appeal," it is misleading to single out union members as a base of Wallace support. "Wallace is going to get votes from other people than trade union members, I am quite sure."

Meany sharply rejected the suggestion that the labor movement has become "too tied to the establishment."

The union movement, he said, "is responsible for the fact that we have a dynamic high wage and affluent society, but the organized trade union movement has not forgotten that there are millions of people in this country who are left behind, who are not sharing in this affluent society."

As to whether labor has become "too affluent," Meany replied, "Well, I don't buy that. I don't think it is quite affluent enough."

The AFL-CIO president said he did not consider it either politically necessary or even possible for Humphrey to "move away from the President and the Administration" in the campaign. "After all," he said, "there is such a thing as the Johnson-Humphrey Administration" and it is hardly possible "that a man can run for President by repudiating his own administration."

Meany acknowledged and reiterated his condemnation of "dirty-necked and dirty-mouthed" demonstrators. When asked, "Didn't labor unions achieve their successes through picketing and demonstrating?" he replied:

"Not by putting obscene phrases on their foreheads or doing the things that I have seen, myself, done in Chicago, which you couldn't possibly describe on a program.

"Yes, we picketed. That is showing protest and that is showing dissent and we have no objection to dissent. We have no objection to protest. In fact, we have had long experience with picketing and protesting. . . . But these organized demonstrators in Chicago, for instance, went far beyond the normal avenues of protest."

No, Meany assured the press panelists, he doesn't plan to resign if Humphrey is defeated in the election. The labor movement, he said, continues to "make advances" despite setbacks. "You do the best you can. . . . So far as the idea of my resigning is concerned, just forget it. I have no intention of resigning."

As for the Alliance for Labor Action recently formed by the Auto Workers and the Teamsters, Meany said: "I think it is kind of a strange alliance, but . . . when I heard about it, I just said 'mazel tov' "—the Yiddish phrase of congratulations.

On organizational rivalry, "We are not going to try to raid their members. If they raid us, then naturally our unions will retaliate. . . . We have no desire to engage in a war. The AFL-CIO is a voluntary institution. Anyone who wants to leave it has a perfect right to leave it. But if they leave and raid, that is another thing. We will raid back, I suppose."

'Independent' Joins Furniture Union

South Haven, Mich.—Employes of the Everett Piano Co. voted to join the Furniture Workers after 30 years of affiliation with a small "independent" union.

The firm was a small family-owned concern until its sale to the giant Hammond Organ Co., Chicago. Shortly after the takeover, the company began a production speedup and rate cuts designed to increase profits, UFWA said. At that point the workers found their small union was powerless to deal with a huge corporation.

Humphrey Drive Picks Up Momentum, New Support

HOME STATE LABOR gave Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey a roaring welcome at the Minnesota AFL-CIO convention attended by 1,000 delegates. There and before 1,500 delegates to the California AFL-CIO convention Humphrey assailed Richard Nixon as a congressman and senator who never voted with working people on a single issue.

Muskie Hits Key Theme In Election

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie contrasted Democratic prosperity with Republican recessions, lashed at the "hate" candidacy of George Wallace, silenced hecklers and won applause and cheers in campaign appearances criss-crossing the nation.

In Detroit, at the Michigan State COPE convention, and in a tour of midwestern industrial cities, Muskie spoke of jobs, unemployment and opportunity for a better life.

He reminded his audiences that in 1961, at the start of the Kennedy-Johnson-Humphrey era, "the economy was stagnant and sluggish—still suffering from the third recession" in eight years of a Republican Administration.

By contrast, Muskie noted, "the Democratic Party has managed the longest and most productive period of economic growth in American history. For 90 consecutive months, there has been economic expansion with no recession.

"During the years when Mr. Nixon was Vice President, the rich got richer. But ordinary people didn't do so well."

'Dismal' Wallace Record

As for Wallace, Muskie ticked off the dismal record of Alabama under Wallace as governor—its low ranking in labor laws, education, workmen's compensation, and its high ranking in crime and disorder.

"George Wallace's record is one of indifference to the welfare of those who work for wages, who want a better education, and those who want a better life for themselves, their families and their neighbors."

The Democratic vice presidential candidate returned to Washington to cast his vote in the Senate for ending a filibuster—and to field questions from Washington newsmen at a National Press Club luncheon.

He told the newsmen that the key issue in the election is whether Americans can live together in harmony. If we cannot, he warned, the "consequences will be disastrous."

Wallace, he said, is "probing all the sore spots in America in simplistic terms—and getting a response."

Countering this "divisive appeal," Muskie declared, is "the highest priority action program" in the campaign. "It would be an incredible tragedy" if Wallace were elected, he said.

In another appearance, Muskie described Nixon as "somewhat of a modulated Wallace. . . . He's say-

Broadcast, Rallies Lift Campaign

By John M. Barry

A new, buoyant mood marked the campaign of Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey amid growing signs that his drive for the presidency was beginning to gather momentum.

Humphrey himself exuded confidence as he capped one of his best weeks since winning the Democratic nomination with a three-day swing through the South, declaring that his campaign had "turned the corner." And observers agreed that the crowds that greeted him at stops from the Pacific Northwest to Jacksonville, Fla., were picking up steadily, both in size and enthusiasm.

The week also included a major foreign policy address to the nation over network television. The Vice President announced in the broadcast that if elected he would seek to shorten the war in Viet Nam by risking a halt in the bombing of the North if Hanoi showed genuine interest in peace.

Humphrey continued to hammer away at the conservative economic record of Richard M. Nixon, his Republican opponent, and the "strategy of organized hate" adopted by George C. Wallace, the third-party candidate.

In Portland, Ore., he recalled the "dismal, disheartening years of AFL-CIO Blasts Filibuster:

'Tragic' Vote Kills Fortas Nomination

"The Senate abdicated its responsibility" in allowing a filibuster to prevent a vote on the nomination of Justice Abe Fortas to Chief Justice, the AFL-CIO declared. It warned that this "craven performance" could, if allowed in the future, "make government impossible."

Federation Pres. George Meany pointed out in a statement that the use of the filibuster to block the nomination was "even more nefarious" than its use to block legislation because the Senate is "mandated by the Constitution to 'advise and consent' on such presidential appointments."

Meany noted that the Senate neither advised nor consented nor refused to consent, thus abdicating its responsibilities under the U.S. system of government.

The filibuster against the Fortas nomination, led by Senate conservatives, was to some extent an attempt to seek revenge against the rulings of the Supreme Court.

After the motion to shut off debate and kill the filibuster failed, Fortas asked the President to withdraw his nomination. He noted that the Supreme Court was about to go back into session and said continuation of the controversy would be damaging to the court and the nation.

"I hope that my withdrawal will help to put in motion a process by which there will be an end to destructive and extreme assaults upon the court," Fortas wrote.

Meany said the AFL-CIO deeply regrets the action and that "we share the President's great faith in Justice Fortas and firmly believe he would have made a fine Chief Justice." Terming the filibuster "that shabbiest parliamentary tactic," Meany added, that "once again the democratic process has been thwarted by a minority of senators who refuse to allow a vote on the issue."

Pres. Johnson described the Sen-

Meany Spurs Strike Aid to Upholsterers

Members of the Upholsterers have been on strike against Hillenbrand Industries since June 2 over basic trade union issues and should have the "complete support of the united labor movement," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a message to all union presidents.

More than 700 union members have been picketing Batesville, Ind., plants of the Batesville Casket Co. and the Hill-Rom Hospital Equipment Co. without much public attention.

Meany said one major problem facing the strikers is the "complete management domination of Batesville, including ownership of the

Grape Boycott Sends Sales Down Sharply

Baltimore, Md.—Grape sales in this area dropped 48 percent in the first two months of a union-organized boycott against California table grapes, the Baltimore Sun reported.

The same paper quoted the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture and the California State Dept. of Agriculture as saying that table-grape shipments to the nation's 20 largest metropolitan areas have declined an average of 15 percent below last year, though this year's crop is 13 percent larger.

The Los Angeles Times noted that "behind the boycott of California's table grapes is the decades-long, bitter and unsuccessful effort to organize farm workers who are among the lowest paid workers in the nation."

Its news service reported recently that small bands of farm workers have visited every major city in the United States, and several in Canada, in the "most massive boycott of its kind in history"—an effort that has become a new cause for organized labor, in cooperation with churches and other groups.

The AFL-CIO's United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, chartered three years ago with Cesar Chavez as director, has succeeded in winning more than a dozen collective bargaining agreements from the wine grape industry but none from the united table grape growers.

It launched its nationwide boy-

Broadcast Series Set on '68 Issues

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany will make a series of four five-minute, nationwide radio broadcasts on the issues in the 1968 political campaign, the federation announced.

The series, directed to AFL-CIO members and their families, will be on the National Broadcasting Co. radio network. The programs will be aired Friday evenings at 7:45 p.m. (EST) starting Oct. 11.

Some stations may carry the broadcasts at a different hour, the AFL-CIO said, and it advised checking with local stations for the exact broadcast time.

House Upholds Desegregation Enforcement

The House reversed itself and upheld the right of the government to withhold federal funds from school systems that use subterfuge to avoid desegregation—in violation of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

It took intricate parliamentary maneuvering and two rollcalls to accomplish. But at the end, language which would have barred the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare from enforcing school desegregation was stripped from an $18 billion appropriations bill.

The language had originally been written into the bill by a Mississippi congressman—Rep. Jamie Whitten—and accepted by the House.

The Senate had then taken the segregationist sting out of the restriction. It said HEW would be prohibited only from withholding funds from schools which do not transfer students to overcome racial inbalance. Since HEW has never had such a policy, the modified language would not affect its program.

Taft-Hartley Injunction Suspends Dock Strike

New York—The Longshoremen directed 75,000 striking members to return to their posts in ports from Maine to Texas in compliance with a federal restraining order under the injunction process of the Taft-Hartley law.

ILA members struck after their contract expired Sept. 30 and returned Oct. 3 to the job of loading and unloading some 100 ships in Atlantic and Gulf Coast ports.

It was the seventh time that a T-H injunction has been used against the ILA, and the 29th time against any union. ILA members have struck again, in every case but one, after the 80-day "cooling off" period expired.

Pres. Johnson halted the dockers' strike when a three-member inquiry board he had appointed held hearings here and reported to the White House that the U.S. economy and the national defense effort would be imperiled if the work stoppage continued.

Military Cargoes O.K.

ILA Pres. Thomas W. Gleason denied this. Not only are union men continuing to handle military cargoes, as in past ILA strikes, but the national economy has not been damaged, he said in announcing the union will appeal the injunction to the Supreme Court if necessary.

Gleason told the presidential inquiry board that the T-H injunction route is preferred by employers because it frees them from the need for bargaining. He asked: "Why should they reach agreement with the union when they know the government will bail them out with an injunction?"

U.S. District Judge Sylvester J. Ryan issued a 10-day restraining order and set Oct. 9 as the date of a hearing on whether the injunction should be extended to the full 80-day period ending Dec. 19.

The union has been trying since July to negotiate a new agreement replacing the four-year pact expiring this year.

In August, Gleason and other members of the union's Atlantic Coast District wage scale committee made a new proposal for settling the argument over wages and conditions, and asked the employers to respond by Sept. 15.

Major Issues

Major issues in the negotiations for a master contract covering not only New York but all the other ports are these, the union said: a guarantee of 2,080 hours work a year; wages of $4 an hour the first year; pension benefits of $300 a month at age 50 after 20 years of service; a provision that all containers be loaded and stripped at the pier.

The employers, represented by the New York Shipping Association, agreed shortly before contract expiration to the union's proposed wage minimums, guaranteed work hours and pension terms. But, the union said, they wanted to set aside a 1967 arbitrator's award on seniority and also to weaken the royalty fund set up in 1959 to protect workers who lose worktime on containerships—those carrying cargo in containers or boxes.

An improved pension plan would, the union said, remove 3,000 longshoremen from the work rolls in New York Harbor alone.

The ILA said two representatives of the U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service have sat in on all negotiating sessions since the talks began — Daniel Fitzpatrick and Robert Kennedy. Just before the strike started, the President named an inquiry board including David L. Cole, chairman; Msgr. George G. Higgins and Peter Seitz.

AFGE Gains Biggest Unit At Air Base

Oklahoma City—The American Federation of Government Employes won a smashing 3-1 victory at Tinker Air Force Base here to win exclusive bargaining rights for more than 21,000 workers.

AFGE Pres. John F. Griner said the base, made up of both blue collar and white collar employes, is the largest single bargaining unit ever won in the federal service.

The vote for AFGE's Local 916 was 11,424 to 3,936 for no union. An additional 1,500 challenged ballots were not counted because they would not have affected the outcome.

Griner said the AFGE, with more than 300,000 members, now holds bargaining rights for more than 450,000 federal employes in nearly 900 bargaining units.

Conservative Alliance Bars Fortas Vote

ate's failure to act as "historically and constitutionally tragic."

The President expressed the hope that the Senate would never again fail to carry out its constitutional duties and "hereafter will act by majority rule."

A coalition of most Republicans and conservative Democrats launched a filibuster which prevented the Senate from even voting on a motion to consider the Fortas nomination—which had been approved by an 11-6 vote of the Judiciary Committee.

Under the Senate rules, it takes a two-thirds vote to limit debate. The majority for halting the filibuster was a narrow 45-43—although several of the senators voting against cloture had indicated they favored the nomination.

The cloture effort—an uphill battle in any event—was doomed when Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirksen announced a few days before the vote that he would not support debate limitation.

Dirksen had earlier praised Fortas highly and expressed support for the nomination. But his enthusiasm dimmed as a majority of Senate Republicans swung behind Michigan Republican Robert P. Griffin, who organized the filibuster.

On the rollcall for cloture, 35 Democrats and 10 Republicans voted to limit debate; 24 Republicans and 19 Democrats were opposed.

The withdrawal of the nomination left Earl Warren continuing as Chief Justice, despite his announced desire to resign. It also nullifies the President's nomination of Homer Thornberry as associate justice of the Supreme Court, since there is now no vacancy.

A mixture of motives was apparent in the filibuster. Some Republicans said frankly that their only interest was in allowing the next President—who they hoped would be Richard Nixon—to make the appointments.

The southern opposition to the court was largely because of its leadership in desegregation rulings, beginning with the 1954 decision ending segregated school systems.

And some senators of both parties saw an opportunity to make a record of protest against unpopular and often little-understood Supreme Court decisions dealing with rights of defendants, due process of law and free speech.

'Rebel' District Defiant:

N. Y. Schools Open, Dispute Simmers

New York—More than 53,000 public school teachers returned to their classrooms after an 11-day stayout but a renewed revolt in a "rebel" school district provoked the threat of another walkout.

Mayor John V. Lindsay (R) and the school superintendent reached agreement with the United Federation of Teachers—Local 2 of the AFL-CIO Teachers—on ending the work stoppage caused by the refusal of the Ocean Hill-Brownsville community school board to reinstate 110 teachers dismissed last May. But when schools reopened Sept. 30 the semi-autonomous Brooklyn district defied the agreement and voted not to accept the teachers.

Disturbances at several of the Ocean Hill-Brownsville schools were so menacing to teacher safety, UFT Pres. Albert Shanker said, that he foresaw a "50-50 chance" of another strike. The union's future course of action was being debated by the UFT executive board as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

In another development, the city met the threat of strikes by 43,000 of its uniformed employes —firemen, police and sanitationmen — by calling on former United Nations Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg to mediate the contract disputes. Members of all three unions voted to reject city contract offers they called inadequate to meet rising living costs.

Trouble between the teachers and the "decentralized" Brooklyn district board began at the end of the last school year. The board, moving to gain complete control of teacher hiring, sent notices to 19 teachers that their services were no longer required, effective immediately.

The action was protested by the union as a violation of its contract with the city and an invasion of teacher rights to due process—the right of an accused individual to know the charges against him, to face his accusers and to have a fair hearing. None of these rights were observed, the UFT charged.

When the district board refused to budge, 300 other teachers walked out and 100 of them were still out when the new semester began. The union continued pressing the city to enforce its orders but no real enforcement effort began until the union agreed to end its stayout.

The city assigned uniformed police to prevent disorder at eight of the district schools.

In a later development, the Ocean Hill-Brownsville board directed School Administrator Rhody McCoy to refuse reassignment to the fired teachers. McCoy told newsmen he will act "in due time" to carry out the order.

Senate Rollcall Vote On Fortas Filibuster

The Senate on Oct. 1 voted 45-43 in favor of halting a filibuster against a motion to consider Pres. Johnson's nomination of Associate Justice Abe Fortas for Chief Justice. The effort to limit debate failed because it did not receive the two-thirds majority required by Senate rules.

Labor supported the position of the 35 Democrats and 10 Republicans who voted to end the filibuster. Opposed were 24 Republicans and 19 Democrats.

Unanimous Vote:

Rubber Union Backs Democratic Ticket

Denver, Colo.—Rubber Workers' delegates wound up their 26th biennial convention by voting unanimously to endorse the candidacies of Hubert H. Humphrey and Edmund S. Muskie and all other liberal candidates.

They pledged to "urge and encourage all union members, their families and friends to devote all possible time to electing the Humphrey-Muskie team, and to senators and congressmen and all other candidates who are favorable to the platform which is good for America."

The resolution stressed that "the Republican Party along with the American Independent Party have nominated candidates for the presidency of this country who have voted for and supported legislation that would weaken and destroy the labor movement in the United States."

A surprise visitor to the convention on its final day was Mrs. Edmund Muskie, who was campaigning in the Denver area for her husband.

The convention earlier had reelected the union's three top officers and voted a constitutional change which will raise dues and build up a $15.3 million strike benefit fund.

ALA Studied

The closing session also saw the delegates debate the union's relationship to the Alliance for Labor Action (ALA). They authorized the officers to explore affiliation with the ALA but made clear they had no desire to jeopardize the URW's standing with the AFL-CIO in order to do so.

A resolution authorizing the URW executive board to attend a proposed conference of the ALA in early 1969 and to join the alliance was amended to read: "That such action by the Intl. Executive Board would not take place if it has been finally determined that such action would result in expulsion from the AFL-CIO."

Much of the debate centered on whether affiliation with the ALA would mean disaffiliation with the AFL-CIO. Both Pres. Peter Bommarito and Sec.-Treas. Ike Gold took the microphone to urge passage of the resolution as amended.

Stating the position of the officers, Bommarito said, "There is no purpose for the officers to disaffiliate from the AFL-CIO. If there is a meeting called, we will attend and we will listen. If we think it is not harmful, if it is a good thing, if we think it will benefit our union, we will recommend joining. If it leads to disaffiliation, we will not join the ALA."

Gold also stated the view of the URW administration. "We will drop out of the ALA rather than be subject to being expelled from the AFL-CIO," he declared.

The amendment carried by a standing vote of 363 for to 281 against. The resolution as amended was declared adopted by the chair after a voice vote.

After two and a half days of debate, a constitutional amendment was adopted by the required two-thirds vote to build up a $15.3 million defense fund over an 18-month period beginning Nov. 1, 1968. The 180,000 members of the union each will pay $5 per month into the fund, which was renamed the URW Membership Strike Benefit Fund.

Defense Fund Strengthened

The existing monthly strike and defense assessment of $1.25 was modified to provide $1 for the strike benefit fund with the 25 cents to go for payment of legal fees, auditors and arbitrators in labor disputes. Thus a total of $6 per month from each member will go into the strike fund for the 18-month period.

The administration strongly recommended the $5 assessment in order to restore the fund, which had been depleted during the union's bitter, 14-week strike in the spring and early summer of 1967. The dispute cost the union more than $12.5 million, nearly half of which was borrowed from other unions.

The convention passed resolutions thanking both the AFL-CIO and its affiliates and the Auto Workers for their financial and moral support during the strike.

The dues increase of $1 per month also will go into effect Nov. 1, 1968. Fifty cents will stay with the locals and the remaining 50 cents will go into the international's general operating fund.

The yearly salary of Bommarito was raised from $18,060 to $25,000. Vice Pres. Kenneth Oldham and Sec.-Treas. Gold were voted salaries of $22,000, up from $15,060. Members of the URW staff were voted pay raises of $40 weekly.

Tokyo—Joint action by nations to provide jobs, job training and better living standards for Asia's impoverished millions was urged by the Intl. Labor Organization's sixth Asian regional conference here.

The appeal came in a resolution adopted unanimously by the conference, attended by 164 delegates and technical advisers representing governments, workers and employers from 21 countries and territories.

AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman, worker delegate from the United States, addressed one of the sessions. He also served on the conference's social security committee and helped draft its resolution in that area.

Waldemar Stack, AFL-CIO Asian representative in Okinawa, was Seidman's adviser. He served on the committee on management development and spoke in support of its resolution.

The resolution urging concerted action for jobs and social progress called upon the ILO to formulate and implement an Asian Manpower Plan when the UN agency holds its 50th anniversary conference next year.

The Asian plan will dovetail with similar plans advanced for Latin America and Africa by the ILO's Conference of American Member States in 1966 and its African Advisory Committee which met last year. The three plans are expected to form part of an ILO world employment program.

ILO Assistance

Once the plans are adopted by the ILO, the agency will set up teams of experts to collect and exchange economic information among countries and assist them in developing their own job programs.

ILO Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse told the conference that "failure of Asian countries to use to the full their human resources is at the root of their problems of poverty, backwardness and glaring inequality."

The ILO will have the responsibility with help from other international organizations in carrying out the Asia plan, Morse said. However, he emphasized that it is on individual governments "that the final responsibility of achieving the plan will fall."

Seidman pointed out that economic development in Asia and other continents must have a two-fold goal: to narrow the "unfortunately widening gap" between developing and developed nations and "bring about more equitable distribution of incomes within the developing nations themselves."

In this regard, he said, the American labor movement deplores the "indifference of some industrial nations, including some misguided elements in my own country, to the continuing need" of wealthier countries helping the developing ones.

As far as American labor's position is concerned, he continued, it was clearly set forth by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany when he told the platform committees of both the Democratic and Republican conventions that:

"The challenge to America is to find pragmatic means to continue, expand and improve economic and technical aid to developing countries so that they can evolve viable economies, democratic institutions and rising standards for their people."

Seidman said that along with expanding job opportunities, the developing nations must also adopt "effective labor standards" to assure "decent conditions of employment for workers."

He further emphasized the importance of strengthening free collective bargaining in developing nations and giving unions "the fullest possible opportunity to participate in the decision-making for economic development."

A resolution adopted by the conference set forth a series of recommendations to be followed by Asian countries in initiating social security programs, where none exist, and in strengthening existing programs.

It stressed that programs, where they do exist, are too limited in their coverage and often "fail to adequately protect in practice" persons who are supposedly covered. It called upon employers and employes to cooperate in developing and improving programs.

Illinois Labor Is Urged To 'Parade' to the Polls

Springfield, Ill.—"If you really want what labor says it wants, you will schedule another Labor Day parade to the ballot box on Nov. 5 and start with Hubert Humphrey."

Illinois Atty. Gen. William G. Clark (D) put the case for the Humphrey-Muskie ticket in those terms to 2,500 delegates to the 11th annual convention of the Illinois AFL-CIO here. Clark is a candidate for the U.S. Senate seeking to unseat Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen.

The delegates responded with an almost unanimous endorsement of the Democratic presidential slate and reaffirmed their support of the state Democratic ticket.

Clark called Dirksen a champion of the open shop forces in the country. He said the Republican has opposed the progressive aims of organized labor for the last 34 years and sees labor as some kind of evil, not really as working men and women.

Gov. Samuel H. Shapiro, seeking his first full term as governor, reviewed his record as a union member, state legislator, and lieutenant governor. He vowed to continue to support labor's goals of a state minimum wage, improvements in jobless aid and job injury benefits and collective bargaining rights for public employes.

Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers predicted that Illinois would come through for Humphrey and Muskie the way the state came through for John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson.

Keenan said organized labor will publicize the anti-union record of George Wallace and his administration of state government in Alabama.

Pres. Reuben G. Soderstrom of the Illinois AFL-CIO lashed out at the state General Assembly and Congress for failing to respond to the needs of working people.

"Why do some of our lawmakers go to church on Sunday and pray and then turn their backs on humanity?" he asked.

Soderstrom said many lawmakers seek investigations of crime, but do nothing to wipe out the causes of crime; that many want probes into riots but won't give the cities the help needed to solve the problems that lead to disorder.

The convention voted to change the site of the 1969 convention from Peoria to Chicago as a vote of confidence in Chicago as the convention capital of America.

The Price of Sitting It Out

AS THE PRESIDENTIAL election campaign turns the corner into the final four weeks there are increasing reports that a larger-than-usual number of voters may "go fishing" on election day.

Sitting out elections is not new in America. In the last three presidential elections about one-third of the eligible voters did not vote.

But this year many citizens who normally are deeply committed to the democratic process of voting as the "fundamental act of self-government" are sitting on the sidelines and vowing to register what they consider a protest against all the candidates by not voting on Nov. 5.

Many in this group are nominally liberals or progressives who have in past years clearly understood the threat to the nation from the rightwingers, the racists, the "aginners." That threat is very much with us today and in fact has taken on a new menacing reality in the candidacies of Richard Nixon and George Wallace.

Disaffected liberals who choose to sit out the election will, by not voting, in effect be aiding Wallace and Nixon—a choice it is hard to imagine they would knowingly make if they step into a voting booth.

For it is becoming clearer with each passing day that Hubert Humphrey is the liberal, progressive voice in this campaign, dealing directly and honestly with the critical problems of the cities, poverty, racism, crime, economic progress and peace.

FOR THOSE who carelessly cast aside the voting privilege on the grounds that their individual votes do not really matter, a quick check of recent electoral history should dispel this myth.

A shift of one-half of one percent of the votes in all of the nation's elections precincts would have elected Nixon over John F. Kennedy in 1960. A shift of a few hundred votes in a few states would have defeated Harry S Truman in 1948. There are numerous elections won by margins of less than 100 votes, or fractions of a percentage point.

For those who adopt a nihilist point of view that refusal to vote is in itself a protest against the election of any of the candidates and that it doesn't really matter who is the next President, the answer is simply that a democracy cannot function in any meaningful way by withholding of participation. This is the road to totalitarian dictatorship.

BECAUSE THE AMERICAN democratic system reflects the agonies of free choice and the conflict of ideas and interests it is not a completely perfect instrument. But it is as close as man has come to the basic problem of self-government. It can be strengthened only if the people exercise their rights and privileges of saying how they want to be governed and who shall be the governors.

In this critical year the democratic answer must be a great outpouring of all eligible citizens to the polls. The price of sitting out the election is too high; the results could be disastrous.

Rally 'Round an 'ism':

Wallace Emerges as Front Man For Radicals and Hate Groups

The following is excerpted from an article by C. R. Baker in the September 1968 issue of Homefront, the monthly publication of the Institute for American Democracy.

IN GEORGIA, Roy V. Harris, past president of the (White) Citizens Councils of America and publisher of the racist Augusta Courier, is state chairman of the Wallace-for-President campaign.

In Arkansas, the chairman is Judge Jim Johnson, a director of the (White) Citizens Councils and a finalist in the gubernatorial race two years ago.

The Louisiana State chairman for Wallace is Leander Perez, described by Life [magazine] as the "segregationist political boss of Plaquemines Parish."

While outright racists hold the key campaign posts in most southern states, members of the John Birch Society hold down the key spots in many state committees. Birch bigwig Col. Laurence Bunker heads a JBS-dominated slate of Wallace electors in Massachusetts, for example, and Bircher William Flax of Cincinnati, attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of White People, filed the American Independent (Wallace) Party incorporation papers in Ohio.

In most states where Wallace has even an outside chance of winning in this hurly-burly election year, racists, bigots, Birchers and assorted other far rightists dominate the slates of electors and the campaign machinery.

Ever since the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy died, the American far right has been a movement in search of a national leader. Since the Birch Society sets the propaganda themes which are echoed by the scores of interlocked far right organizations, we have called the far right ideology "Birchism," for it is a phenomenon, as yet, without a name.

Wallace, who openly called for Birch Society support in 1964, has never wavered. In 1965, he helped the society launch its "Support Your Local Police" front committees by posing with the Alabama SYLP committee, an event pictorially recorded in the November 1965 JBS Bulletin.

The far, far right started laying the base for the present Wallace campaign late in 1965. The November 1965 issue of Birch-linked Liberty Lobby's Liberty Letter trumpeted the news that it had heard "rumblings" of a Wallace-for-President Committee.

On Nov. 6, 1965, Wallace conferred in Montgomery with Ned Touchstone, editor of The Councilor, the publication of the (White) Citizens Councils, Birch graduate Richard Cotten, an anti-Semite with close ties to the far right elements of the U. S. military, and Judge John Rarick, the Louisiana racist who is now Liberty Lobby's best friend in Congress.

During 1966, the far rightists began organizing Wallace-for-President clubs across the nation. One of the pioneers of this effort was Asa (Ace) Carter, once described by Alabama Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers as a "widely known Klansman and rightwing agitator." Carter has close ties to the anti-Semites going back to the mid-1950s, and was termed a disciple of the old hate merchant, Gerald L. K. Smith.

At the same time, Kent Courtney of New Orleans, an avowed Bircher, and co-proprietor (with his estranged wife, Phoebe) of the third party-backing Conservative Society of America, joined in the effort to establish local Wallace clubs.

EX-SELMA SHERIFF Jim Clark also started setting up Wallace Clubs in 1966 while he was the speaker in greatest demand on the John Birch Society's American Opinion lecture circuit. For a period, Clark was billed as the "National co-chairman of the Wallace Committee," but of late he has not been visibly employed by Wallace forces.

In January 1967, Courtney announced the formation of "A New Political Party" to support Wallace. Among those listed as contacts were Robert Dilley of Des Moines, a member of Billy James Hargis' Christian Crusade advisory board, publisher of the Birch-endorsed True News, and still Wallace's Iowa chairman; Oscar N. Davis, a Liberty Lobby supporter who is now on the list of Wallace electors in Kansas; Glenn E. Brenner and Patricia M. Snyder, both on the slate of Wallace electors in Illinois and Dr. William Campbell Douglass, the Bircher and founder of Let Freedom Ring, the "dial a smear" telephone set up.

According to The Citizen, one of the (White) Citizens Council's publications, Wallace was the featured speaker as "some 400 accredited delegates from 21 states" gathered in New Orleans for the late winter "leadership conference."

The Klan, the Minutemen (through the American Patriotic Party), the Nazis and the far-out groups have endorsed Wallace and the campaign machinery seems safely in the hands of those sympathetic to the Birch ideology.

The 90th Congress: A Report

By Andrew J. Biemiller

Director, AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation

Liberals in the 90th Congress fought with courage and determination to prevent the anti-labor conservative coalition from cutting back and destroying the social progress achieved during the Kennedy-Johnson-Humphrey Administration.

Unfortunately, this defensive battle was not always successful. Again and again conservative Republicans and their conservative Dixiecrat bedfellows joined forces to chop, slash, undercut, or starve the basic programs that help working people and their families.

If a direct, frontal attack didn't work, the coalition raised an "economy" battle-cry, the traditional roundabout back-door attack of conservatives opposing popular programs like education, health, labor, welfare, anti-poverty, housing, and conservation.

Thus, the AFL-CIO was forced to fight to protect the social gains of the New Deal, Fair Deal, New Frontier and Great Society. Instead of plowing new ground, we had to protect medicare, aid to education, improved social security benefits, civil rights, and anti-poverty measures from being weakened or destroyed.

The reactionary anti-civil rights, anti-civil liberties, anti-democratic bias of the conservative coalition has emerged clearly in the 1968 fight on the Fortas nomination. Republican Sen. Robert Griffin, Dixiecrat-turned-Republican Strom Thurmond, and Dixiecrat Sen. Sam Ervin have led an outrageous attack on the Supreme Court, using as a pretext the nomination of Justice Fortas to be Chief Justice.

GOP-Dixiecrat teamwork forced a "states' rights" amendment into the 1967 aid-to-education bill, seriously weakening the bill.

An anti-civil rights amendment aimed at weakening federal school desegregation guidelines got coalition approval in 1968.

The anti-labor compulsory arbitration proposal rammed through the 90th Congress in 1967 forced striking railroad shopcraft workers back on the job. action was a serious setback to the cause of free collective bargaining.

Fortunately, in spite of the victories won by the conservative coalition, liberals in the Senate and House were able to muster a majority on a number of key issues.

When Republican Sen. John Williams tried to stop AFL-CIO's COPE collection of voluntary dollars for political contributions to COPE-endorsed candidates, we won by a healthy 49-19 margin. Republicans cast 18 of the anti-labor votes and the 19th came from a Southern Democrat.

A landmark civil rights law with strong, wide-ranging "fair-housing" requirements was passed in 1968 after the Dixiecrat-Republican filibuster in the Senate was broken.

A far-reaching, massive $5.3 billion housing law—with new programs to help low and moderate income families get adequate homes—was approved in 1968.

Four major consumer protection laws—truth-in-lending, meat inspection, poultry inspection and a new Commission on Product Safety—won approval in the 1968 session. These programs the conservative coalition didn't dare oppose.

We must not let the conservative coalition strengthen its position in the 91st Congress. There is too much at stake. The loss of even a small number of liberal congressmen will almost certainly mean further dismantling of the important social programs already under attack in Congress.

We must not let a conservative candidate win the presidency in 1968. Election of a conservative President would bring a flock of new conservative congressmen into office. Election of a conservative President would open the door to a new anti-labor campaign by the conservative coalition.

Our choice is clear. The AFL-CIO has endorsed the election of Hubert Humphrey and Edmund Muskie and all candidates for Congress who share their views and ours.

Hubert Humphrey, the Democratic candidate, has a 100 percent perfect record on our COPE score sheets. Time after time during a national career spanning more than 20 years, Humphrey has spoken up and voted for every good, decent, constructive, progressive cause. He is a tried and true friend of labor.

The Republican candidate, Richard Nixon, also has a long public career and he should be judged by that career. Nixon claims he was elected to Congress in 1947 "to smash the labor bosses." Maybe he didn't deliver on that promise, but he managed to vote wrong 86 percent of the time as congressman and senator, casting his lot again and again with the anti-labor, anti-people lobbies like the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, and the American Medical Association.

The next three pages carry labor's report card on the 90th Congress as it neared adjournment.

Congressmen have been judged on 13 key issues; senators on 12. The symbols—"R-right" or "W-wrong"—are based on the position the AFL-CIO took on the legislation.

Alongside the voting records are brief descriptions of the issues—what the vote was about and why it was important to the labor movement and the nation.

A congressman or senator may claim he supported labor's position because he voted for final passage of a bill. But in most cases, the key vote was on an amendment that would have seriously weakened or greatly improved the bill. The votes used here are those considered most significant.

The third party candidate, George Wallace, has no platform, no policies, and no program—nothing except racism and hatred. His record as governor of Alabama makes a mockery of his claim to be a friend of labor. Alabama's regressive, soak-the-worker sales taxes are among the highest in the history of the United States—after Wallace promised not to raise them. Low wages, poor working conditions, high crime rates, high illiteracy rates, anti-unionism, segregation, and prejudice in Alabama all testify to the kind of America that Wallace wants.

The national campaign for the Presidency holds the center spotlight Nov. 5—but the shape of the future is also taking form as liberals and conservatives fight for control of the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives.

The loss of more than 40 liberal congressmen in the 1966 elections made the difference between the fabulously productive liberal 89th Congress and the conservative-dominated 90th Congress. If more liberal congressmen lose their seats in the 1968 elections, we face a serious anti-labor campaign.

We can expect the conservative coalition to push "labor court" legislation, compulsory arbitration, a national "right-to-work" law, bills applying anti-trust laws to labor unions, bills banning nation-wide bargaining and anti-COPE legislation.

The build-up is planned and coordinated. It is being cultivated in Congress by the conservative coalition. It is spearheaded in the public forum by the giant business associations, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and the National Association of Manufacturers.

The signs point inescapably to the conclusion that these anti-labor forces are counting on conservative political gains in 1968 to pave the way for restrictive labor legislation in 1969.

We must carry the fight at the national level, in the states, and in every congressional district to win a liberal majority in the 91st Congress. Only with a liberal President and a liberal Congress will the 91st Congress improve on the sorry, conservative record of the 90th Congress.

From the 91st Congress we must get a massive new job program, occupational safety, expanded health, education, manpower training, anti-poverty programs, organizing and bargaining rights for farm workers, situs picketing rights in the construction industry, and adequate funding to meet the urgent needs of the urban crisis.

This voting record tells how senators and representatives answered the roll calls on the major issues of the 90th Congress. With this information, working men and women can make their informed judgment and decision on Election Day.

How Your Repre

1. House Rules

Conservatives of both parties ganged up on the opening day of the 90th Congress to restore to the House Rules Committee some of its power to stall legislation indefinitely.

The vote served notice that the Republican-Dixiecrat coalition was back in the saddle. It was a major step backwards from the accomplishments of the liberal 89th Congress.

A motion to continue the rules reform which had been adopted in the 89th Congress was defeated, 196-225, on Jan. 10, 1967.

For—right; Against—wrong.

2. Aid to Education

The thrust of the federal program of aid to education has been to encourage local school districts to develop programs to meet the special education needs of children from poor families who live in slum areas and start life with two strikes against them.

But the House adopted a "states' rights" amendment which turned over federal funds to the control of state boards of education instead of putting it where the need is greatest.

The labor-opposed amendment passed the House, 230-185, on May 24, 1967.

For—wrong; Against—right.

3. Compulsory Arbitration

Striking railroad shopcraft workers were forced back to work when Congress passed a compulsory arbitration law.

The labor movement vigorously opposed the law, warning that collective bargaining couldn't work if management knew that its workers would not be permitted to strike.

Rail management supported compulsory arbitration, adding to the evidence that management's bargaining tactics were based on a conviction that Congress would outlaw a railroad strike.

The House voted for compulsory arbitration, 244-148, on July 17, 1967.

For—wrong; Against—right.

4. Federal Pay Raise

A three-step pay raise sought to bring salaries of postal and other federal employes closer to private industry levels.

The House narrowly defeated a Republican motion to kill the second and third step of the increase, leaving only the first step.

The pay-cutting move was rejected, 199-211, on Oct. 11, 1967.

For—wrong; Against—right.

5. Appropriations

Late in the first session, conservatives sought to force an $8.5 billion cut in the President's budget. The brunt of the cuts would have fallen on education, health, housing, anti-poverty and similar programs.

The Senate managed to reduce the amount of the 1967 cut, but the action foreshadowed the big victory of the economy bloc in the 1968 session.

The House voted for the budget slash, 238-164, on Oct. 18, 1967.

For—wrong; Against—right.

6. Taxes—Budget Cuts

Conservatives insisted on—and got—a deep budget cut in return for going along with a tax increase the President said was essential to the nation's economy.

Earlier, Administration supporters sought to reduce the amount of the budget slash—a compromise which would have permitted high priority programs to continue while reducing funds for less urgent matters.

This compromise was rejected by the House, 137-259, on May 29, 1968.

For—right; Against—wrong.

7. Meat Inspection

One of the big accomplishments of the 90th Congress was extension of federal meat inspection standards to the billions of pounds of meat which had been exempt because it wasn't sold across state lines.

The Senate made major improvements in the original, very weak House bill. The conservative coalition voted down a motion to accept the Senate amendments which required states to match federal inspection standards.

A public outcry finally brought approval of a good bill, but this attempt to strengthen the meat inspection law was beaten, 166-207, on Nov. 29, 1967.

For—right; Against—wrong.

8. Civil Rights

Final passage of the 1968 civil rights legislation would have been endangered if the House had not agreed to accept Senate amendments and instead insisted on sending the bill to a conference committee. The legislation outlawed housing discrimination, protected civil rights workers, and made it a federal crime to enter a state with the intent to take part in a riot.

A conference would have opened the door to a new Senate filibuster and endangered the legislation. Church, labor and civil rights organizations pressed for a House vote on acceptance of the Senate-passed bill.

The resolution which cleared the way for final passage was adopted, 229-195, on Apr. 10, 1968.

9. Housing

Decent homes for all Americans would go a long way toward meeting the nation's most pressing problems. An important step was taken in this year's housing legislation. It provides for building 1.7 million new or rehabilitated housing units in the next three years for low and moderate income families. It includes interest subsidies to help low income families buy homes and incentives for apartment-builders to provide low-rent units.

Other sections of the legislation expand rent supplement and model cities programs.

The housing bill was passed, 295-114, on July 10, 1968.

10. Model Cities

A Republican amendment would have wrecked the model cities program last year by eliminating $225 million to help cities renovate entire neighborhoods through a combination of better housing and better services and facilities.

As it is, the money available has been inadequate to meet the needs of the cities. The program, launched by the 89th Congress, has been one of the most promising approaches to the nation's urban problems. The battle in the 90th Congress has been over the financing needed to make this promise a reality.

The motion to gut the program was rejected, 193-213, on May 17, 1967.

11. Food Stamps

Millions of poor people have been able to eat better because the food stamp program enables them to buy stamps worth several times their cost when exchanged for food at a store.

Pres. Kennedy directed an experimental food stamp program immediately after his inauguration in 1961. Pres. Johnson in 1964 won congressional approval to expand the program and make it permanent.

An Agriculture Committee amendment would have led to the abandonment of the program in most states by forcing the states to pay 20 percent of the program's cost.

The amendment was voted down, 173-191, on June 8, 1967.

12. Rat Control

To a majority of the House, on July 20, 1967, a federal program to help cities exterminate rats which bring disease and danger into slum homes was a joking matter.

Public outrage eventually brought approval of the program. The conservative coalition had, for once, overstepped itself. Later, somewhat shamefacedly, money was provided in another bill.

But on this first vote, the House refused, 176-207, to even take up the rat control legislation.

13. Anti-Poverty Funds

A Republican motion to slash $100 million from anti-poverty funds would have deprived thousands of children of participation in the Head Start program and forced the closing of 13 Job Corps centers—slamming the door shut on training opportunities for young men and women.

Adoption of the motion would have served notice that Congress and the nation was preparing to abandon the war on poverty as "too costly" for the world's richest nation.

The cutback was rejected, 181-220, on June 26, 1968.

For—wrong; Against—right.

How Your Senators Voted

1. Filibuster Rule

The Senate's Rule 22 requires a two-thirds vote to stop a filibuster. Because of this. the Senate has been unable to act on repeal of Taft-Hartley's Sec. 14(b) and major civil rights bills. The filibuster has also been used to block any change in the rule. On Jan. 24, 1967, the Senate voted 53-46 for Majority Leader Mansfield's motion to close debate on the rules change, but it was defeated for lack of a two-thirds margin. For—right; Against—wrong.

2. Compulsory Arbitration

Sen. Ralph Yarborough sought to balance the compulsory arbitration bill by an amendment impounding 10 percent of the railroads' profits during the period in which rail workers were prohibited from striking—thus creating an incentive for a voluntary settlement of the dispute. The amendment was rejected, 23-59, on June 7, 1967. For—right; Against—wrong.

3. Congressional Redistricting

A House-passed bill would have allowed states to evade one man-one vote standards for congressional districts until 1972. An amendment by Sen. Edward Kennedy (D-Mass.) improved the bill by limiting the population variation to no more than 10 percent, beginning with 1968 elections, and barring gerrymandering. It was adopted, 44-39, on June 8, 1967. For—right; Against—wrong.

4. Political Contributions

An amendment by Sen. John J. Williams (R-Del.) to an election reform bill was aimed at the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education. It would have prevented COPE from giving dollars voluntarily contributed by union members to endorsed candidates. The amendment was rejected, 19-46, on Sept. 11, 1967. For—wrong; Against—right.

5. Social Security

The Senate social security bill was greatly superior to the House-passed bill. An amendment to reduce benefits to the level of the House bill was defeated, 22-58, on Nov. 21, 1967. For—wrong; Against—right.

6. Aid to Education

A "states' rights" amendment to give control of federal school funds to state boards of education was rejected, 35-38, on Dec. 11, 1967. For—wrong; Against—right.

7. Civil Rights

A filibuster against the fair housing civil rights bill was broken when a motion to limit debate received the necessary two-thirds majority. The vote to end the filibuster was 65-32, on Mar. 4. 1968. For—right; Against—wrong.

8. Runaway Shops

Many cities have used tax-exempt industrial bonds to finance plants as a lure to runaway industry—along with low wages and a non-union workforce. The Senate on Mar. 28, 1968, voted 50-32 to end this tax exemption. For—right; Against—wrong.

9. Rent Supplements

Funds for rent supplements to help poor families live in decent housing would have been cut in half under an amendment rejected by the Senate, 34-55, on Sept. 20, 1967. For—wrong; Against—right.

10. Emergency Jobs

A labor-supported proposal by Sen. Prouty (R-Vt.) would have set up a one-year, $925 million emergency job program—a step in the direction of the large-scale program urged by the AFL-CIO and the Urban Coalition. It lost, 42-47, on Oct. 4, 1967. For—right; Against—wrong.

11. Head Start

Pre-school children have been helped to overcome poverty handicaps through the Head Start program. An amendment by Sen. Clark (D-Pa.) to appropriate $25 million for Head Start was approved, 43-42, on Mar. 11, 1968—after Vice Pres. Humphrey cast the tie-breaking vote. For—right; Against—wrong.

12. Anti-Poverty Funds

A House-Senate conference committee recommended knocking out $75 million for the 1968 summer youth manpower training programs and $25 million from Head Start. The conference report was rejected, 24-54, on Apr. 10, 1968. For—wrong; Against—right.

100% for Labor:

Liberal, Progressive Record Makes Humphrey Clear Choice

The following editorial, "Humphrey: A Clear Choice," by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany appears in the October 1968 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

ON NOV. 5, the American people will choose their President for the next four years. They can vote for either—

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, a staunch friend of the worker throughout his public life and a supporter of unions in good times and bad; or

RICHARD M. NIXON, friend of corporations and the wealthy and a co-author of the Taft-Hartley Act; or

GEORGE C. WALLACE, a racist and demagogue, once governor of a state known for low wages, poor working conditions and weak unions.

Their campaigns are as different as the men themselves and as different as their records.

Humphrey has run on his record as a proven liberal, talking to the country of his plans and programs, and his party's platform—one that is sound, sensible and achievable.

Nixon has failed to discuss any major issues; refused to debate; placed an embargo on questions about key problems; adopted the Dewey technique of pretending he is above political discussions. His party's platform is one of reactionary generalities designed to appease the Strom Thurmonds in the party.

Wallace has offered no programs or proposals except racism; has attacked every liberal law and sought to arouse fear and prejudice. He has no platform, but is attempting to divide America at a time when division aids only the enemies of the United States.

Humphrey's campaign has been hampered by a concerted, well-planned and well-financed attempt to drown out his voice and his reasoned discussion. In state after state, the same groups of loud-mouthed disrupters—calling themselves liberals—have attempted to keep their fellow citizens from even hearing Humphrey's words.

Nixon's campaign has been marked by the most expensive, well-planned, blanket of political advertisements on television, radio and in the press in the nation's history. He has substituted glamour and razzle-dazzle for discussion.

Wallace's campaign has been confined to a single speech—repeated endlessly—which can only be characterized as a litany of fear.

How should workers judge these three men? The AFL-CIO believes they should be judged on their records.

HUMPHREY'S APPEAL has been honest and forthright. He has asked for labor's support on the basis of his 100 percent record of support for labor. He has been the worker's friend and he deserves the worker's support now.

Nixon has attempted to conceal his record and avoid the issues. He has promised to support tax gimmicks to make America's profit-swollen corporations even more profitable.

The Wallace record is the record of Alabama—naked race discrimination, low wage rates, high crime rates, poor compensation for workers when they are unemployed or injured on the job, poor schools, little help for the poverty stricken and high taxes for workers and low taxes for corporations.

What would be the result if each were elected?

Wallace would undertake to smash America's unions—for they stand as a firm bulwark against dictatorship and the only way Wallace could redeem his promises would be as a dictator.

Nixon would seek to pass the anti-union bills now pending in the Congress—many authored by Strom Thurmond, the man who engineered Nixon's nomination.

Humphrey would be a liberal, as he has been during all his public life, dedicated to improving and extending the legislative victories workers have won in the eight years of John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson. Unions would grow, union-won benefits would be improved and America would continue to move forward.

To American workers, the choice must be clear. Humphrey deserves, should have and will have our enthusiastic support.

One more point must be added:

Wallace has no chance of victory. Every vote he receives outside the South is really a vote for Nixon.

Few self-respecting trade union members would ever vote for Nixon, but any union member who allows his fears to outweigh his judgment and casts his vote for Wallace is only aiding Nixon.

I am confident the workers will weigh all the facts. They will realize that everything they have won because they were united in their unions can be taken away by an anti-union President. They will realize that medicare, social security, aid to education, decent housing legislation, a good minimum wage bill—all of their legislative victories—will be in danger.

I am confident that when workers consider the alternatives they will vote for their friends—Hubert H. Humphrey for President and Edmund S. Muskie for Vice President.

That is the way to victory—for workers, for America, and for the free world.

Biemiller Hits 'Parsimony':

90th Congress Stalls Progress By Choking Off Needed Funds

THE MAJOR SHORTCOMING of the 90th Congress has been its failure to adequately fund existing economic and social programs, the AFL-CIO legislative director said. He predicted the next Congress would be "better."

"Important bills have been passed" this year, especially consumer protection legislation, said Andrew J. Biemiller, but the "parsimony" of the 90th Congress held back needed progress in education, civil rights and other areas. He made the statements on the AFL-CIO-produced public service interview, Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on the Mutual Radio Network.

The former Wisconsin congressman said he based his prediction of a "better Congress" next year on the belief that Hubert H. Humphrey will be elected, along with progressive congressmen, and the re-election of the "small bloc . . . of liberal Republicans" in the House.

"We don't count in terms of just Democrats and Republicans; we count in terms of those members of the House who we think are good liberals." he said.

Biemiller reported Richard M. Nixon had made few inroads into trade union ranks. "Not many of our members are falling for the blandishments of Nixon . . . they know how anti-labor he has been—as a member of the House of Representatives, the Senate, and as Vice President," he asserted.

"THEY ALSO don't like his (Nixon's) general attitude on life," he declared.

Biemiller said that the labor movement is alert to the probability that Nixon's election would bring anti-labor legislation to the fore. "Nixon owes a great deal to Sen. Strom Thurmond" who "has a pet bill to completely ban any kind of nationwide bargaining," he said. Organized labor is concentrating its efforts in emphasizing these issues and is "getting a good response" where it does, he added.

Among labor's major goals in the 91st Congress, he said, will be restoration of "fairness" to the labor laws and measures to continue the nation's economic growth, so that gains achieved "can be maintained and strengthened."

Reporters questioning Biemiller were Kenneth Crawford of Newsweek magazine and Neil MacNeil of Time magazine.

IF YOU'RE FEELING the tax bite these days—and most people who work for a living do—the 1968 elections have great meaning.

The wide gulf on the taxation issue between Humphrey and Nixon, between the Democratic and Republican platforms, goes to the heart of contrasting economic philosophies.

The prime issue in taxation, is equitability where low income, medium income and high income groups are all treated fairly on the basis of ability to pay—progressive taxation. However, with the vast loopholes in the current tax laws, taxation has, too often, become retrogressive.

Former Sen. Paul Douglas of Illinois, probably the most outstanding economist ever to serve in the U.S. Senate and a former president of the American Economic Association, once estimated that as much as $50 billion are being lost annually through tax loopholes.

If your income is your paycheck, withholding is taken out each pay period and you pay your full share of taxes. There are no loopholes which help you.

It's the rich who benefit from tax loopholes and these loopholes, in turn, make your taxes so high they hurt.

Recently, on the floor of the House of Representatives, Rep. Charles A. Vanik (D-Ohio) dealt with the question of tax reform in its true sense—as it affects the low and middle income groups.

"It is reprehensible that some Americans with fabulous incomes should escape their share of the tax load," he declared. "The tax gimmickry in vogue is appalling. A portfolio of tax-free bonds permitted 35 Americans with incomes of over $500,000 to pay no taxes whatsoever in 1965.

"In 1966, 18 persons with annual incomes over $1 million paid no income taxes. Wealthy taxpayers manipulate charitable giving into tax savings, others operate through so-called charitable foundations. If these individuals paid their fair share, everyone's tax burden would be less."

Some of the loopholes cited by Vanik are in tax write-offs in farms and the oil and mineral depletion allowances which cost the Treasury several billion each revenue year. There are also stock options, capital gains and other gimmicks. Corporations and corporate executives have an endless number of tax loopholes they can utilize to reduce their taxes to a fantastic degree.

The Research Institute of America has a weekly service for executives which advises them of legal steps that can be taken to avoid taxes. RIA entitles it "The Way Executives Cut Taxes."

HERE ARE A FEW of the suggestions: tax-wise handling of compensation from a business . . . how to give stock profits to charity and avoid taxes . . . the tax deduction of an "office at home" . . . how to reduce tax on personal investment income . . . club dues and spending that are tax deductible . . . how to buy tax-exempt bonds . . . tax free life insurance for executives.

The Republican platform gives you little hope in this direction. Its primary emphasis is on giving more tax write-offs to business "to strengthen our industrial competitiveness in the world."

The GOP specifically states it will keep depletion allowances, for example.

The Democratic platform, on the other hand, offers a program directly aimed at the tax loopholes and stressing ability to pay.

"Today," say the Democrats, "those who receive billions in capital gains from stock market and real estate transactions, from tax-free interest from state and local bonds, from oil and other unjustifiable mineral depletion allowances and from other forms of unearned income, still enjoy special tax shelters."

The Democrats say that "thorough loophole closing is essential because it will raise billions in additional revenue needed to help meet America's international obligations and vital homefront public service costs."

"PARSIMONY" was the major shortcoming of the 90th Congress, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, center, said on Labor News Conference, but he predicted that the next Congress will be "better." The former Wisconsin congressman was questioned by Neil MacNeil, left, of Time magazine and Kenneth Crawford of Newsweek magazine. The AFL-CIO public affairs interview is broadcast Tuesdays on Mutual Radio.

ICWU Board Names Boyle New President

Akron, O.—The executive board of the Chemical Workers has elected Thomas E. Boyle to succeed the late Walter L. Mitchell as the union's president for the next four years.

Boyle, 52, has been vice president and director of the New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania region since 1956. For 10 years before that, he had been an international representative of the union.

Mitchell had been unanimously re-elected to a seventh term as president at the Chemical Workers convention in New Orleans, after delegates had approved a constitutional change providing a four-year term instead of the previous two years for the officers. The same day he took the oath of office, apparently in good health, but collapsed and died that night.

The Chemical Workers board, following procedures specified in the constitution, met seven days later in Akron and unanimously picked Boyle for the presidency. Boyle then named Richard J. Whalen, 50, of New Brunswick, N.J., to fill the new vacancy as vice president.

Boyle is a vice president of the New Jersey State AFL-CIO, a member of the New Jersey Vocational Training Commission, and in 1967 was a candidate for the state legislature.

The ICWU board also announced that the union's new headquarters, scheduled for completion next spring, will be named "The Walter L. Mitchell Building."

Trainmen Ask Action On Railroad Safety Bill

Hollywood, Fla.—Railroad Trainmen's Pres. Charles Luna called upon Congress and the nation's labor movement to work together to end unsafe practices and conditions in the railroad industry.

After Luna made his plea in an address to the BRT's convention here, the 1,100 delegates acted to make safety the union's top legislative goal.

In other actions, the convention unanimously re-elected Luna; L. E. Chester, assistant to the president; and Al Chesser, national legislative representative. John Shepherd was elected secretary-treasurer, succeeding W. E. B. Chase, who is retiring at the end of this year.

The convention urged enactment of a far-reaching rail safety bill, introduced in this Congress, that would let the federal government set standards for equipment and rolling stock not now under its jurisdiction.

The delegates—brakemen and conductors—proposed that the Dept. of Transportation hold public hearings on the safety needs of the industry.

Through a resolution, they also specified that "if necessary to improve safety on U.S. railroads, we recommend that the issue be made a matter of collective bargaining."

Such a recommendation, which now becomes official BRT policy, could surpass the crew-consist issue—the makeup of train crews—as the number one problem separating the railroads and the BRT.

In another action, delegates chipped in $26,000—an average of $25 each—to help BRT members currently engaged in strikes on the Belt Railway of Chicago, Florida East Coast Railroad, Winston-Salem City Coach Lines and Frankfort & Cincinnati Railroad.

Upholsterers Backed Against Feudal Firm

town bank and newspaper" and subservience of city officials.

"It is a company town in the complete sense," Meany reported. Noting that the union has launched a nationwide consumer boycott against the Batesville "Monoseal" casket and Hill-Rom hospital furniture, he urged "your complete support of this boycott, including publicity in labor publications."

Batesville, snuggled in the softly rolling hills of southeast Indiana, is one of the nation's last remaining company towns. Descendants of John Hillenbrand, who founded it more than a century ago, have their fingers in every aspect of community life—politics, publishing, banking or industry.

Members of UIU Local 1525 went on strike to break the family's paternalistic hold on their lives and, despite the usual forms of intimidation, still walk the picket line firmly determined to gain 20th Century working conditions from the Hillenbrand empire.

The strike started when a three-year contract expired on June 1. Although there has been a history of unionism in the plants for the past two or three decades, the companies were in a position to dominate union members because most of them lived right in the town.

The final company offer was a wage increase of 50 cents an hour in three steps—22 cents, 15 cents, and 13 cents—over three years. Local 1525 members turned it down because they felt the time had come to fight for things more important than wages.

Their demands included the right to question company-set production standards, seniority, job bidding, a real health and welfare program, an improved pension plan, return of strikers without seniority loss, the right to have a union representative come into the plant to handle grievances, and a union shop.

"Our biggest demand," says James Stephenson, president and business agent of the local, "is simply for better working conditions."

The present pension plan, according to Charles Baker, strike captain and a worker in the Doll (another Hillenbrand "family name") plant of the casket company calls for $1 a month pension for each year of work. "In other words," he says, "if you work 40 years you get $40 a month—but if you quit or are laid off and come back, you start all over from scratch."

Since the strike began, the union reports, not a word about it has appeared in the local newspaper, pickets have been shoved around by police, teenagers (too young to operate machinery under Indiana law) have been hired as strikebreakers, and private police have been brought in to harass strikers.

In another move, the company has sent letters to strikers saying they are being discharged because "of misconduct on the picket line."

This brought an immediate appeal from union officials to Gov. Roger D. Branigin to step into the situation and investigate the "firing" of the strikers as well as the hiring of underage youngsters.

Tom Telles, landlord for the union headquarters in downtown Batesville, has received threatening telephone calls saying that "something can happen" if he doesn't evict the union.

Meanwhile, strikers are collecting $30 a week strike benefits and two church groups have offered to help those in "dire need."

Very little is being produced or shipped—one shipment took two weeks to go 100 miles—and strikers remain strong in their determination to gain real union protection.

Delegates Mourn Grogan:

Shipbuilders Elect Pettis as President

Miami Beach—Andrew A. Pettis was unanimously voted president of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers here by delegates to the 24th biennial convention.

A pall of deep mourning overshadowed the opening of the four-day session as delegates voiced their sorrow for deceased Pres. John J. Grogan, 54, who died suddenly Sept. 16 in Jersey City, N.J. Grogan had occupied the presidency for the past 18 years and also was a vice president of the AFL-CIO.

Pettis, 62, had been vice president and legislative head since 1951, after serving as New England regional director.

For the past 17 years Pettis has been the Shipbuilders chief contact man on federal legislation. As president, he will keep his Washington, D.C., base in the Philip Murray building, 1126 Sixteenth Street, N.W.

Pettis got his start in union affairs during World War II when he was active in Local 505, the CIO union at the South Portland, Me., shipyard.

He was local union president in 1944 and 1945 until he resigned to become the union's New England regional director. In 1946 he was elected to the national executive board of the union and in 1951, when Grogan moved into the presidency, he was named to succeed him as vice president. He was subsequently re-elected seven times.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler warned the delegates that every election year "from this election year on, will be critical for labor."

"Employers and industry associations," Schnitzler said, "have discovered that what they couldn't get at the negotiating table they can get more easily on the legislative level. Once in power, these reactionaries, even though they are unable to repeal beneficial social legislation, will act to efface appropriations and to nullify them."

Discussing the "real test" for selection of a presidential candidate, Schnitzler compared the voting records of Humphrey and Nixon, and said that the Democratic candidate had voted "right" on 199 issues designated by AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education as crucial to labor and had a "perfect score."

Leo Perlis, head of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Community Services, told the delegates not to permit themselves to be "exploited by the fires of fears, hates and tension stoked by the demagogues and extremists of both left and right."

O'Sullivan Wins Race For Top NABET Post

Chicago—Timothy J. O'Sullivan was elected to a three-year term as president of the Broadcast Employes & Technicians by delegates to the fifth constitutional convention here.

O'Sullivan's first ballot victory bested the incumbent, Eugene P. Klumpp, on a constituency vote of 4,250½ to 3,290½. A third candidate, N. James Greene, San Francisco, also was in the race.

Re-elected to office were Sec.-Treas. Arthur Hjorth, Chicago; Vice Pres. James Harvey, Washington, D.C.; and Ronald Pambrun, Vancouver, vice president for Canadian affairs.

Harvey beat out four opponents for his second three-year term.

O'Sullivan, NABET member and staff representative for more than 18 years, had been serving most recently as director of Region 5 with offices in Hollywood. For many years he was director of network affairs in Canada. He also worked as an organizer and contract negotiator in cities in the U.S. and Canada.

Klumpp, who served for more than four years as head of NABET, will return to his former position as engineering supervisor at WBEN, Buffalo.

The convention also made several fundamental changes in the structure and operations of the union. Two more regions were authorized for Canada, making four regions for the more than 2,500 members of NABET north of the border. An additional region for the United States also was created, to be known as Region 10.

Each of NABET's 10 regions is represented by an elected regional vice president who serves on the international executive council, the union's highest-level policy body.

The 65 NABET delegates turned down a proposal for the direct election by the membership of international officers, thus retaining the present method of selection by the convention. However, the membership was authorized to call for special conventions to deal with specific problems.

Another constitutional change provides for a substantial enlargement of self-government for the Canadian membership.

The delegates approved a measure to allow a member to hold office at both the local and international levels. Previously, he was required to relinquish one office upon election to the second post.

As an outgrowth of last year's upheaval in NABET ranks, the convention voted to refund to the union's three largest locals a sum of 30 percent of the dues paid in by the respective locals to be used as seen fit by those locals. Each local union is free to petition for similar treatment.

Laborers Win Union Shop Despite State 'Work' Law

De Soto, Kan.—The Laborers have won a union shop contract clause at a munitions plant here despite the Kansas "right to work" law outlawing such agreements in the state.

The breakthrough was achieved with the aid of the union's legal department. After extensive research, the department provided legal proof that most of the state's civil laws, including its anti-union shop law, do not apply at the Sunflower plant of Hercules, Inc., because it is on federal property and under exclusive federal jurisdiction.

The contractor, who had first cited the R-T-W law as prohibiting a union shop, withdrew his objection and a new contract with the union shop clause was ratified Oct. 1 by Local 605 members.

The Laborers called the prospects "significant" for winning the union shop from private contractors on other government installations but union Gen. Counsel Robert Connerton cautioned that each case will depend on the circumstances involved.

The question will turn in each case, Connerton said, on the manner in which the federal government acquired the land, and on the date.

Local 605 previously represented all employes in the Hercules bargaining unit but several hundred had refused to pay dues or support the union. The new contract changes that possibility.

Maps Aid to Strikers:

California AFL-CIO Spurs Hearst Battle

Sacramento—a six-point plan to escalate labor's battle against the struck Los Angeles Herald-Examiner won quick and emphatic approval from the California AFL-CIO convention which met here last week.

The plan calls for a 5-cents-per-member-per-month voluntary contribution to support the nine-month-old strike and lockout on a continuing basis. It asks both the California Labor Federation and the national AFL-CIO to help bring Hearst management to the bargaining table. Other points in the program are:

- A boycott of advertisers who continue to use the struck paper.
- A Dept. of Labor probe of Hearst's use of professional strikebreakers.
- A Dept. of Justice investigation of the Hearst corporation's monopoly practices.
- An Internal Revenue Service review of the use of tax write-offs and carryback procedures to force U.S. taxpayers to bear the losses resulting from Hearst's anti-union drive.

The delegates put an enthusiastic stamp of approval, too, on a long-range program to "bring farm workers into the mainstream of the nation's economic life."

The program supports coverage of farm workers by the National Labor Relations Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act. It renews the federation's efforts to bring farm workers under the state unemployment insurance program.

It calls for necessary steps to insure that no alien "greencarders" are employed where a labor dispute has been certified by the U.S. Dept. of Labor.

Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz told the delegates that for the first time since 1942, "not a single foreign contract worker will be employed in California crops in 1968."

Since the termination of mass importation of foreign workers in 1964, domestic farm employment has increased 16 per cent; hourly farm wage rates have risen 25 per cent, Wirtz noted.

Despite the increase in farm wages, wholesale prices of fruits and vegetables were lower in July than in July 1964. It is apparent, the secretary said, that wages play a small part in determining the prices farmers get for their produce. The price rises are largely the result of increased processing costs.

Wirtz told the delegates, too, that he had torn up his government travel order and paid his own expenses so he could make a tough, hard-hitting appeal on behalf of the presidential team of Humphrey and Muskie.

Vice Pres. Humphrey presented his own case to the delegates the following night and won foot-stamping, table-pounding cheering endorsement.

In other actions, the convention boosted its per capita tax from 5 cents to 8 cents, reelected Pres. Albin Gruhn and Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts and 35 vice presidents to new terms.

Civil Rights Act Upheld In House School Vote

Most important of all, the Civil Rights Act would be upheld.

But in a House-Senate conference committee, the southern-led Senate negotiators gave in, and agreed to recommend language very similar to the original House restriction.

It was this language which civil rights, labor and church groups successfully urged the House to reject.

The first key test was won on a 175-167 rollcall. The victory was clinched on a 166-155 vote. The result was that the Senate version, rather than the House restriction, became part of the appropriations bill.

Withholding of federal funds from state and local agencies which discriminate on the basis of race is mandated by Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

In other congressional developments:

- A House-Senate conference committee agreed to lift the ceiling on the amount of tax-exempt industrial bonds a community can issue to build plants for new industries—a device often used to lure runaway shops. Earlier this year, Congress had set a $1 million limit on any such bond issue. The new provision, written into an unrelated bill, allows up to $5 million in tax-exempt bonds to benefit a single corporation over three years.
- The Senate Appropriations Committee sought to salvage the foreign aid program by voting to restore $313 million cut by the House. Even with the added money, the total would still be the smallest in 21 years. Most of the funds added were earmarked for the Alliance for Progress.
- The Senate Foreign Relations Committee recommended that the Senate approve the treaty intended to stop the spread of nuclear weapons to nations which do not now have them. But it proposed that the President hold off the final stage of ratification until a majority of other nations have signed.

Hugh Sedgwick Dies, IATSE Canadian Leader

Hamilton, Ont.—Hugh J. Sedgwick, Canadian vice president of the Theatrical Stage Employes from 1952 to July 1968, died here after surgery. A member of Moving Picture Machine Operators Local 303 since 1916, he served as secretary-treasurer of the Union Label Trades Dept. of the former Canadian Trades & Labor Congress.

Iowa Institute Explores Use Of Job Tests

Iowa City—A group of union representatives spent a week at the University of Iowa here focusing on an increasingly controversial subject—the use of tests by employers to hire and promote workers.

The occasion was the second annual AFL-CIO Institute on Testing which brought together 20 full-time representatives of eight unions and a faculty drawn from universities, the labor movement and the government.

The institute is sponsored by the research and education departments of the AFL-CIO and the University of Iowa's Center for Labor & Management.

Areas explored included the development and validity of tests, their administration, the union's right to bargain over them, how to adapt tests and the employers' obligation to furnish full information on them.

A number of speakers, including AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis and Rudy Oswald of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, described ways in which managements are using the tests to undercut union seniority clauses.

They cited a number of arbitrators' rulings of misuse of the tests. One session was devoted to preparing and presenting an arbitration case on tests.

cott this year after the growers had rejected all attempts to get them to start contract talks, or to recognize the right of employes to pick a bargaining agent. The farm workers called 7,500 grape pickers to their cause in the San Joaquin Valley of California and won widespread public backing for the pickers who are not protected by any labor laws.

Last May the AFL-CIO Executive Council endorsed the boycott and called on all labor to support the struggling union. It noted that farm workers do not enjoy the legal protections of the law in organizing, and charged California growers with entering into a conspiracy to destroy the union.

The growers have since issued statements belittling the boycott as a minor irritation. Presidential candidate Hubert H. Humphrey and Edmund S. Muskie, his running mate on the Democratic ticket, strongly backed the grape pickers. GOP Candidate Richard M. Nixon called the boycott "illegal", a charge the AFL-CIO said revealed Nixon's "ignorance" of federal labor law.

Other developments:

- The mayors of several major cities banned the buying of all California grapes for city institutions "for the duration."
- Lawrence Cardinal Shehan, Baltimore declared "our refusal to buy table grapes at this time is a small deprivation for the sake of the human rights of a most neglected segment" of society.
- Bishop John Wright, Pittsburgh, announced he has stopped eating grapes and hopes people will follow his example. He said "I like grapes but I like people more."
- The general board of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in America called on members to refrain from eating California grapes until union recognition or good-faith bargaining is assured.
- The Minnesota Rabbinical Association and other church groups also backed the boycott and urged their congregations to do likewise.

UFWOC headquarters in Delano, Calif., estimated its boycott has cost the growers $3.7 million so far this year in lost wholesale sales.

The area of largest decline, according to Agriculture Dept. reports, is New York City where shipments declined 58 percent below last year's figures. In Boston as well as Baltimore, the decline was 48 percent.

In Baltimore a survey of major grocery chains showed drops of 15 to 65 percent in grape sales. An A & P chain spokesman was quoted as saying "sales have been rapidly declining in response, we presume, to our lack of advertising and to growing sympathy for the strikers."

UFWOC Vice Pres. Andrew Imutan said 17 neighborhood committees, made up mainly of housewives, have agreed to begin picketing later this month at independent groceries selling the struck California grapes.

Baltimore area unions have distributed more than 300,000 handbills asking consumers not to buy the grapes, Imutan said.

2 Shoe Unions Win 44c Hike For 14,000

Boston—Two unions announced here that conclusion of joint contract negotiations with Interco, formerly known as the Intl. Shoe Co., will give 14,000 members a package increase of about 44 cents an hour over two years.

Pres. John E. Mara of the Boot & Shoe Workers and Pres. George Fecteau of the Shoe Workers said employes in 32 Interco plants will get wage increases of 17 cents an hour the first year and another 15 cents in 1969 for hourly paid workers. Piece rate workers get percentage increases averaging 17 cents the first year, 15.3 cents the second.

A union announcement said the contract provides two significant gains: a severance pay plan giving lump sums based on years of service in the event of a factory closing or removal, and a schedule of minimum hourly rates at least 15 cents above federal wage minimums.

Severance payments will be at the rate of $30 for each year of service for workers with at least 15 years of service. Improved pensions and vacation schedules, and Good Friday as a paid holiday were gained. Increased surgical and hospital allowances will give better coverage, the two unions said.

Crowds, Response Grow:

Humphrey's Drive Gathers Momentum

Republican economic mismanagement" and contrasted them with "the 90 months of sensational economic growth and uninterrupted prosperity" since 1961.

"The American worker," he suggested "will remember when he opened each pay check with the dread that he might find a layoff notice in his envelope."

In the South, Humphrey took out after Wallace on the latter's home grounds. Addressing a noon rally of nearly 12,000 in downtown Jacksonville, he charged that despite the former Alabama governor's claims, he is actually an "enemy of the working man."

Wallace's "strategy of organized hate," Humphrey declared, can, if left unanswered, "lead America to disaster just as surely as the radical tactics of the shouters and disrupters."

'Divisive' Campaign

"The more serious threat," he continued, "arises from his calculated campaign to divide this nation, to deliberately inflame the fears, frustrations and prejudices of our people, to bring this nation to the brink of broad scale civil disorder."

To a crowd of more than 20,000 at the Charlotte, N.C., sports arena —three to four times more than Nixon and Wallace drew in previous appearances—the Vice President charged that Nixon is trying to "out-Wallace Wallace." He called the GOP candidate "a man who deliberately courted the most radical extremist element in his own party, who continues this appeal in his speeches, and who will be fully in their debt should he win the presidency."

Humphrey continued to press Nixon to break his silence on key issues in the campaign and to agree to a nationally televised debate, referring to his opponent as "the shadow" and "Brand X." But Nixon, who fared poorly in a series of televised debates with the late Pres. John F. Kennedy in the 1960 campaign, so far has refused to accept the challenge.

Foreign Policy

The Vice President's foreign policy address was taped in Salt Lake City and televised nationally. The key paragraphs said:

"As President, I would stop the bombing of the North as an acceptable risk for peace because I believe it could lead to success in the negotiations and thereby shorten the war. This would be the best protection for our troops.

"In weighing that risk—and before taking action—I would place key importance on evidence—direct or indirect—by deed or word —of Communist willingness to restore the demilitarized zone between North and South Viet Nam.

Good Faith Required

"If the government of North Viet Nam were to show bad faith, I would reserve the right to resume the bombing."

The speech drew warm praise from a number of supporters of Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy and the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, who had opposed Humphrey for the Democratic nomination and criticized the Administration's conduct of the war.

In Paris, Ambassador W. Averell Harriman, chief U.S. representative at the peace talks, promptly denied a charge by Nixon that the Humphrey speech hampered the negotiations.

Kennedy Approves

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, who had previously given a strong endorsement to the Vice President, hailed the speech in a telegram to Humphrey.

"To all who look for peace in Viet Nam," Kennedy said, "you have given great encouragement and hope. You are the only candidate for the presidency who has offered the American people proposals for ending the war. . . ."

In addition to the bombing halt, Humphrey proposed a "de-Americanization" of the war by shifting the military responsibility to the South Vietnamese, an internationally supervised cease-fire and supervised withdrawal of all foreign troops, and free elections among the people of South Viet Nam.

Muskie, of Polish descent, stressed that 40 million immigrants found a good life here because America "was an open society." It must remain "free and open," he declared.

"Building walls with the idea that they can provide safety and security" is not the answer.

Muskie differentiated between the "hard-core trouble makers" who have tried to disrupt campaign appearances and the "decent human beings" among the protesters, young people who feel helpless to influence "the impersonal machinery of government."

Michigan AFL-CIO Pres. August Scholle made a similar distinction in his keynote address to the state COPE convention. But he warned that "in a democratic society, you don't adopt tactics of a fascist state by booing, jeering and shouting." These tactics, he declared, are repelling "many of us who had been sympathetic toward some of their objectives."

Scholle said the disrupters of meetings are trying "to prevent the most liberal individual nominated in this country, Hubert Humphrey, from speaking."

He asked: "If they destroy the only liberal, progressive guy that's running, what do they want—Tricky Dick or do they want Wallace and the police state?"

Agnew Steps Up Pace— Two Goofs in One Day

Toledo—Maryland Gov. Spiro T. Agnew managed to do it again —and again—during a one-day visit here.

The Republican vice presidential candidate added to his list of "foot-in-the-mouth" bloopers during an outdoor rally in downtown Toledo.

First he described himself as "a labor lawyer by trade" and denounced the boycott of struck California grapes as an "unfair tactic."

Instead of a boycott, Agnew said, the union's representatives should be "sitting across the bargaining table" and trying to settle their dispute "in the traditional American fashion."

Just a few weeks earlier, Richard M. Nixon likewise denounced the grape boycott as "illegal" and said the issue should be settled by the National Labor Relations Board.

He was promptly reminded by the AFL-CIO Executive Council and the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee that farm workers are not covered by federal labor law and, since the grape growers refuse to recognize the union or bargain, the workers must strike and boycott.

A Lawyer Should Know

As a lawyer as well as a presidential candidate, the union suggested, Nixon should know that.

But Agnew, as a self-styled "labor lawyer," apparently didn't know it either—even though extension of the National Labor Relations Act to farm workers has been blocked by a Republican-Dixie coalition in Congress.

Then Agnew sharply criticized Toledo's Mayor William Ensign, a Democrat, for not meeting him at the airport. He had to get the traditional "key to the city" from a Republican member of the city council, Agnew complained.

The next morning, the Toledo Blade ran a front page picture of Mayor Ensign presenting the city's traditional glass key to Agnew at the airport. The mayor was quoted as saying that he had "a large tag" on his lapel identifying himself.

An aide to Agnew said there would be no apology. The Republican candidate, he said, was apparently "misinformed as to who the guy was" who presented the key.

Iron Worker Muskie Hits Trail for Ed

Los Angeles—Iron Worker Eugene Muskie is on the campaign trail.

He is barnstorming through the country's 12 most populous states working for the election of his brother, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie—the running mate of Democratic presidential candidate Hubert H. Humphrey.

Muskie, a member of Iron Workers Local 433 in Los Angeles since 1946, has been temporarily assigned by union Pres. John H. Lyons to full-time duty with COPE.

Assisting Muskie on the campaign tour is Jake West, business agent of the Los Angeles local.

The two-man Iron Workers' team has been hop-scotching around the nation for the past few weeks. After getting their assignment in St. Louis at the Iron Workers headquarters, they continued their trip and made stops in Washington, D.C., and Phoenix.

They are visiting central labor councils, workers on the job, and other labor groups spreading the word about the pro-labor Humphrey-Muskie ticket.

Muskie and West took to the campaign trail with the best wishes of the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO. An early stop was the State AFL-CIO convention in Sacramento.

Hayes J. Alvis Named to N.Y. Red Cross Post

New York—Hayes J. Alvis, supervisor of social services for Musicians Local 802 here for the past five years, has been named labor liaison officer for the American Red Cross in Greater New York.

The appointment was made by ARC on the recommendation of Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO. Alvis succeeds John Burnell, who has become director of the city federation's Neighborhood Youth Corps Committee.

ILGWU Sets Radio Series On Campaign

New York—The Ladies' Garment Workers have launched a series of 15-minute radio programs over the National Broadcasting Co. network to explain the issues in the 1968 elections.

Featured speakers on the programs, to be broadcast by more than 300 stations every Thursday evening will be Pres. Johnson, Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, Sen. Edmund Muskie and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

The kickoff program, with Johnson speaking, will be aired Oct. 10. Meany will speak on the Oct. 17th program followed by Muskie on Oct. 24 and Humphrey on the concluding broadcast, Oct. 31.

The programs, also featuring prominent actors and entertainers, will be aired at 7:45 p.m. (EST), 6:45 p.m. (CST), 5:45 (MST) and 7:45 p.m. (PST). The union advised that listeners check local station listings in their newspapers.

LBJ Warns GOP Will Pull Nation Apart

Strong Plea Voiced for Humphrey

Pres. Johnson warned the American people that the Nixon-Agnew ticket will "pull this nation downward . . . into another cycle of Republicn reaction and inaction . . . they really promise to pull America apart."

His warning came in a nationwide radio broadcast over 300 stations sponsored by the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union in which he gave a ringing endorsement to the Humphrey-Muskie ticket "as strong and forceful voices for creative new programs and for the enduring values of our democracy."

Declaring that "Americans are too wise to waste their votes on a false prophet of fear," George Wallace, the President singled out Nixon as the major target in the election. The former Vice President, Johnson said, opposed aid to education, medicare and "much vital and progressive legislation" and has called for delay in adopting the treaty against the spread of nuclear weapons.

To Wallace's campaign theme that "there's not a dime's worth of difference between the major candidates," the President said:

"There is all the difference of daylight and darkness between the Nixon-Agnew Republican record of reaction and recession —and the kind of forward-looking leadership that the Humphrey-Muskie ticket offers to you Americans."

Noting that the people rejected "do-nothing, stand-pat politics" in 1960 and 1964, the President in his address over NBC said it is not enough to stand still, that there are too many challenges still unmet.

Tracing his friendship with Humphrey over a 20-year period, the President ticked off his leadership and initiative in legislation securing the Peace Corps, the nuclear test ban treaty, Food for Peace, medicare and many others. He said he asked Humphrey to be his running mate in 1964 "because I believed him to be the best qualified man to serve as President." Humphrey's choice of Muskie is similarly wise he added.

"Few men that I have ever known have understood our urgent national needs so well as Hubert Humphrey and Edmund Muskie," and they will carry forward the

IAM Wins Major Pact At Boeing

Seattle—Machinists at Boeing plants and missile bases around the nation have voted acceptance of a new three-year contract valued by the union at $1.03 to $1.13 an hour.

The vote to ratify among units representing 68,000 employes of the world's largest producer of commercial planes was by margins of about 4-1, the union said.

IAM Vice Pres. Charles F. West, chairman of the union's Aerospace Conference, called the settlement "an outstanding breakthrough." It was the fourth of the kind at major installations, with three still to go in this year's round of negotiations.

Still up for settlement are contracts expiring Nov. 3 at the McDonnell Douglas plant in St.

Meany Cites 8-Year Gain In Urging Humphrey Vote

CHEERING SUPPORTERS greet Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey at the Charlotte Coliseum during his campaign visit to North Carolina. The Humphrey rally got a big boost from labor as almost 75 busloads of trade unionists made the trip to Charlotte from around the state and from South Carolina. The Charlotte turnout for Humphrey was larger than for earlier visits of Nixon and Wallace.

Bids Workers to Guard Investment

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called on American workers to protect "the investment we have made in America in the past eight years" by doing their best to help elect Hubert Humphrey as President, Edmund Muskie as Vice President and congressional candidates "who believe, as we do, in a better America for everyone."

Meany issued the appeal in the first of a series of five-minute radio messages over the National Broadcasting Co. network on the issues in the 1968 political campaign. Three further programs are scheduled for successive Fridays at 7:45 p.m. (EDT).

The Nov. 5 election Meany said, poses "a crucial decision" for the nation and the American trade union movement "has a vital interest" in that decision.

"In a time when the world is in ferment, and in a time when there is contention at home, the decision we make on these matters is not one to be made on the basis of whim, or fear, or hate," Meany declared. "It is a decision that demands thought and an objective assessment of where we've been, where we are, and where we hope to go.

"My concern, and I believe the concern of all working men and women in this country, is that we not squander the investment we have made in America in the past eight years. They have been years of productivity and creativity that have no parallel in history."

Meany ran the record of accomplishments during the last eight years of "uninterrupted economic growth":

- "We have made basic social reforms within the framework of our democratic society.
- "The real income of the overwhelming majority of Americans has constantly risen.

Jobs Level Stays Firm For Nation

By Robert B. Cooney

The job situation across the nation remained strong in September while the unemployment rate of 3.6 percent held close to the post-Korean War low, the Labor Dept. reported.

The department's monthly report showed non-farm payroll employment increasing by 123,000 to 68.5 million, seasonally adjusted.

Compared to September 1967, there has been a gain of 2.1 million jobs, the report said. Two-thirds of the increase came in the areas of retail and wholesale trade, services and state and local government.

The August to September job pickup was the smallest in four months, the report noted, reflecting more modest gains in the service-producing industries while employment remained stable in the goods-producing sector.

The situation for the fulltime breadwinner remains one of "low levels of unemployment," summarized Harold Goldstein, Labor Dept. manpower expert.

The report showed jobless rates

Renews Debate Challenge:

Humphrey Charges Foe Dodges Issues

By John M. Barry

Vice Pres. Humphrey renewed his challenge to Richard M. Nixon to end his "silence" and agree to "go before the American people" to debate the issues in the presidential election campaign.

Humphrey received no response from his Republican opponent, however, to a telegram asking Nixon to join in urging Congress to suspend the equal time provisions of the Communications Act so that television debates could be arranged to include third-party candidate George C. Wallace.

Instead, Republicans in the House engaged in a "mini-buster" to delay passage of the legislation and the measure was put aside in the Senate when GOP leaders threatened a full-scale filibuster. (Story, Page 5.)

Nixon has taken the position that he will not engage in any debate that includes Wallace. But he has also ducked the Vice President's proposals for head-to-head television debates "under whatever circumstances and financing could be arranged."

Humphrey said the two candidates "could have as many debates as we want, even one a week until election day. . . . I am ready and I've been waiting."

The Vice President repeated his challenge again and again in another encouraging week of campaigning that took him through major industrial centers of the Northeast.

In Utica, N.Y., and Erie and Wilkes-Barre, Pa., he charged that Nixon Keys Well-Oiled Campaign To Fears, Frustrations of Public

By David L. Perlman

Minneapolis—Richard M. Nixon is seeking the presidency that narrowly eluded him eight years ago with a "sock it to them" campaign keyed to the fears and frustrations of the American people.

In suburban shopping centers and in city auditoriums, as the Republican presidential candidate criss-crosses the nation, the litany is the same.

War, crime, riots, high prices and high taxes are laid at the doorstep of the Democrats.

Under his Administration, Nixon promises grandly, "we'll have prosperity without war; progress without inflation."

He does not say how. But the thousands bused to rallies by efficient Republican organizations respond with enthusiastic applause. Cheer leaders at microphones start the chant, "We want Nixon." Well-scrubbed, cleancut suburban teenagers bring the enthusiasm of a high school pep rally to the campaign trail.

In bits and pieces in his longer public speeches and in more sedate surroundings, such as a question and answer session with a large group of editors, Nixon spells out a philosophy—if not a program—of government.

Its thesis is that the federal government should get out of the business of helping people and trying to overcome national problems with federal programs or funds.

If federal aid is essential, money should be turned over to the states to spend as they wish.

As far as solving problems of Teachers Union Enlisting Support For Program to Upgrade Schools

The American Federation of Teachers has called on the labor movement to help America's public schools achieve the standards of excellence they must have to do their job properly.

The nation "needs to start as soon as possible," the AFT said in a report to the AFL-CIO Executive Council, on a balanced 10-year program requiring "a massive infusion of funds, new and adequate federal legislation" and "related efforts at all levels." More school funds would come, under the AFT program, from federal sources and less from state and local taxes.

The educators' union, basing its recommendations on a study by a professional staff under Leon H. Keyserling, chairman of former Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, said the program can be made "a legislative item of the highest priority in the 91st Congress" with the support of the labor, liberal and civil rights community of organizations.

"The problems of our public schools and what to do about them," the report said, "are neither debatable nor postponable."

Declaring "the facts are indisputable," the AFT ticked them off in this order:

- Ten percent of the children who should be in the public schools are, in some states, "not there at all."
- The shortage of teachers, especially fully-qualified teachers, is acute in many areas.
- Teachers' pay is "grossly inadequate." Last year it averaged $6,830 a year, nationwide.
- Many classrooms are overcrowded, and much of the physical plant is "shabby, outmoded or even dangerous."

The report, adopted as union policy by the AFT's 1968 convention, calls for a rise in total school expenditures from $28.3 billion in 1967 to $70.1 billion by 1977.

Under the union's program, the federal government's share of the cost of public school education would rise from 8.1 percent to 38.9 percent. Local and state governments would pay 61.1 percent in 1967 as against 91.9 percent for 1967.

In 1967, the report said, state and local governments paid $26 billion of the total cost, federal taxes $2.3 billion. The proportion should be turned around, the Keyserling study maintained. It set these main goals for the nation:

Per pupil outlays for all public school purposes should be raised in the next 10 years from an average of $660 to $1,534.

Enrollment should be increased from 43 million to 45.7 million, or 6.3 percent, by accommodating through the 12th grade every youth aged 5 to 17 not now served by private schools.

Classroom teachers should be increased from 1.8 million to 2.3 million, or 27.8 percent. Including replacements, more than 2.1 million new teachers will be needed over the decade.

Average teacher salaries should be raised from $6,830 as of 1967 to a minimum of $10,711 by 1977—an average annual increase of 4.6 percent, not counting needed living-cost increases.

Non-teacher instructional staffs should rise from 188,000 to 1.5 million—some principals, supervisors, librarians and guidance personnel but mostly assistant teachers not fully accredited to teach alone, at salaries rising at the same pace as those of teachers.

Noninstructional outlays need to be "increased greatly" for administration, plant operation, salaries, and programs for summer schools, adult education and school lunches.

The available supply of classrooms, the report advised, should be raised from 1.6 million to 2.285 million to accommodate increased enrollment and to reduce class size from the present average of 24 pupils per teacher to an average of 20 for the nation.

"We can well afford the cost of the program," the union told the AFL-CIO. A nation which proposes to spend $89.5 billions in fiscal 1969 for national defense, space technology and international affairs can budget $32.9 billion for all educational expenses by 1977 if it really desires to do so, its report noted.

Keyserling's study pointed out that America's economic growth should pay for the program, with "freedom and flexibility at state and local levels," without raising federal taxes.

It concluded that only half of 1 percent of the national product is spent on public school education. The federal government, it noted, pays 50 percent of the cost of building U.S. highways and 100 percent of the cost of developing supersonic air liners, but only 8 percent of public education costs.

AFT Pres. David Selden recalled in submitting the report that "the labor movement is historically identified with support to public education." While public school conditions, because of the legislative activities of the AFL-CIO, are far better than they would have been without such action, "our public schools are still far behind where they ought to be, and will fall even farther behind in the years ahead," unless a corrective program is "quickly set in motion," Selden asserted.

NEW PRESIDENTS of AFL-CIO unions are Timothy J. O'Sullivan, left, of the Broadcast Employes & Technicians, and Thomas E. Boyle of the Chemical Workers. O'Sullivan won a three-year term at the NABET convention in Chicago. Boyle was chosen by the ICWU executive board to serve a four-year term as successor to Walter L. Mitchell, who died unexpectedly after his re-election.

At Labor Party Conference:

British Unions Lead Wage Policy Attack

Blackpool, England—The British Labor Party conference here, attended by many of the country's union leaders, rejected the Labor Government's prices and incomes legislation.

The vote against the measure, which allows the government to delay wage increases negotiated by unions, was 5,098,000 to 1,124,000. Only a month ago the British Trades Union Congress also called for repeal of the bill by a 7-to-1 margin.

The conference ignored pleas by Employment & Productivity Minister Barbara Castle and Chancellor of the Exchequer Roy Jenkins for support of the act.

Despite the outcome of the vote, Prime Minister Harold Wilson told the delegates that the government would not change its wage and price policy.

Mrs. Castle was slightly more conciliatory when she offered to set up discussions between the Government and the TUC to decide what policy should follow the Prices & Incomes Act when it expires at the end of 1969.

The attack on the policy was led by Hugh Scanlon, Engineers leader, and Transport & General Workers' leader, Frank Cousins, who resigned from Wilson's Government because of the incomes policy in 1966.

But the harshest attack came from one of the Labor Party's own members in Parliament, Michael Foot. "As a Socialist, I am not prepared to tolerate the scourge of unemployment at the rate we have had it over the years," he stated.

Criticism of the Labor Government was the harshest in years at a Party conference, and it reached its peak when the address by Party Chairman Jennie Lee was interrupted by mine workers protesting at the Government's pit closure policy. Miners have always been regarded as Labor's most loyal supporters.

Indeed, Government ministers were afraid of losing control of the conference, which is run by the party's national executive and dominated by the "block votes" of the unions. A union has one vote for each member affiliated to the party. This means that Cousins' Transport Workers, for example, have a million votes.

The Government's narrowest squeak came when the executive itself almost rejected the incomes policy. Only a vote cast by Chairman Lee saved the day for Wilson and his colleagues. Fears were expressed that the Government would be in a permanent minority after the elections to the executive at the conference, which are also influenced by union block votes, but this threat did not materialize.

Expanded Program Set By Minnesota AFL-CIO

Minneapolis—Delegates to the Minnesota AFL-CIO's 11th constitutional convention launched a vigorous drive to stamp all aspects of Minnesota life with the union label.

To lead the way to a rejuvenation of organized labor's role in Minnesota affairs, delegates re-elected by acclamation Pres. David K. Roe, a Lather; Executive Vice Pres. Leonard LaShomb, a member of the Meat Cutters and Sec.-Treas. Neil C. Sherburne, a Carpenter.

At the same time, the convention armed the leadership with changes in the constitution designed to make the State AFL-CIO's work more effective:

- Per capita tax was raised 25 percent, from 12 to 15 cents.
- The portion earmarked for legislative work was increased 12½ percent to three cents, or 20 percent of the budget.
- The term of office was adjusted to make sure any new president will have a full year for learning the ropes before facing the challenge of a session of the state legislature. Beginning in 1971, officers will be elected in the odd-numbered years for two-year terms.
- The convention voted to continue a committee named a year ago to explore establishment of a statewide AFL-CIO weekly newspaper. Such a paper, begun experimentally in March as a 4-page monthly, was published prior to the convention as an 8-page supplement to the three existing labor weeklies in Minnesota. Response to this pilot project was "excellent", Roe told the delegates.

National attention was focused on the Minneapolis meeting with the appearance of Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, who threw away his prepared speech and let fly with a blast at Nixon and Wallace which brought his audience to its feet repeatedly.

Peter Cardenas, a striking grape picker, appeared before the convention to appeal for support of the boycott of California table grapes being pressed by the AFL-CIO Farm Workers. William R. Robertson, strike director for the unions at the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner, asked the convention's support for the boycott of Hearst publications and the "dirty dozen" of national advertisers who are supporting the struck paper.

In a spontaneous gesture, delegates passed the hat after the appearance of each and raised $676 for the farm workers and about as much for Hearst strikers.

The convention drew up a "shopping list" of more than 40 items for its spokesmen to take to the coming session of the legislature. Many dealt with the right of public employes to organize and to engage in real collective bargaining.

Top of the list is sales tax reform. Roe told delegates that the so-called "tax relief and reform" law adopted by the conservative-controlled 1967 legislature, which was presented as reducing property taxes on small homes in exchange for a sales tax, had turned out to be no reform at all, with its relief largely going to Minnesota's biggest businesses.

Daugherty Confirmed For D.C. Council Seat

The Senate confirmed the nomination of Philip J. Daugherty, member of the Office & Professional Employes, as a member of the Washington, D.C. city council.

Daugherty, 37, works as a special representative for OPEIU Local 2. Pres. Johnson named him to succeed Jay C. Turner, who resigned. Turner is president of the Greater Washington AFL-CIO and an officer of the Operating Engineers.

Before Iron Workers:

Muskie Says Nixon 'Afraid' to Debate

New York—Sen. Edmund S. Muskie charged at the Iron Workers convention here that Nixon is "afraid" to meet Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey in open debate and said it was "time Richard Nixon stopped hiding behind George Wallace."

He referred to the Nixon assertion that he was willing to meet the Vice President in debate only if third-party candidate George C. Wallace does not participate. Muskie told 1,500 delegates and guests at the 33rd convention of the union he was "appalled" at those who say there is "no difference" among the presidential candidates.

Nixon and Wallace, he charged, are conducting a campaign based on "fear and division—Americans against Americans," whereas Humphrey is the "only presidential candidate who believes in appealing to the instinct of Americans to unite."

"I think we have to face the fact that if Mr. Nixon wins in November it will not be because a majority of Americans favor him, but because a minority of Americans have deserted the Democratic party for the likes of Wallace," he asserted.

He reminded the convention that while Wallace holds himself out as a law and order advocate, the record when he was governor was that Alabama had the highest murder rate of any of the 50 states.

"His state is a right-to-work state," Muskie pointed out, and asked: "Have you meant what you said to me over the last 10 years about your opposition to right-to-work? My record is clear and so is George Wallace's. Which of us is your choice?

"I say to the laboring men and women of this country that it is time that you looked at the whole record . . .(of) Wallace. He has no law and order record. He has no labor record. He has no record in the field of human rights or social justice."

Muskie said that while most Americans share in prosperity, now in its eighth year, "millions of men and women, blacks and whites, Indian and Mexican-Americans are living in poverty and deprived of full opportunities, with their frustrations breaking out at times in violence."

Muskie, whose brother, Eugene, is an Iron Worker, drew a parallel from labor's experience in the 1930s, saying he and they remembered "the fight for the right to bargain collectively, the protests, the dissent which sometimes erupted in violence at a time when labor did not get its fair share of the fruits of our resources and our industry."

He said that in the past 180 years in America "we have enlarged our capacity to provide hoped-for improvement for greater and greater numbers of Americans" and added that "there is still plenty of room at the top—that is the story of American society. We cannot ignore those who demand equal opportunity as Mr. Nixon would have us do, and we cannot suppress them as Mr. Wallace would have us do."

Muskie said that if people ignore the plight of the poor and yield to "appeals of a Wallace, who says the way to build safety and security for those who already have a stake in our society is to build a wall between them and those who do not have that stake," the result would be "hatred, fear and instability—on both sides of the wall there will be no safety or security for anyone."

Taking note of the principal slogan of the GOP nominee, "Nixon's the one", he asked "What one?" and gave some answers.

"Who cast the deciding vote against federal aid to education when he was Vice President? Nixon's the one.

"And who voted to deny social security coverage to 750,000 workers? Nixon's the one.

"Who voted against increases in public assistance to old people, the blind and disabled? Nixon's the one.

"Who voted against adequate rural electrification loan funds? Nixon's the one.

"Who was Vice President in the Administration that vetoed the area redevelopment program? Nixon is the one again."

The choice in November, Muskie said, is between Humphrey with a continuing, open, expanding, growing society and Nixon and Wallace with an increasingly closed, stagnant, selfish and divided America.

"If you people in labor cannot and will not mobilize your resources and your spirits to fight on the right side of this issue from coast to coast and from one corner of this country to another, then our country is indeed in deep trouble," he warned.

He expressed the firm belief, however, that there are enough Americans concerned for the future and what America represents "to do the job on Nov. 5 if we can open their eyes, get them moving on the road and into the polling places" on election day.

Delegates and guests gave Muskie standing ovations as he entered the convention hall and on the conclusion of his address.

Lyons Calls Coverage Of Muskie Talk Slanted

New York—Iron Workers Pres. John H. Lyons has charged that a New York Times article on Sen. Edmund S. Muskie's address to the union's convention here was "incredibly inaccurate, slanted and destructively misleading."

In a letter to James Reston, executive editor of the Times, Lyons wrote that all of the 1,500 officers, delegates and guests at the convention were "shocked and offended" by an interpretation placed on their reaction to the speech.

He charged that the Times story went "to amazing lengths" to emphasize that "there was not a flutter of response or applause" from the audience and "there was only silence" when Muskie made his points.

Lyons said everyone present "recognized that the silence was in fact a tribute to the eloquence and persuasiveness of the speech." Its impact on the audience "was tremendous" and it was not the type of speech to be interrupted by applause, he added.

"Apparently it is impossible to obtain fair coverage these days," Lyons concluded, "unless you heckle, disturb or demonstrate abusively. To listen, attentively and thoughtfully, merely elicits scorn."

Shipbuilders Urge Federal Action To Check Stagnation of U.S. Yards

Miami Beach—American shipbuilding faces "a threat of near obliteration in the next five years" unless the United States takes "emergency measures" against foreign-built ships, conglomerate corporations and other problems facing the industry.

This was the grim message to come out of the 24th convention of the Marine and Shipbuilding Workers as more than 200 delegates met here.

Part of the answer to the problem facing the workers in American shipyards, the convention said in a resolution of endorsement, is the election of Hubert H. Humphrey as President.

Earlier the convention had elected Andrew A. Pettis as president to succeed the late John J. Grogan, who died Sept. 16. John F. Bonner was named vice president. Ross D. Blood is secretary-treasurer. Two new board members—Melvin E. Bohle, Baltimore, and Antonio Svizzero, Quincy, Mass., were elected.

The president's salary was raised to $30,000 from $20,000; the vice president's and the secretary-treasurer's from $17,500 to $25,000.

In a somber officers' report to the convention, stunned by Grogan's death, delegates were told that the "trial and ordeal" experienced since the union's last convention continue via "a shortsighted and destructive government policy to scuttle the American Merchant Marine and doom the shipyards."

The overshadowing issue is the "relentless assault to open wide the breach to permit operators to obtain foreign-built ships," the union said.

Conglomerate corporations, it was stated, swallow up shipyards in their hunt for profitable situations and present complex problems for workers.

All is not black, according to the officers. The two-year period also ended with some of the highest gross monetary wage increases in the union's history, plus improved pension plans, better holiday and vacation terms, broader safety provisions and other advances in working conditions.

The report said "it is a sad and grim fact of life that we have not yet begun to move in the proper direction as far as our Merchant Marine is concerned." The United States is now in sixth place in the world in terms of the size of the fleet, the officers noted, and has fallen from first to sixteenth place in terms of shipbuilding output.

The union's resolution supporting Humphrey—it passed another one backing the Administration's Viet Nam policy—said he "has fought shoulder-to-shoulder with labor and other progressive elements of American society in the struggle for social reform and progress in America. The organized labor movement has never had reason to doubt where Humphrey stands or where his heart is."

Closer to home, the officers said the election of the Vice President—plus friendly congressmen—would enhance the "battle for survival and advancement of our membership, our union and our industry."

A series of resolutions dealing specifically with the shipbuilding industry called among other things for an "intensive and effective campaign against any and all build-abroad proposals," an independent Maritime Administration, a nuclear vessel program for the merchant marine, and the salvage of the U.S. fishing fleet through a new system of tax incentives for construction and modernization.

A number of amendments to the constitution were adopted to prevent confusion in succession of office in the union. On the death of a union president, the office is filled by the vice president; then the vice president's job will be filled at the next national convention. If the vice president's office is vacated, it shall be filled by an appointment made by the president with the concurrence of the executive board.

Amendments also clarified succession in the secretary-treasurer and GEB posts.

The convention paid tribute to Grogan in a three-hour memorial. Clergymen of the three major faiths led the services, with officers, delegates, close friends and family voicing their reaction to his sudden passing. The speeches and messages from around the world were interspersed with comments from delegates as well.

September Jobless Rate, Employment Hold Firm

of 2.2 percent for adult men, 1.6 percent for married men and 3.2 percent for fulltime workers, all virtually unchanged from August.

The overall jobless rate of 3.6 percent compares to the post-Korean war low of 3.5 percent in August, 3.7 percent in July, 3.8 percent in June and 3.5 percent in May. The rate for September a year ago was 4.1 percent. The rate has averaged 3.6 so far this year.

The jobless rates for Negroes and for teenagers remained stubbornly high.

The unemployment rate for Negroes stood at 6.7 percent in September and for whites it was 3.2 percent. For the third quarter of 1968, the rate was 3.3 percent for whites and 6.6 percent or twice as high for non-whites, as it has been for the past 15 years since the Korean War.

The teenage jobless rate was 12.6 percent last month, about the same as in August and not much improved from the 13.4 percent of September 1967.

The jobless rate for Negro teenagers was an explosive 27.1 percent in September, two and a half times more than the high 10.7 percent rate for white teenagers.

A continuing bright spot in the jobless area was the reduction in the number of hardcore or long-term unemployed—those actively seeking work and failing to find it for 15 weeks or more. This group totaled 370,000 in September, seasonally adjusted, and was "at the lowest point in about 15 years," the report said. It was the third time this year that this group had been reduced below 400,000.

In the factory sector, the Labor Dept. report said employment has remained stable even while industrial activity has been high over the past four months. Manufacturing employment was unchanged at 19.8 million in September, seasonally adjusted.

On hours and earnings, the report showed the average workweek at 38.0 hours in September and average hourly earnings for production workers rising by 4 cents to $2.90. Gross weekly earnings were up by 95 cents to $110.49.

Louis; the same date at United Aircraft in East Hartford, Conn., and Dec. 4 at United facilities in Southington and Middletown, Conn.

Wages in the new Boeing pact are slated to rise by 25.5 to 45.5 cents an hour this year, 9 to 14 cents next year and an additional 9 to 14 cents the third year.

With the final increase Oct. 2, 1970, Boeing rates will range from a minimum of $3.185 an hour to $4.88 an hour, plus cost-of-living adjustments ranging from 3 to 8 cents an hour each year, the IAM reported.

The union achieved other major objectives, including strengthened grievance procedure ending in impartial arbitration, automatic progression for major work classifications, elimination of 927 job titles and other improvements, including guaranteed action on grievances within a 30-day period.

Major Boeing plants are at Seattle, Wichita, Kans., Cape Kennedy, Fla., Michoud, La., Huntsville, Ala., and Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif. The firm also does contract work for the Defense Dept. at scattered missile bases.

The contract provides for the abolition of Boeing's 25-year-old job evaluation system and its replacement by a new job ranking system that puts all jobs requiring similar skills in the same labor grade.

A dental program covering most dental costs for members and their families will begin in 1970 with funds diverted from the cost-of-living adjustment due in late 1969.

Boeing workers will be reimbursed for eye examinations every two years for each family member. Life insurance coverage was raised 40 percent to $10,000. Hospital benefits are raised by 75 percent for Seattle employes, with proportionate raises at other locations.

Monthly pension benefits will go from $4.25 to $5.75 per year of service after next Jan. 1. Pension benefits for prior service are increased $1 a month for each year of service.

Other improvements include a 10th holiday to assure four and five-day "mini-vacations" at Christmas in 1968 and 1969 and at New Year's in 1970; four weeks vacation after 10 years, four weeks plus four days after 20 years.

Boeing management agreed to increase the shop steward ratio from 1 for each 200 workers to one for each 150.

1-Vote Edge Given IAM At McDonnell Douglas

St. Louis—The Machinists Union has apparently fended off a combined raid by the Teamsters and Auto Workers on the 22,000-member McDonnell Douglas aerospace unit here.

In a labor board election, District 837 of the IAM polled 8,981 votes to 8,980 for an insurgent group called "TEAM," whose leaders declared their intention of affiliating with the Teamsters.

Two additional ballots were challenged on grounds of legibility. The NLRB regional director will rule on their validity next week. It also seems certain that the other 17,961 paper ballots will be recounted.

The election was a runoff of an earlier contest in which the UAW and no union were also on the ballot. That time the IAM had an 80-vote edge over TEAM, each with slightly over 6,000; the UAW polled about 5,500, and the no union vote was negligible.

In subsequent full-page advertisements, a message signed by the UAW officers endorsed the "TEAM-sters."

Walter P. Reuther, UAW president, came here four days before the runoff election to renew his endorsement. A taped message from him was broadcast as a commercial on local radio stations.

The present IAM contract with McDonnell Douglas here will expire early next month. Although District 837 has drawn up a bargaining program designed to exceed the substantial settlements already achieved by IAM with the same company's West Coast plant and with Boeing and Lockheed, negotiations are forbidden by law until the certification question is settled.

Through a quirk in the law as interpreted by the NLRB, if the final vote should be a tie there could be no union in the plant for a year.

Border Pact Drafted:

Boycott of California Grapes Pressed by Mexican Unions

Monterrey, Mexico—Resolutions pledging full support to the AFL-CIO Farm Workers' boycott of California grapes and setting up a program of local joint committees in cities along the U.S.-American border climaxed the 12th Intl. Conference of the Joint United States-Mexico Trade Union Committee.

The top-level Mexican delegation was led by Gen. Sec. Fidel Velazquez of the Mexican Confederation of Workers (CTM). It included two members of the Senate of Mexico as well as Alfonso Sanchez Madariaga, president of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT).

The delegation promised that immediate action would be taken to halt the sale of California grapes in Baja California and to prevent their shipment to other parts of Mexico. The conference also directed the chairman, ORIT Gen. Sec. Arturo Jáuregui H., to send a telegram to UFWOC Dir. Cesar Chavez pledging full support of the grape boycott.

Highlight of the conference was the adoption of a six-point "Resolution of Monterrey," which observed that "over the years the success of the Joint United States-Mexico Trade Union Committee has been demonstrated through our joint agreements for cooperation and mutual assistance along the U.S.-Mexico border." It declared that the Joint Committee is "now resolved to greatly expand these reciprocal agreements and to make them function more effectively so that they will become true symbols of the great international friendship which exists between the workers of our two countries."

The resolution called for establishment of local joint committees by Mexican and U.S. labor groups in every city along the border. It stipulated that these local committees should meet at least monthly to work out programs for their areas subject to approval and implementation by the national committees of the two countries.

The resolution also pledged the committee to cooperate fully with ORIT in strengthening programs for the defense of human rights and the preservation of freedom and free trade unionism. It also proposed that leaders of unions in similar industries in the two countries increase their contacts through joint meetings and exchange of visits and information.

The draft of the resolution was prepared by a subcommittee headed by Frank L. Noakes, secretary-treasurer of the Maintenance of Way Employes, who headed the U.S. delegation. Its preparation followed extensive discussion of the committee's past experience with mutual assistance pacts between U.S. and Mexican unions along the border, existing since the San Diego-Tijuana agreement of 1953.

Later, a series known as the "Rio Bravo Pacts" united the workers along the Texas border. More recently, mutual assistance between the AFL-CIO and the CTM has been demonstrated in agreements covering work on the Amistad Dam and support for the farm workers' strike near Rio Grande City, Tex. In the former instance, AFL-CIO help was instrumental in obtaining CTM recognition as the union representing Mexican workers on the Amistad Dam project. In the farm workers' strike, the CTM effectively halted the importation of strikebreakers from Mexico and stood firm even though farm employer pressures caused the arrest of some of its leaders because of this support.

The conference studied a report on the meeting of the subcommittee of the AFL-CIO Executive Council with a similar subcommittee of the CTM which was set up at the preceding conference to investigate the effects of the Mexican Border Industrialization Program upon the welfare of workers on both sides of the border.

Jésus Elías Piña, who heads the Mexican section of the subcommittee, said that his group is working on the problem and will be ready to meet with the U.S. subcommittee, headed by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, next month after the election.

Besides formal sessions lasting through two days, the delegates were guests at a luncheon given in their honor by Mucio Flores, mayor of the Villa de Santiago, a beautiful mountain hamlet near Monterrey where the Horseshoe Falls are located. Another luncheon was sponsored by ORIT and a formal banquet was given by the CTM of the state of Nuevo Leon.

Velazquez and Noakes, in their remarks throughout the conference, repeatedly stressed the great progress in cooperation and understanding between U.S. and Mexican workers.

"At every meeting we have moved forward," Noakes declared, "and I assure you our friendship will continue. At each of these meetings, both the workers of the United States and those of Mexico have benefited. Today there is real solidarity between our two great nations."

The next conference was set for March or early April in 1969 in San Antonio, Tex.

Members of the Mexican delegation, besides Velazquez, Piña and Sanchez Madariaga included Sen. Jesus Yuren, Manuel Pavón, Luis Adolfo Santibáñez, Pérez Ibarra, Rodolfo Gaytan, and Juan Diaz Macias.

Besides Noakes, the U.S. delegation was composed of Milton Plumb, secretary of the U.S. section; AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Andrew C. McLellan, AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Nick Kurko and Henry Muñoz, director of the Equal Opportunity Dept. of the Texas AFL-CIO.

Italian-American Medal Won by Steelworker

Boston—Dir. Joseph Germano of the Steelworkers' Chicago district accepted the Italian-American Charitable Society's gold medal award for service to his community at a dinner here. He is the first labor representative to be so cited.

Missouri Labor Solid For Humphrey, Muskie

Kansas City—More than 740 delegates to the Missouri AFL-CIO convention here shouted a unanimous endorsement of Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey for President and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie for Vice President.

Delegates also endorsed Lt. Gov. Thomas F. Eagleton for the Senate and Gov. Warren E. Hearnes for re-election. Both received enthusiastic ovations as the main speakers at a banquet held in connection with the convention.

Endorsed for the House were Democratic Representatives Leonor K. Sullivan, William J. Randall, Richard Bolling, Richard H. Ichord and William L. Hungate, along with four Democrats seeking seats: William Clay, James W. Symington, Ed Bonitt and Bill D. Burlison.

In a keynote address, Missouri AFL-CIO Pres. John I. Rollings emphasized that unions must play a "decisive role" in getting out votes for Humphrey and all other candidates supported by labor.

He warned union members not to be "fooled" by George Wallace. Pointing to Wallace's efforts to "weaken unions and unfairly tax workers" as governor of Alabama, Rollings added, "Wallace's current pretense as a friend of workers is repugnant."

Eagleton also stressed the importance of workers, their families and friends getting registered before the Oct. 12 deadline in Missouri and then going to the polls.

Hearnes traced his support of labor programs in his first term as governor and described problems ahead. He explained his position "for law and order—and equally important—justice."

The convention enacted resolutions calling for two amendments to the state's constitution. One would reduce from 66.6 to 60 percent the majority of a vote required to pass a school bond measure. The other would put the state's income tax system into conformity with the federal income tax.

Other resolutions urged action to strengthen the nation's merchant marine; legislation to require the registration of all chemicals, solvents and compounds used in industrial relations; full rights for public employes to have unions and union contracts; and a number of improvements in workmen's compensation.

In another action the delegates unanimously voted support for the boycott of California grapes conducted by the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee. They backed it with a collection of $600 for the striking workers.

Ex-News Staffer Eugene Kelley Dies

Lawrence, Mass. — Eugene A. Kelley, a veteran labor editor and newspaperman, died here Oct. 5 after a lengthy illness. He was 56.

Kelley joined the staff of the Textile Workers Union of America in 1947 after years as a labor reporter for a Lawrence paper, serving as an editor and public relations specialist. After a stint with the labor affairs office of the foreign aid administration he joined the CIO News. He became an assistant editor of the AFL-CIO News at the time of merger.

In 1959 he joined the firm of Maurer, Fleisher, Zon & Associates, handling various trade union accounts of the public relations and advertising firm until his illness. He was a member of the Washington Newspaper Guild.

He is survived by his wife, Jennie B., a son, Eugene A. Kelley, Jr. of Trenton, N.J., and a daughter, Joan of Lawrence. Burial was in Lawrence.

At Pulp-Sulphite Convention:

Muskie Rakes GOP As Party for Rich

Hollywood, Fla.—A hard-hitting address by Democratic vice-presidential candidate Edmund S. Muskie highlighted the 28th annual convention of the Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers.

Introduced by union Pres.-Sec. Joseph P. Tonelli as TV cameras whirled, Muskie was quick to inform the delegates that "I come here as no stranger, but as one who is intimately acquainted with the problems of pulp and paper workers."

The 1,034 delegates interrupted frequently with applause as the candidate recalled the 90 consecutive months of economic expansion with no recession. "When Richard Nixon was Vice President the rich got richer; corporate profits went up 43 percent," he noted.

He described the gloomy economy of the Nixon years, comparing them with the last 7.5 years. Real family income, he said, rose 32 percent compared to 9 percent in the Nixon years; 10.5 million new jobs were created, compared with 4.5 million when Nixon was Vice President.

Muskie chided Nixon for not being willing to debate the issues and put his program on the line for the American people to see and discuss.

"Vice Pres. Humphrey and I believe in a free, expanding and open society where the government protects the basic rights of its citizens, where it helps marshal resources to meet the needs of society, and where it helps competing groups work out their problems fairly and reasonably," he said.

Referring to third-party candidate George Wallace's record as one of "indifference to the welfare of those who work for wages, those who want a better education," Muskie said Wallace's campaign is designed to exploit the divisions of our society.

Swinging back to attack Nixon as "the one," Muskie said Nixon was the one who supported the open shop in the Taft-Hartley Act, cast the deciding vote against federal aid to education, denied social security coverage to 750,000 persons.

He said that Humphrey has consistently proved that his objectives are the same as those of the members of labor unions. "And these objectives are in jeopardy. There is only one way to eliminate those dangers and that is to vote for Hubert Humphrey on Nov. 5," the senator concluded.

The delegates earlier had heard AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler call for a labor victory in November by the election of a Democratic team.

In his state-of-the-union message. Tonelli warned that the rapid trend toward worldwide operation among the continent's major pulp and paper corporations poses a threat to jobs and security of union members, both in the United States and Canada.

He reported an increase of 10,000 members since the 1965 convention, the inaguration of special training institutes for representatives, introduction of methods for administrative savings, and the expenditure of $2.5 million in strike benefits.

The convention adopted resolutions increasing the monthly per capita payment to the international by 75 cents, bringing the total to $3, and directing the administration to move the union's headquarters from Fort Edward, N.Y., to a metropolitan area. Headquarters have been located in Fort Edward since the founding of the union in 1906.

Tonelli said that increased per capita payments would allow the international to overcome a sizable operating deficit and train and hire additional staff for better servicing of local unions.

The convention also empowered the executive board to explore acquisition of a Canadian headquarters building to serve the union's 40,000 members in Canada at a time when the board finds it financially feasible.

The delegates gave a warm reception to the national boycott team of the Hearst Los Angeles Herald-Examiner joint strike-lockout council. After hearing an account of the 10-months-old strike by team leader Dick Houdek, the convention voted a $10,000 donation to the council and volunteers collected cash donations from the delegates totaling $2,000.54.

Low Jobless Rates Mark Major Centers

The nation's major job centers continued to post low unemployment records for the second straight month, the Labor Dept. announced.

Of 150 major areas, 144 reported unemployment rates below 6 percent in September. This matched the record set in August, the best in 13 years of these monthly surveys.

The six areas with "substantial unemployment" — 6 percent or more jobless— are Fresno and Stockton, Calif., Muskegon-Muskegon Heights, Mich., Mayaguez and Ponce, Puerto Rico, and Wheeling, W. Va.

Congress Expands Gun Controls, GOP Blocks TV Debate Measure

The 91st Congress moved toward adjournment after strengthening the gun control law with a ban on the interstate mail order sale of all firearms and ammunition.

But stalling tactics by Senate Republicans forced the Senate to lay aside a House-passed bill that would permit television networks to give free time to major presidential candidates.

Led by Minority Leader Everett M. Dirksen, the Republicans first demanded a "live" quorum, meaning that 51 senators were required to answer the roll call before any business could be conducted. But Dirksen told GOP senators not to appear on the Senate floor so as to delay the achievement of a quorum.

Dirksen had also warned that he would lead "extended debate" —in other words, a filibuster— to prevent the bill from coming to a vote.

In the face of these tactics and under pressure for adjournment, the floor manager of the bill, Sen. John O. Pastore (D-R.I.), virtually conceded that the measure was dead.

The bill had been approved by the House only the day before after a marathon 27-hour session that included 45 rollcalls.

The Republican delays appeared designed to block any action on the bill and thus avoid putting GOP presidential candidate Richard M. Nixon on the spot. Nixon so far has dodged repeated challenges to debate Vice Pres. Humphrey and has said he would not take part in any debate that includes third-party candidate George C. Wallace. The bill would have paved the way for a three-way debate without compelling the networks to give equal time to minor candidates.

Gun Licensing Omitted

The gun control bill did not include the registration and licensing provisions Pres. Johnson had sought after the assassination of Robert F. Kennedy. But it incorporated the strongest sections of separate House and Senate-passed bills and sponsors voiced elation.

Congress had previously banned interstate mail order sales of handguns. The new legislation extends the ban to long guns and all kinds of ammunition.

It bans imports of all surplus military weapons—such as the rifle that killed Pres. John F. Kennedy.

Over-the-counter sales of weapons to non-residents would be limited to residents of adjoining states who qualified under the laws of both states. Persons under 18 would be prohibited from buying rifles and shotguns; persons under 21 already are barred from purchasing handguns.

The bill also adds additional penalties for persons who carry firearms in the commission of a federal felony.

Both the Senate and House have now passed separate bills calling for a government study of the problems of seasonal unemployment in the construction industry. Differences between the two versions were expected to be reconciled in a House-Senate conference.

Scores of bills, including some major appropriations measures, were on the crowded House and Senate agendas. Congressional leaders still had high hopes of an end-of-the-week adjournment. With the entire House and one-third of the Senate up for election in less than a month, campaign absences have been heavy and action has at times been delayed while enough members were rounded up to make a quorum.

FCC Commissioner Tells How To Get Better TV, Radio Shows

Unions and union families have the potential power to improve the quality of radio and television programs, according to a member of the Federal Communications Commission.

Nicholas Johnson, writing in the September issue of the American Federationist, monthly magazine of the AFL-CIO, called on union members to take part in FCC decision-making.

The FCC cannot and should not determine the content of local programming, Johnson said, but it can and should provide "mechanisms for serious communication between the citizens of each community and the broadcast licensees which serve them and often reap a handsome profit in return."

"These mechanisms exist," Johnson said, adding that "it remains for trade union members to set them to work."

Johnson pointed out that the labor movement has a stake in the "whopping" $20 billion which this nation has invested in television and radio receiving equipment.

"Perhaps more than most Americans," Johnson wrote, "union members are concerned with the opinions about economic, social and political problems which are fostered by this medium."

He observed that television reaches into every home an average of nearly six hours a day.

Initially, Johnson suggested, concerned unions and members might try writing to and meeting with station owners and managers, network presidents and advertisers.

If this approach proves unsatisfactory, then the concerned citizens or union should make their argument at license renewal time, Johnson urged.

He stressed that the FCC licenses expire every three years and the broadcasters must, as a U.S. Court of Appeals put it, "run on their record."

All FCC licenses in a state expire on the same day, Johnson noted. For example, California broadcasters must file by Sept. 1 for a license renewal term beginning Dec. 1, 1968.

To participate, Johnson said all union members have to do is "Write the FCC, give your views about your local stations by call letters and ask that your views be considered at renewal time."

To be more effective, Johnson urged that, since courts have ruled that groups like unions, churches and civic organizations have legal "standing," they rely on a public-spirited lawyer since FCC rules of procedure must be followed. He said a license revocation proceeding can be brought any time, but the license renewal approach may be more effective.

Discussing the nature of the complaints reaching the FCC, Johnson said perhaps most involve the so-called fairness doctrine. This provides that when programs deal with "controversial issues of public importance," the broadcasters must treat the issues "fairly," providing an opportunity for all points of view.

Johnson pointed out that the fairness doctrine was recently extended to cigarette commercials through the efforts of a young New York lawyer, John Banzhaf. He has a license revocation action pending against NBC-owned WNBC-TV on the ground that it has not met the FCC's order to balance its commercials with warnings against smoking.

A retail store employes' union is trying to extend the fairness doctrine with a petition to deny license renewals to four radio stations in Ohio, Johnson said. The stations refused to carry the union's boycott messages against a struck department store.

The union's lawyers are arguing that the stations carried the store's routine advertisements and so fairness requires that they carry the union's message.

Johnson concluded by stressing the responsibility of citizens to inform themselves on their rights in broadcasting, on who owns the stations in the local community, on how they can join with others and use the FCC to help enrich program fare.

Czech Invasion Tied to Case For Viet Nam

Helsinki, Finland—The invasion of Czechoslovakia should make it absolutely clear why U.S. labor so strongly supports South Viet Nam's fight for freedom, an AFL-CIO representative told the congress of the Finnish Trade Union Federation here.

"The forces that supply the arms to North Viet Nam are the same ones behind the armed aggression in Czechoslovakia," Irving Brown, director of the African-American Labor Center, emphasized.

He also reminded the delegates that these "are the same forces" who threaten freedom and free trade unions in many other parts of the world.

American labor, Brown concluded, is dedicated to three objectives—strengthening social progress and social justice at home, helping to strengthen free unions around the globe and resisting dictatorships in every way possible.

A Clear Choice

DURING THE EIGHT YEARS that Richard Nixon was Vice President of the United States, the nation suffered three recessions, unemployment increased by two million persons and a factory worker's buying power inched up $6.85 a week.

In the eight years of the Kennedy-Johnson Administrations, in which Hubert Humphrey served as a Senate leader and Vice President, there were no recessions, unemployment dropped nearly 2 million and the factory worker's real buying power jumped $14.34 a week.

The vivid contrast between the two periods—one a time of economic stagnation, the other years of economic growth and vitality—is indicative of what lies ahead if Nixon is given control of the nation's economic policies.

In his lavishly financed campaign he has promised more of the policies of the Fifties, the policies that resulted in the American worker footing the bill through unemployment, under-employment and a trickling increase in buying power when he was working—which was not all the time.

IT WAS THE POLICY of stagnation, of stability paid for by those who work for wages, that led to the election of John Kennedy and a marked shift in economic policy, continued by Lyndon Johnson. The result—growth and prosperity and a fairer share for America's workers.

Between 1953 and 1960 the gross national product—the total value of all goods and services produced—increased by $90 billion in real dollars (adjusted for price increases). Between 1961 and 1968 the GNP jumped $240 billion. In the Nixon period the increase was 2.4 percent a year; in the Kennedy-Johnson-Humphrey years the increase was 5.4 percent.

In the Fifties the number of jobs moved upward by 4.6 million; in the Sixties the increase was 10 million. At the end of Nixon's last term in office 67 out of every 1,000 persons in the labor force were unemployed; in the first half of 1968 the figure was 36 out of 1,000.

The rate of Negro unemployment has been halved since the end of the Nixon years, dropping from 12.4 percent in 1961 to 6.8 percent in 1968.

Between January 1953 and December 1960 the average factory worker with a wife and two children had an increase in real after-tax weekly earnings of 8 percent; in the years between January 1961 and June 1968 his real buying power went up 15 percent.

With fuller work weeks and no recessions the average worker ended up with higher yearly incomes. Median family income—half of the families earning above, half below—showed an increase of $1,400 in the Nixon years. From 1961 through 1967 this figure jumped by $2,300.

The issue then, comes down to a choice of economic policies—the Nixon variety that has produced recessions and unemployment in the past or the Humphrey programs geared to recession-proof growth and an increasingly higher standard of living for all Americans.

In the national interest and in the worker's own best interest the choice is clear: the Humphrey-Muskie ticket and its enlightened economic program and policies will keep America working and prospering.

Humphrey Claim to Presidency 'Superior' in 3 Critical Areas

The following is excerpted from an editorial in the New York Times, Oct. 6, 1968, "Humphrey for President," strongly urging the election of Hubert H. Humphrey.

MR. HUMPHREY has superior claims to the presidency in three critical areas. The first of these is foreign affairs, specifically arms control and the search for peace. The most important international issue today is a slowing of the nuclear arms race. The competition in these deadly weapons is once more spiraling upward and threatens to slip out of human control. No subject will be more important for the next President. For nearly 20 years Mr. Humphrey has devoted himself tirelessly to this problem. He was the author of the bill establishing an independent Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in 1961. In season and out he worked to stop the nuclear tests which were poisoning the atmosphere, efforts that finally resulted in the limited Nuclear Test-Ban Treaty. Pres. Kennedy was indulging in no exaggeration when he said to Mr. Humphrey: "This is your treaty."

Mr. Humphrey is now actively working for the ratification of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, which would commit the existing nuclear nations not to distribute nuclear weapons to other countries. He would, we believe, dedicate himself wholeheartedly to the search for practical ways of lessening the overwhelming nuclear danger. As the original proponent of the Peace Corps and of the Food-for-Peace Program, he has the talent and the active concern needed to strengthen the United Nations and to build new international institutions.

In contrast, Mr. Nixon took no initiative on disarmament when he was Vice President and showed much less interest in the subject. He is now urging a delay in the ratification of the Nonproliferation Treaty. Even worse, he has resurrected the "missile gap" argument misused by Pres. Kennedy and insists that he will not enter into arms negotiations with the Soviet Union until some time in the future when this country has reached new and unspecified superiority in nuclear strength. He is busily promising to outstrip the Russians in space and to build a nuclear Navy "second to none." The United States does not need a President intent on speeding up both the arms race and the space race.

In addition to being an internationalist with a broad and imaginative outlook in foreign affairs, Mr. Humphrey is a proven activist in domestic affairs. He was the original sponsor of medicare and the skillful parliamentary manager for much of the social reform legislation enacted during the Kennedy-Johnson Administrations. He fully understands that the desperately urgent needs of the nation's cities for better housing, higher quality education, cleaner air, improved hospitals and mass transit facilities can only be met if there is vigorous presidential leadership and coherent public planning.

While Mr. Humphrey attempts to get to the root of urban problems, Mr. Nixon is promising, in effect, to attack the surface signs of social unrest by more energetic use of police measures. His modest proposals for encouraging "black capitalism" through tax incentives are all right as far as they go, but they do not go very far. His is an essentially conservative economic strategy involving deferment of costly new domestic programs for years. This strategy is full of danger, threatening decay and congestion for the nation's hard-pressed cities.

THE THIRD AREA in which Mr. Humphrey is unquestionably preferable to his opponent lies in the quality of his political leadership and in the character of his political support. Mr. Humphrey is the only candidate in this election who has substantial backing in both the white and the Negro communities. He has earned Negro trust because no man in public life has worked harder or longer to achieve equality of opportunity for all citizens.

It is a matter for considerable concern whether the next President will be able to communicate effectively with black as well as white citizens and whether in his capacity as a national party leader he sees himself primarily competing with George C. Wallace for reactionary segregationist votes or as heading a liberal-and-moderate coalition drawn from both races.

An endorsement of a candidate is in this instance also a favorable judgment on the personality and character of one man and an adverse judgment on his rival. Mr. Humphrey is a warm, generous, idealistic, open man. Mr. Nixon has gradually risen above the personal abuse and the narrow partisanship of his early campaigns, but he remains slick and evasive on some of the central issues.

Nation in 'Troubled' Mood:

Major Challenge to Liberalism Seen in '68 Election Campaign

The following is excerpted from "The Presidential Campaign—Test for Liberalism," by John M. Barry, which appears in the October 1968 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

THE 1968 PRESIDENTIAL election campaign has assumed the shape of a powerful challenge to American liberalism and to the chosen leader of the liberal forces, Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey.

The challenge is rooted in the troubled mood that infects the nation, the widespread feeling of discontent that is an amalgam of dissatisfaction over the long and difficult war in Viet Nam, reaction to rioting and looting in the urban ghettos, anger and bewilderment over the campus foment and disruptive street tactics of the new left, lingering shock over the assassinations of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

It has been a year of trouble for America and, with a national election less than four weeks away, many voters find it easy to turn their discontent against the most convenient scapegoat, the Administration in Washington, blaming it for all their grievances, real or imagined, even those for which the federal government has no responsibility or control.

Indeed, Humphrey's two opponents—former Vice Pres. Richard M. Nixon, the Republican, and former Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace, the candidate of the American Independent Party—are clearly basing their campaigns for the presidency on the conviction that the American electorate has shifted to the right, that the political pendulum has swung to the conservative side.

As Vice President for four years under Pres. Johnson and a leading member of the Senate for 16 years before that, Humphrey has no qualms about standing on the Administration record.

He reminds his audiences of the landmark medicare program, proposed and enacted under this Administration, of the breakthrough on federal aid to education, of the model cities program to replace the ghettos with new neighborhoods.

To the discontented and the disgruntled, he recalls the inaction of the Eisenhower-Nixon Administration which spawned many of the domestic problems now besetting the nation. He and the Democratic vice presidential candidate, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, cite the 181 vetoes by Pres. Eisenhower, many of which killed key bills aimed at solving social problems.

Humphrey expresses a deep faith in the good will of the "great silent majority" of Americans. The voter he sees is far different from the voters Wallace and Nixon are wooing. He is, in Humphrey's view, basically a decent, intelligent person, not a racist, and a man willing to support further progress.

The Vice President offers the voter no pat answers, no easy solutions to difficult problems. The programs he proposes are usually long-range in scope but directed to the core of the issue. For the cities, he urges a "Marshall Plan" that would include urban development banks to supply the funds needed to rejuvenate metropolitan areas.

On the "law and order" issue, Humphrey has proposed a detailed plan for dealing with crime and its prevention through massive aid for local police forces and an overhaul of court facilities and procedures.

The money to pay for these programs, Humphrey suggests, will be available to the nation as its economy continues to grow and as it reaps a huge "peace dividend" from the eventual end of the war in Viet Nam.

He has pulled no punches in dealing with his opponents. He has charged that Wallace "owes his political existence to the fears and hates aroused" by the issue of human rights and the problems that accompany it. He has accused Nixon and the Republican party of "openly competing" with Wallace for the votes of those who "want to put the brakes on our progress toward full opportunity."

To Humphrey, the chief issue is national unity.

"The choice," he says, "is simply this:

"Shall we, as a nation, move forward toward one society of opportunity and justice or shall we move instead toward a fractured and separated society, black against white, rich against poor, comfortable against left-out?"

IN THE OVERALL political picture, the key to the outcome obviously lies with Wallace, the third-party candidate. But conceding that point raises more questions than it answers. Wallace, according to the polls, has a following of about 20 percent of the voters. Much of his strength lies in his native South among conservatives who otherwise would tend to vote for Nixon.

In the North, on the other hand, the polls suggest that while both of the major party candidates will lose votes to Wallace, Humphrey will be hurt more than Nixon. They find Wallace strength among white, lower middle-class workers, including some union members, who in the past have traditionally voted Democratic.

Assuming that the results of the Kennedy-Nixon contest in 1960 more accurately reflect party sentiment than the Johnson landslide in 1964, it would only take a defection of a relatively small percentage of voters to shift many of these northern states from the Democratic to the Republican column.

Thus the challenge that confronts Humphrey and the Democratic Party is a formidable one. The Vice President continues to battle against Nixon's lead as he carries his case to the public. But to achieve victory, he must draw to his side those dissident Democrats who have threatened to stay home on Election Day and persuade those who have fallen for the Wallace line that the Alabaman offers no real solution to their grievances, that their best hope lies with the candidate with a solid record of support for the causes of working people.

Recessions Recalled:

Victory for Nixon Seen Threat To Eight-Year Economic Boom

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY'S election is the key to continuing the nation's record eight-year economic expansion, organized labor's top economist declared today in a network radio interview.

AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger warned that a Nixon Administration would spell "repetition of the recessions" of the Fifties, "very tight money and very high interest rates . . . and a spread of new tax gimmicks to benefit wealthy families and corporations."

The "real purchasing power of the after-tax weekly earnings" of the typical worker has grown twice as fast since January 1961 as it did when Richard Nixon was Vice President. In that eight-year period "there were three recessions . . . and many weeks without work," Goldfinger said, as he was questioned on Labor News Conference. The AFL-CIO-produced public affairs program is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, on Mutual Radio.

Goldfinger said there is "no evidence of a 'new Richard Nixon,' in terms of economic policy." He described as "shocking," Nixon's promise to "Wall Street interests that if elected President, he will end what he calls the 'heavy-handed bureaucratic regulatory schemes' of the Johnson Administration." He emphasized that the regulations Nixon pledges to relax were adopted after the 1929 stock market crash, a "near-catastrophe for the American people" and the entire nation.

That, Goldfinger asserted, "undoubtedly reveals the 'old Mr. Nixon.' "

TURNING TO TAX reform, Goldfinger said that in contrast to the strong stands spelled out by both Humphrey and the Democratic platform, Nixon proposes "new tax gimmicks on top of old ones." Under the present structure, "capital gains and other tax gimmicks, such as oil depletion allowances," make it possible for "wealthy people and corporations (to) get away with relatively low tax rates on all kinds of incomes," he noted. Nixon supports oil depletion allowances.

THE OTHER DAY, Sec. of Defense Clark M. Clifford made an unusual speech before the National Security Industrial Association on what might be called the social responsibility of government, notably his own department whose budget has such an enormous impact on national life.

The speech was fairly well reported, but carries far greater implications, notably for the labor movement, than appear on the surface.

Clifford recalled former Pres. Eisenhower's warning against "the military-industrial complex" whose control over billions of dollars each year must deeply influence the direction in which the economic—and even the social—life of this country must go.

Clifford contended that the dangers Eisenhower warned against have been avoided, but he raised, nevertheless, the question of whether this vast military-industrial complex is being used as much as it could be for socially desirable ends, as well as national security ends.

Clifford thinks that the Dept. of Defense "is not doing enough to promote in a positive way those aspects of our national life which are so essential to the preservation of our fundamental institutions."

"I believe," he continued, "that we in the Dept. of Defense have not only a moral obligation, but an opportunity to contribute far more to the social needs of the country than we have ever done before."

In a department that spends up to $80 billion a year, the letting of contracts, of course, can have a profound influence on the life of the country. Should these contracts be let purely on a competitive basis, or are there other aspects involved?

"Some might ask this question," Clifford continued: "Are you attempting to say that a defense contract should consider not only the best weapon that can be purchased for the cheapest price, but also whether the measurement of social utility should be included in the contract award decision?"

Clifford's thought-provoking speech, with its concession that government contracts have social as well as purely cost consequences which should at least be examined, echoes a thought familiar to the labor movement.

The secretary made no mention of specific contracts, but organized labor has not been so reticent in this area. It has held, and has stubbornly called for, a government policy that would deny immense Defense Dept. contracts to corporations which have long thwarted public policy in their treatment of labor.

The J. P. Stevens & Co. case is a prime example. Already found guilty by the NLRB at least four times of unfair labor practices in preventing its workers from organizing, the Stevens textile chain nevertheless continues to be the recipient of Defense Dept. contracts—no less than $76 million in 1966.

At its 1967 convention, the AFL-CIO raised this entire question, stressing sharply the social implications of granting contracts to a corporation that is a "notorious" union-buster; that has denied its workers the right to organize freely; and that is preventing them from participating in American industrial democracy.

Surely the organizing rights of American workers come well within Clifford's question of whether "the measurement of social utility should be included in the contract award decision." Surely the very words "social utility" apply with overwhelming persuasion to the rights of workers to organize and bargain with their employers, as laid down in the original Wagner Act and as repeated in the National Labor Relations Act of today.

HUBERT HUMPHREY'S ELECTION would best assure that America's record eight-year economic growth will continue, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger, center, declared on Labor News Conference. Questioning him were Frank Swoboda, left, of United Press Intl. and Alan Adams of Business Week magazine. The public service program is heard Tuesdays on Mutual Radio.

How to Buy:

Phony Flyer on Social Security Spreads Scare Talk on Funds

By Sidney Margolius

IT WOULD TAKE a Perry Mason to track down whoever is responsible for passing out the leaflets claiming "There is a bill before Congress that would destroy the Social Security Act."

Some people who have read the leaflet have become very agitated. They have written to their congressmen and phoned union offices expressing fear that social security will be destroyed.

Since most people have to depend on social security for their basic old-age income, the leaflets are enough to scare anyone. They say that a bill pending before Congress would "channel the money you have paid, and will pay in the future, into welfare programs with the Administration empowered to determine what retirement benefit, if any, you would receive. . ." The leaflet goes on to say: "Aside from the fact that this would be outright confiscation of the money you have paid into the social security fund over the years, no man should have this power. There are a lot of power-mad people in our country who would like to get their hands on the billions in the social security program in order to dole it out to their political supporters . . . Let your congressman and senator know how you feel about House Bill 5710."

The Social Security Administration tells us that these flyers first turned up last summer in the Memphis area. They were traced to a local businessman who first bragged about calling the leaflet to the attention of his employes by posting it on the bulletin board. Then he said he had been misled by something he had read.

A little later the same leaflets appeared in Georgia under windshields in supermarket parking lots around Atlanta, in faculty mailboxes at the University of Georgia at Athens, and in other places. Then there was a flurry in Chicago, California and Florida. Last fall the leaflets hit New Jersey.

Investigators have had a devil of a time tracking down the source.

You might suspect a conspiracy, but a conspiracy couldn't work as well. More possibly, the persistence of the leaflets and the anxious reaction indicates that people still have some of the fears that social security will change or be abolished hanging over from the Goldwater election campaign in 1964. This climate of anxiety over social security apparently has been extended by magazine and newspaper stories since then, such as the one in Readers Digest last year. It alleged that social security funds were going to finance "foreign aid, the moon race . . .," etc.

The easy availability nowadays of office duplicating machines apparently also has helped get the leaflet around.

Never pay any attention to any anonymous leafllet like this one. Also, here are the facts to help you quiet any rumors that may float around your own place of employment or town:

- There is no House Bill 5710 now before Congress.
- Social Security Commissioner Robert M. Ball states that there are no other bills that would "channel the money into welfare programs" or "provide for a test of need" for social security, or "give discretion to administrators in determining the amount of benefits."
- There was a House Bill 5710 last year. It never would have done any of the things described. After some changes it became House Bill 12080. It was enacted into law early this year; increased social security benefits; made more people eligible, and made some improvements in medicare.

Consumer Attitudes:

Rising Incomes Keep SpendingOutlookUp

PROSPECTS FOR consumer spending are good, primarily because of rising incomes, but major changes in spending and saving rates appear to depend on developments in inflation, Viet Nam, and the election, according to the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center.

The latest quarterly survey of consumer attitudes and inclinations to buy, based on a national cross-section of 1,325 families interviewed between Aug. 12 and Sept. 6, indicates that frequent and sizable gains in income as well as experience with and concern about inflation have been the two most important developments for consumers this year.

The latest survey shows that 51 percent of all families reported making more money that a year ago, but only 36 percent said that they are better off financially. Complaints about rising prices were voiced with increased frequency.

The proportion of consumers expecting sizable price increases is much larger than a few years ago. While in past years expected price increases caused many people to feel that they were being priced out of the market, during the past few months some people have felt inclined to buy before prices go up further.

This tendency, the report continues, has been especially noticeable with respect to automobiles and helps explain why expressed plans to buy new cars are higher than a year ago while the SRC index is somewhat lower.

The survey reveils that consumers no longer attach great importance to the increase in income taxes. Only one out of eight taxpayers says that the increase makes the great difference in what he spends or saves. More than half of the rest say that the tax increase will have practically no influence on their spending or saving. For many people income gains counteract the retarding effect of the increased income tax payments. An adverse psychological effect of the tax increase is no longer noticeable, although it did occur in 1967 and early this year when consumers anticipated the increase.

A RECESSION in the near future, considered possible by some economists in view of the tax increase and the sharply reduced government deficit, is not anticipated by consumers, the SRC report says. Only 10 percent of the people expect business conditions to deteriorate within the next year.

"Even though willingness to buy is at a much lower level than, say, in 1965 when there were hardly any clouds on the horizon, consumer spending is high and the prospects for consumer spending are good, primarily because of rising money incomes," the report concludes.

"At the same time the rate of consumer saving remains high because uncertainty makes for some hesitation and waiting. Pending major new developments—changes both in the rate of spending and saving are expected to be minor rather than substantial."

Soup to Nonsense:

Strong Telephone Personality Just a Matter of Role-Playing

By Jane Goodsell

SOME PEOPLE are awesomely effective on the telephone. They can persuade a plumber to come out that very day to fix a clogged drain, cajole six people into serving on the clean-up squad for a spaghetti dinner, even talk an office nurse into letting them speak to the doctor. Not long ago, I unwisely pitted myself against one of those magnetic telephone personalities. I'd called her with the firm intention of resigning from a committee of which she is chairman. When I hung up, I had not only agreed to serve for another year, but I'd consented to head a subcommittee in charge of refreshments.

I am a failure on the telephone. Talking to an unseen voice makes me feel timid and uncertain, and that's how I sound.

Naturally, I rehearse my speech before dialing the number, but if the voice at the other end of the line interrupts my soliloquy by asking me to repeat my name, I forget where I left off and blow my lines.

As a precautionary measure, I've tried writing out my speech, appending pertinent data which unaccountably slips my mind when I'm upset—such as what month it is, and how to spell my own name.

But all this was before I discovered a solution to my telephone problems. I had a particularly difficult phone call to make: a call to the cleaners to demand that they buy me a new blue sweater to replace the one they'd lost. In desperation, I asked a friend who has a crisply intimidating telephone manner to make the call for me. "Please, Eloise," I begged, "you sound so firm and authoritative on the phone."

"Well, so can you," she said briskly. "I'll teach you how." Her secret, she confided, was to imagine herself as somebody else. She usually assumed the identity of her grade school gym teacher, a forthright and formidable authoritarian.

Imagining myself to be a haughty dowager wearing a whalebone corset beneath my black crepe dress, I dialed the number of the cleaners. To my surprise, I found it quite natural to speak in peremptory tones; and phrases like "demand immediate satisfaction" and "careless inefficiency" rolled trippingly off my tongue. The voice at the other end sounded meek and apologetic and promised the immediate satisfaction that I demanded. I hung up feeling giddy with success, and a check reimbursing me for my sweater arrived two days later in the mail.

I'd like to end on this note of triumph but, alas, I'm now faced with a new problem. The blue sweater which I'd accused the cleaners of losing, has mysteriously shown up in the downstairs coat closet. My impersonation as a duchess hardly seems appropriate for explaining this little mixup to the cleaners. I've been practicing a new role as a kooky little scatterbrain, being charmingly confused and adorably apologetic about the hysterical mistake she made. But, somehow, I just can't bring myself to make that phone call.

Suppose I get the same girl I talked to on my first call? What will she think when the grand duchess of last week is suddenly transformed into a giddy Lucille Ball? She'd think what anybody would think—that I am a hopeless schizophrenic. Perhaps I'd best take the coward's way out: Just tear up that check and switch my business to another cleaning establishment.

Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas:

Democrats in Fierce Battle For Votes in GOP Heartland

By Duane Emme

Bismarck, N.D.—Democratic Lt. Gov. Charles Tighe, resting between campaign swings across North Dakota's prairies, said, "I'm sure that Humphrey is moving up here. My wrist watch tells me so."

At the beginning of each speech, he explained, he takes off the watch, places it on the speaker's stand and remains silent for about 30 seconds. When the audience stirs, wondering what is wrong he picks up the watch, and says: "You have just heard a Nixon speech. Nothing."

The applause and laughter that greets this opening "is increasing everywhere I go," Tighe declared.

He and scores of other Democratic candidates are waging tough election battles in the four Great Plains states, where voters traditionally—but by no means habitually—elect Republicans.

At stake in the Dakotas, Nebraska and Kansas are 20 electoral college votes, three governorships, three Senate and 12 House seats, plus numerous state offices, legislatures and county courthouses.

The electoral votes and congressional seats may seem few in comparison to other regions, but they loom large in a year that poses the possibility of no presidential candidate receiving an electoral majority and the winner being decided in Congress.

Some scattered polls and soundings show that Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey's presidential drive is on an upswing in the Plains, although he still trails Republican Richard Nixon.

Republicans seem supremely confident that Nixon will carry the four states and sweep their other candidates with him. They concede that they "may not" beat Governors William L. Guy of North Dakota and Robert B. Docking of Kansas, and Sen. George S. McGovern (D-S.D.).

But the Democrats are not pessimistic. They have determined voter registration drives going on and "get out the vote" plans in the works. They are sure that Humphrey is gaining and will continue to gain. The comment of a party official in Omaha is typical: "I think we can take this thing, if we don't run out of time."

Political experts in the region generally believe that third-party candidate George C. Wallace will not run as well as in other parts of the country.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie in a Wichita speech scorched Wallace as a "racist" who offers no solution to critical rural and urban problems—"nothing but dissension."

Labor leaders in the four states are stressing the same point to workers and distributing COPE material exposing conditions in Alabama when Wallace was governor—low wages, deteriorated working conditions, increased taxes and one of the nation's highest crime rates.

A union leader in Omaha said he is going to warn his members "to think about the fingers on the atomic trigger" now that Wallace has chosen as his running mate, former Air Force Gen. Curtis Le May.

Tighe adopted his "wrist watch opener" after a Nixon appearance here drew sharp fire from the Fargo Forum, the state's largest newspaper, and several other dailies. They accused Nixon of not saying anything, particularly of having "no farm program."

Some observers believe that Nixon may be shying away from farm talk after an earlier sojourn into the Midwest in which he revealed his unfamiliarity with farming by promising to plow a straight furrow with a corn picker.

In this grain and cattle country farmers are grumbling about low prices. However, there are recent signs that prices are firming, even rising in some areas. And farm prices are a foggy issue since congressional Republicans from these states have generally supported Administration farm programs.

The war in Viet Nam and unrest in the nation's city slums are issues here as elsewhere, but their impact is not easy to assess.

Most Democrats believe that voters in the plains states want the war swiftly ended, but through negotiations and not through a U.S. pullout. They believe that Humphrey's recently nationally-televised Salt Lake City speech, in which he defined his Viet Nam views, marked the start of his upturn.

President Kennedy lost all of the plains states in 1960 Pres. Johnson won them all in 1964. In those elections, and others in between, ticket-splitting was widespread. This is how some of it looks with three weeks to go until the election:

KANSAS—"The prime issue in the campaign for governor of Kansas stated simply and in one word is taxes," emphasizes Norbert Dreiling, state Democratic chairman.

Gov. Docking is hitting his GOP challenger for the governorship, Rick Harman, a restaurant owner and party leader, for having favored increased gasoline, income and sales taxes. Harman is trying to escape the position.

Kansas is a prime example of ticket-switching. Pres. Johnson won here by 77,449 votes in 1964. yet William H. Avery, a Republican, was elected governor. In 1966, Docking, the son of a former governor, defeated Avery, who thus became the first GOP governor in the state's history not to win a second term.

The Wichita Eagle sees Harman upsetting Docking. A Democratic leader vigorously disagreed, recalling, "They also picked Avery by 100,000 votes in 1966."

Conservative Rep. Bob Dole (R-Kans.) is favored to win a Senate seat being vacated by Republican Sen. Frank Carlson over Democrat William Robinson, a Wichita attorney. But it could be close.

Democrats say they have good chances to take two of the state's five house seats, now all held by the GOP.

NEBRASKA—In Omaha, Democrats now have a 55-to-33 percent registration bulge over Republicans and they are engaged in an all-out drive—with labor backing—to defeat the second district's conservative, anti-union Rep. Glenn Cunningham (R).

Omaha makes up most of the district, but in the past Cunningham has always drawn Democratic votes. The Democratic challenger, Mrs. Frank B. Morrison, wife of a former Nebraska governor, could be the one to dump Cunningham.

In the first district, former Rep. Clair Callan (D) is believed to be running a close race to unseat Rep. Robert V. Denney (R). It was Denney who beat Callan in 1966. In the third district Rep. David T. Martin (R) is seen as the winner over Democrat J. V. Dean.

SOUTH DAKOTA—McGovern is favored to win a second Senate term but the Republicans are making a strenuous effort to unseat him.

The South Dakota poll, taken by three newspapers in the state in June, showed McGovern far ahead of his opponent, former GOP Gov. Archie M. Gubbrud. In September, it had McGovern down to a bare 48 to 46 percent edge. But the poll's latest samplings take McGovern up to a 51 to 42 percent lead.

In the gubernatorial race, state Atty. Gen. Frank L. Farrar (R) is given the edge over his Democratic opponent, Robert M. Chamberlin, the party's state chairman. Both GOP Representatives Ben Reifel and E. Y. Berry are favored over their challengers, Democrats Frank Denholm, a Brookings attorney, and David Garner, a Rapid City salesman.

NORTH DAKOTA—The Fargo Forum, for the first time, has endorsed Guy who is seeking a fourth term as governor. It praised him as a "competent and respected state official" and described his opponent, Robert P. McCarney, a Bismarck car salesman, as "completely out of touch with the complexities of government."

McCarney, who upset the endorsed GOP candidate in the primary, has additional troubles. He is quoted as having said Grand Forks Republicans "could go to hell" after only a few turned out to hear him at a Chamber of Commerce meeting in that city.

Incumbent Sen. Milton R. Young (R) is said to be leading his Democratic opponent, Fargo Mayor Herschel Lashkowitz. But Lashkowitz is a vigorous campaigner, who might surprise.

Former Democratic Rep. Rolland Redlin could beat Rep. Tom Kleppe (R), in a re-run of a 1966 House race. However, Kleppe is given an edge. Rep. Mark Andrews (R) also is favored to defeat Democrat Bruce Hagen, state public service commissioner.

There are a number of right-wing, Birchite candidates on the ballot contesting as independents for various positions.

Humphrey, Muskie Get Endorsement of IBEW

The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has urged IBEW members to vote for the Humphrey-Muskie presidential ticket because it "is the best one for our country in these crisis-ridden times."

The endorsement message is contained in an issue of the union's magazine, the Electrical Workers' Journal, which also carries the voting records of congressmen and senators.

Citing both the record of the candidates and the platforms of the two parties, the editorial stressed that the IBEW "is joining the vast majority of the American labor movement" in endorsing the Democratic candidate for President.

It warned that "George Wallace is no friend of organized labor and the workingman. He will disastrously divide the nation at the time we critically need unity and understanding."

OREGON LABOR UNITY for the re-election of Sen. Wayne Morse (D.), left, is illustrated as Gene Heiss, an Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers representative, pins a Morse button on Tom Stewart, Machinist representative. Heiss heads Morse's labor committee while Stewart was labor chairman for Robert Duncan, who lost to Morse in the state's Democratic primary.

Campaign Sets Mood Of Oregon Convention

Salem, Ore.—The huge banner on the wall behind the platform at the Oregon AFL-CIO convention proclaimed: "There is still so much to do: Re-elect Wayne Morse."

That summed up the mood of the four-day convention here attended by nearly 500 delegates.

Morse told the delegates that labor can expect an onslaught of anti-union legislation in the next Congress unless it elects enough of its friends in November. He also outlined some of the things he will do, on behalf of the wage-earning families in the nation, as chairman of the Senate Labor & Public Welfare Committee, a post to which he'll be elevated if re-elected to a Democratically-controlled upper chamber.

Union leaders, split last May between Morse and his primary opponent, former Rep. Robert Duncan, are united behind the man with a 73-3 COPE record in his fight against Republican nominee Robert Packwood.

Delegates enthusiastically endorsed Morse and backed Hubert H. Humphrey for president and his running-mate, Senator Edmund S. Muskie. They also endorsed three incumbent House members—Democrats Edith Green and Al Ullman and Republican Wendell Wyatt. The convention supported Democratic State Sen. Edward Fadeley against incumbent Republican Rep. John Dellenback in the state's fourth congressional contest.

Endorsements for Democratic candidates predominated in state and legislative races.

The boycott against California table grapes got strong moral and financial support, with delegates digging more than $700 from their pockets to support the striking farm workers. They also persuaded the convention hotel to remove California grapes from its menu. Nearly $350 was collected for the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner strikers, and a resolution supporting the strike was adopted.

In taking action on more than 100 resolutions, the convention:

Favored lowering the voting age to 18, called for state legislation to smooth the collective bargaining path for public employes, including teachers, opposed state and federal registration of firearms, rejected a proposal to cooperate with the Teamsters and Auto Workers in organizing drives, turned down a state federation per capita tax increase and recommended that efforts be made to collect per capita taxes on affiliates' full memberships.

It was the first convention presided over by Executive Pres. Edward J. Whelan, elected to that new post last year after serving two years as executive secretary-treasurer.

Upon their return home, most of the Portland area delegates turned out to a huge rally for Humphrey, who visited the city over the weekend.

Outreach Plan Spurs Negro Apprentices

Apprentice Outreach programs are given a big share of the credit for the doubling of the number of Negroes participating in apprenticeships in the past 18 months.

Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz said an estimated 8,100 Negroes are currently in apprenticeship programs registered with the Labor Dept. or state apprenticeship agencies.

The outreach programs are currently being conducted in 44 industrial areas by manpower and social action agencies in conjunction with the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Councils.

The number of Negroes entering apprenticeship has risen dramatically in the past two years, Wirtz said. About 1,800 were enrolled in 1966 and more than 2,630 in 1967. In the first six months of 1968 more than 1,400 were registered, he added.

The Workers Defense League, the Urban League's LEAP program and other minority organizations, working with the AFL-CIO councils, have placed more than 1,650 Negroes in apprenticeships, the Labor Dept. said.

IBEW Ends Strike At Detroit Edison

Detroit—Electric linemen and other Detroit Edison employes voted to end a four-month strike but to stay out one more week before returning to work. That will allow those who took jobs out of town the time to relocate, their union said.

Members of Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 17 voted 334-260 to approve a three-year contract giving linemen wage hikes totaling 93 cents an hour, and additional benefits of nearly 19 cents for a total of $1.12.

Other workers, including line board dispatchers, crane and elevator mechanics will get comparative increases.

The walkout started June 3, a few days after contract expiration. Since then, Detroit Edison supervisors have done the strikers' work.

CALIFORNIA GRAPES were openly welcomed by Richard Nixon, GOP presidential candidate, in a speech at Fresno, Calif. He was picketed and booed for his denunciation of a boycott against the grapes being conducted by the striking United Farm Workers Organizing Committee with solid support of the labor movement.

Wisconsin Labor Sets Drive for Humphrey

Green Bay, Wis.—Speakers at the Wisconsin AFL-CIO's fifth biennial convention called for an all-out drive to rally workers behind Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D), Atty. Gen. Bronson LaFollette (D) and other liberal candidates.

Nelson is seeking re-election and LaFollette is trying to unseat Republican Gov. Warren Knowles.

National COPE Dir. Alexander Barkan told the 700 delegates that George C. Wallace, third party presidential candidate, had made inroads into the normally Democratic labor vote because local union leaders were afraid to speak out against Wallace's loud supporters.

"They chicken out," he said. "They worry about their own future elections and they let their members make a mistake." Barkan said, "we want you to start talking about the issues."

He said Wallace could not win the presidency but that he could elect Nixon by taking votes from Humphrey in key industrial states if local leaders failed to stand up for the Democratic candidate.

Citing Humphrey's perfect rating on COPE's scoreboard of legislative rollcalls, Barkan said: "Shame on any union member that turns his back on Humphrey for a demagogue."

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said union members rejected Barry Goldwater in 1964 because he had a 100 percent wrong record. "Then why cannot labor be just as emphatic in supporting Humphrey because he has been 100 percent right?" Biemiller asked.

State AFL-CIO Pres. John W. Schmitt, Nelson and LaFollette also called for the repudiation of Wallace and Nixon and support of Humphrey.

Schmitt, Vice Pres. John Giacomo and Sec.-Treas. George W. Hall were re-elected to new two year terms without opposition.

The delegates also approved a measure raising the per capita tax from 10 cents to 12 cents effective next Jan. 1 and to 14 cents a year later.

The delegates pledged to support the boycott of California grapes as a means of strengthening the striking United Farm Workers Organizing Committee in the vineyards. Jesus Salas, head of a migrant workers' union in Wisconsin, said "the whole foundation of our farm workers' unions is threatened there."

Pres. Fred H. Harrington of the University of Wisconsin appealed for labor's help in lobbying for adequate budgets for the university and holding the line on student fees and tuition.

Wisconsin has always been "a workingman's university, not a rich man's university," he said.

Aluminum Union Vote Is Upheld

The National Labor Relations Board refused an employer's request that it set aside an election because a board agent filled in the time between election shifts by investigating unfair labor practice charges filed against the firm.

A three-member NLRB panel ordered its regional director to certify the results of an election won last April by the Aluminum Workers at the Hernando, Miss., plant of Amax Aluminum Extrusion Products, Inc.

The agent's inquiries were conducted off the premises and did not influence the election results, the board panel said. Nevertheless it would be better practice in future, it agreed, that elections and investigations be conducted separately.

Litany of Promises:

Nixon Gears His Campaign to Public's Fears, Frustrations

poverty, jobs and job training is concerned, Nixon's solution is tax windfalls—"incentives," he terms them—to private industry. With the chance to make a profit on the deal, the reasoning goes, private industry would provide jobs, build homes and "get millions off the welfare rolls and onto payrolls."

Replacing government "bureaucrats" would be hundreds of thousands of unpaid volunteers motivated by the desire to be of service.

"In a Nixon Administration, there will be a new measure of reliance on voluntary efforts. . . . There will be new awards for public service," the GOP candidate pledged in a nationwide radio address.

In speech after speech, Nixon voices the suspicion of government and the appeal to self-reliance which characterized Republican administrations from McKinley through Hoover.

He expresses it this way: "America is a great nation not because of what government did for people, but because of what people did for themselves."

It's hard to judge the political impact of the standard Nixon speech because it is usually addressed to the GOP faithful and to the "teenyboppers" who apparently make up a large part of any Nixon crowd.

Unlike the older youth group which lent an under-30 tone to the primary campaigns of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and of Sen. Eugene McCarthy, these youngsters are recruited by Republican county organizations to give the appearance of enthusiasm and vitality to the Nixon campaign. They are more than happy to wave banners, deck themselves in Nixon sashes and hatbands, drown out occasional hecklers with their cheers.

At a rally in Flint, Mich., more than half the 5,500 persons in the audience were high school, junior high and even grade school kids. Their delight in having placards to wave and balloons to pop was obvious; their political significance somewhat less so.

But even if the enthusiasm generated by the Nixon campaign does not go more than skin-deep, the signs of efficient party organization are impressive.

On a motorcade through two Republican counties of Long Island, in New York, virtually every telephone pole for miles carried a Nixon placard. The clusters of people gathered at towns along the route waved signs and posters. And if the crowds at several pre-arranged but officially "unscheduled" stops turned out to be disappointingly small, the candidate managed to create the opposite impression when he arrived at the scheduled shopping center or airport rally.

"Sorry. to be late," he would apologize, but "thousands of people just like yourselves" were gathered along the route. He just had to stop and say a few words.

New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller accompanied Nixon on a day of campaigning in suburban counties and flew with him to a Buffalo rally, introducing him with extravagant praise. At Flint, another preconvention foe, Gov. George Romney, was on hand to join in the exchange of fulsome compliments.

All standard political oratory, to be sure. But it enables Nixon to hammer away repeatedly with the argument that a party that can unite so effectively after a convention can also unite a country.

Nixon takes cognizance of concern among Republican "pros" that overconfidence will lead to a repetition of the 1948 Truman upset.

The difference, he says, is that "we're not going to let up. We're going to pour it on. We're going to sock it to them."

As he came to Flint, an industrial center where third-party candidate George Wallace has drawn big crowds, Nixon made an open bid for Wallace supporters to switch to the Republican ranks.

In language paralleling the Wallace appeal for worker votes, Nixon talked toughly of people on welfare supported by taxes of "the workingman." Nixon added:

"The American workingman knows we cannot make it easy for criminals and hope to end crime in our streets; he knows we cannot let other nations treat the American flag like a doormat and hope to establish peace in the world."

Instead of casting a "futile" vote for a "third-party extremist," Nixon said, discontented workers should vote for him.

In his repeated reference to crime, Nixon gives the impression that he has the answer to crimes of violence on the streets of the cities.

In reply to a question at the editors' conference, however, Nixon acknowledged that "when we talk about robbery and rape and the other crimes that have been escalating in such enormous degrees, these are primarily under the jurisdictions of the states and of the counties and of local government."

His specific solution turned out to be very much along the lines of the safe streets crime control act of Pres. Johnson, involving federal grants to help train and equip local law enforcement officers. He would also, Nixon said, establish a National Council on Law Enforcement and would direct the use of wiretapping and electronic eavesdropping to combat "organized crime."

In the context of his standard speech, though, the rise in crime would appear somehow to be the fault of a lax U.S. Attorney General.

A solicitous and highly efficient Nixon campaign staff has resisted the temptation to overschedule their candidate, in response to local party requests for "just one more appearance." It was the overstrain of his 1962 campaign for governor of California which led to Nixon's post-election blowup at the press, which at the time appeared to be his political swan song.

Nixon's day is busy, the campaign trail is never easy for a candidate. But there are periodic interludes of rest and relaxation.

In public, at any rate, the grimness that Nixon brought to earlier campaigns has been replaced by a smiling, tanned, jovial candidate—apparently supremely confident both of victory and of his ability to handle the job of President of the United States.

Nixon Woos Wall Street With Pledge to Ease Up

Richard M. Nixon has assured Wall Street that it will have few, if any worries about government regulation if he is elected President.

Nixon, the Republican candidate, passed the word in what is being called in Washington the "Secret Letter to Wall Street," a letter to leaders of the securities industry assuring them that he will end "the heavy-handed bureaucratic regulatory schemes" of the Johnson Administration.

The letter was not made public. An explanation from Nixon campaign headquarters said that it covered only a "narrow policy area."

The "narrow" area involved a denunciation by Nixon of legislation aimed at forcing mutual funds to reduce their charges to investors. The bill passed the Senate over strong opposition from the mutual funds but was killed in the House Commerce Committee.

Nixon also denounced recent moves by the Securities & Exchange Commission and the Dept. of Justice that have resulted in a proposed reduction of sales commissions on stock transactions on the New York Stock Exchange.

The New York Times financial page reacted to the letter with a story commenting:

"Wall Street's immediate reaction was that the letter really was meant to be a message to the business community in general—perhaps a promise that a Nixon administration would involve the federal government less in the business community's affairs."

The story quoted a partner in a large securities firm as saying "what he has done is written a letter which, in effect, says, 'look, send me some money and we'll lift the pressure off you when we get in.'"

The Washington Post, in an editorial entitled "Dreaming in Nixonland," said of the letter, "The fellows in Wall Street must have loved it."

The 'New' Nixon Approach

Wallace's Utopia: 36¢ Pension Raise

When George Wallace ran for governor of Alabama in 1962, he promised to raise state old age pensions to at least $100 a month.

A Congressional Quarterly analysis of Wallace's record notes that during his four-year term, old age pensions were indeed raised—by 36 cents, from $69.30 to $69.66 a month.

Three-Way Race Divides 'Solid' South

Big 'Undecided' Vote Seen Key To Presidential Election Battle

By John R. Oravec

The political mood of the South can't be pinned to a generalization, except possibly that a sizable number of voters have not yet decided which lever they'll pull for President on Nov. 5.

The South may not be solid Wallace country. But it's not all the way with Humphrey or Nixon either.

Only one thing is certain: Southern Democrats will continue to control their state congressional delegations in the House and Senate no matter what the outcome of the popular vote for President.

At stake in the 13 southern and border states are 145 electoral votes of the 270 needed for election. Voters also will be pulling levers and marking ballots for 119 congressional seats, nine Senate seats and three governorships.

Three of the states can be written off without question to George C. Wallace, the American Independent party presidential candidate. They are Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi. All three went for Goldwater in 1964.

After boiling down the various polls, surveys and opinions—some conflicting and many emitting a wide range of conclusions—the majority of southern presidential votes can not be marked up in any one column at this time.

Yet there are signs of voters beginning to respond to the campaigning of Democratic candidate Hubert H. Humphrey in five of the southern and border states: Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Virginia and Texas.

The Belden Poll has put Humphrey's brand on Texas, reversing an earlier trend towards Nixon.

Humphrey still must face a barrage of well-financed newspaper ads and television spots about to be unleashed by the Nixon camp which will pin the Democratic candidate to his long-time stand against the income tax oil depletion allowance—something that is deep in the heart of many Texans.

Republican Richard M. Nixon and Wallace have shown strength in Georgia, Kentucky, Oklahoma, South Carolina and Tennessee.

But throughout the South there is the loyal Democrat, the one who has always voted Democratic, no matter what the opposition. Even during the Eisenhower landslides in 1952 and 1956 states such as Arkansas, North Carolina and South Carolina remained in the Democratic column.

Trade unionists in North Carolina point to Humphrey's triumphant visit to Charlotte. He drew bigger crowds there than Nixon and Wallace combined. The Charlotte Coliseum was jammed for the Humphrey rally and thousands had to be turned away at the doors—a feat matched only by evangelist Billy Graham and a rock-n-roll group.

Humphrey's hopes of winning Florida also were encouraged by the large turnout in Jacksonville that was among the biggest of his campaign thus far.

Where racism is a major issue in the South and border states, many of the would-be Nixon votes may go to Wallace, while the liberal vote will remain with the Humphrey-Muskie ticket.

It has been noted, however, that there appears to be less racial tension in the South recently than in the rest of the country. Some observers conclude that racism is less an issue here than in the Midwest where Wallace has enjoyed marked gains in his campaign.

Another factor that weighs heavily on the outcome of the November election is the Negro vote.

The gains in Negro voter registration in the 11 states of the Confederacy have been dramatic—largely through civil rights-oriented drives and labor's efforts. Nearly 3 million Negroes are registered to vote this year in 11 states, compared with 2.2 million in 1964.

Even the Wallace and Nixon camps may concede that as much as 90 percent of the black vote in the South—and the rest of the country—will end up in the Humphrey-Muskie column.

Another strong voter bloc backing the Democratic ticket is made up of the Mexican-American "Viva Humphrey" clubs springing up throughout southern Texas.

Labor has been expending a big effort to woo back a number of union members in Texas who had drifted to Wallace earlier. The Auto Workers and Teamsters have joined the COPE campaign aimed at the state's 400,000 trade unionists.

Although several incumbent Democrats face a difficult election in retaining their congressional seats, the Republicans are likely to come out of the South with little or no gain at all in the House. Democrats in fact, hope to recapture the three seats they lost to Republicans in Alabama in 1964.

The GOP may pick up another governorship in North Carolina. But this could be offset by an upset Democratic victory in Arkansas.

This is the current outlook state-by-state:

ALABAMA—James B. Allen, (D) lieutenant governor under Wallace, faces little opposition in Perry O. Hooper (R) for the Senate seat being vacated by Sen. Lister Hill (D).

The Republicans also are in trouble in the three House seats they now hold because the Wallace coattail effect appears more likely to aid the Democrats.

The Democrats now hold five seats, which are rated safe.

The threatened Republican seats are in the first, second and sixth districts. All three went to the GOP in the Goldwater landslide in the state four years ago.

ARKANSAS—Democrat Marion Crank has shown noticeable strength in his attempt to unseat Republican Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller. Crank, who has been endorsed by the State AFL-CIO, appears to have healed some of the splits in the state's Democratic party and stands to pick up a number of liberal votes which had gone to Rockefeller two years ago. Crank also stands a chance of taking much of the Wallace vote.

Sen. J. William Fulbright encounters little opposition from Republican Charles J. Bernard and is favored to win re-election.

Democrats currently hold three of the four congressional seats. Two of the three are safely in the Democratic fold.

In the third district, Republican Rep. John P. Hammerschmidt is facing stiff opposition from Hardy Croxton (D), although the district takes in many traditionally Republican areas.

Veteran Democratic Rep. E. C. Gathings is retiring and the first district race is rated a toss-up between Bill Alexander (D) and Guy Newcomb (R).

FLORIDA—A heavy Wallace turnout may hurt Democrat LeRoy Collins in his bid for the Senate seat of retiring Sen. George A. Smathers (D). Collins is opposed by Edward J. Gurney, a staunch conservative.

Collins, a popular former governor of the state, has liberal and Negro support, which could be the key to victory in November.

Democrats currently hold nine of the 12 seats in the state's congressional delegation. Eight of the seats appear to be safe for the Democrats.

Gurney's seat in the first congressional district is up for grabs and Democrats have a strong candidate in James C. Robinson, although Louis Frey, Jr. (R), was running strong earlier in the campaign.

GEORGIA — Democratic Sen. Herman E. Talmadge is expected to win re-election easily for a third term over Republican E. Earl Patton, Jr., regardless of the strength of Nixon and Wallace in the state.

Eight of the 10 congressional seats are held by Democrats. Only one of the incumbents faces Republican opposition. He is Rep. Elliot Hagan who is favored to defeat Joe Tribble, a former state Republican chairman.

The two incumbent Republican congressmen are in trouble.

Democrat James A. Mackay stands a good chance of winning back the fourth district which he lost to Rep. Ben Blackburn in 1966 by 360 votes.

In the fifth district Charles L. Weltner appears to be gaining strength in his attempt to unseat Rep. Fletcher Thompson. Weltner, a liberal, after winning renomination for Congress in 1966, resigned because he could not support Gov. Lester Maddox.

KENTUCKY — Nixon has shown strength in Kentucky, but it may not be enough to boost the chances of Marlow Cook (R) who is seeking to win the seat of retiring Sen. Thruston Morton (R). Democrats have a prominent contender in Katherine Peden, and the Senate race at this time is rated a toss-up.

All four of the incumbent Democratic congressmen are expected to be re-elected. Republicans hold three seats, but are in trouble in two of the races.

In the third district, Tom Ray (D) is out to defeat Rep. William O. Cowger (R). Also on the run is Rep. M. G. Snyder (R) of the fourth district, who faces tough opposition from Gus Sheehan, Jr. (D).

LOUISIANA—Sen. Russell B. Long, the Senate Majority Whip, has no Republican opponent in the November election.

Democrats hold all eight of the state's congressional seats. Republicans managed to make a race of it in three districts—the second, sixth and seventh. But Democrats are expected to retain all eight districts easily.

MISSISSIPPI—Only one of the five incumbent Democratic congressmen faces Republican opposition in next month's election. But former congressman Prentiss Walker (R), who was swept in on Goldwater's coattails in 1964, is rated as having little chance of beating Rep. G. V. Montgomery in the state's fourth congressional district.

NORTH CAROLINA—For the first time since 1896, North Carolina may elect a Republican governor. James C. Gardner (R), a freshman congressman and outspoken conservative, has shown remarkable strength.

Gov. Dan K. Moore (D) is not eligible for another term. Lt. Gov. Robert W. Scott (D) may have to depend on the more than 125,000 Negro votes to win the election even though he has been vying for the Wallace vote.

In the Senate race Sen. Sam J. Ervin (D) should have no difficulty defeating Robert V. Somers (R).

Democrats currently hold eight of the 11 congressional districts. Although the 1967 redistricting of the state may affect many of the incumbent Democrats, the state is still expected to come out of the election with a Democratic majority in the House.

OKLAHOMA—Democratic Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney is facing his stiffest test for re-election since he was first sent to the Senate 18 years ago. His opponent, Henry Bellmon, the first Republican ever elected governor of the state, has proven to be an effective campaigner.

Some observers currently rate the race a toss up, but Monroney may be able to squeak through the election because of his seniority in the Senate and his high ranking on a number of Senate committees.

Redistricting of the state may hurt the Democrats more than the Republicans. The Democrats can expect no more than to maintain the 4 to 2 edge in Congress.

SOUTH CAROLINA — Incumbent Sen. Ernest F. Hollings (D) is a solid favorite to be re-elected after an impressive primary victory in June, even though Marshall J. Parker (R) came within 11,758 votes of defeating Hollings in 1966.

Negro votes were a significant factor in electing Hollings in 1966 and should be helpful in November also.

Four of the five Democratic congressional seats appear to be safe. The only Republican is Albert W. Watson of the second district. Frank K. Sloan (D), a Columbia attorney, is given a good chance of upsetting Watson if there is a heavy Negro vote.

TENNESSEE—Democrats face a serious challenge to their control of the state's congressional delegation. They now hold five of the nine seats, but this edge could be reversed by the election.

Nixon and Wallace are showing remarkable strength in usually-Democratic areas. And in this state the Wallace votes are likely to favor the Republican congressional candidates more than the Democrats.

The only Republican that could be hurt by the Wallace vote is incumbent Rep. W. E. Brock III in the third district. He is opposed by Bill Pope, Jr. (D).

TEXAS—Lt. Gov. Preston Smith (D) appears to be pulling away from Paul W. Eggers (R) in the race for governor. Smith is expected to capitalize on both the Democratic strength and much of the Wallace vote. Incumbent Gov. John B. Connally (D) did not seek re-election.

Eggers had been expected to pull an upset by riding into office on Nixon's coattails, but the Republican presidential candidate now is losing ground in Texas.

Democrats hold 21 of the 23 house seats and are expected to retain 20 of the districts without much difficulty. Eleven face no Republican opposition.

Facing a stiff challenge is Rep. Graham Purcell (D) of the 13th district, who was first elected to Congress in 1962. The Republicans have high hopes of capturing the seat with Frank Crowley, Dallas County commissioner. The race is rated a toss-up.

VIRGINIA—Democrats face an uphill fight in maintaining their 6 to 4 majority in congressional seats. An added factor is four third party candidates who could affect the outcome for both major parties.

Four of the six Democratic districts appear to be safe, while Republicans hold the edge in three other races.

Frederick T. Stant, Jr. (D), a liberal, is favored to win the second district over challenger G. William Whitehurst (R). Incumbent Democratic Rep. Porter Hardy did not seek re-election.

Rep. David E. Satterfield III (D), a hard line conservative seeking his third term, could be dumped by John S. Hanson (R) with a well-organized Negro vote. Satterfield won the third district seat in 1964 by only 654 votes.

W. C. Daniel (D) is favored to win the seat in the fifth district of retiring Rep. William M. Tuck (D). Tuck's distant relative, Weldon Tuck (R), could squeek in if Ruth L. Harvey, an independent, draws the vote away from Daniel.

Democrats have a strong candidate in Andrew H. McCutcheon in an attempt to unseat freshman Rep. William L. Scott (R) in the state's eighth district.

Stresses 8-Year Gains:

Meany Bids Workers Do 'Best' for Ticket

- "Full equality for all Americans, in every aspect of life, has been established by law and we can see the day when it will be established in custom.
- "The road to a full education for every person is now broad and wide.
- "Medical care for the elderly is on a sound social basis.
- "The minimum wage has been strengthened and improved.
- "There is government concern, expressed in concrete terms, for the quality of life in our country. Compassion has been firmly rooted in governmental policy."

All of this, Meany said, stems from a philosophy, advocated by the AFL-CIO, "that regards the human individual as our basic resource, a philosophy that contends when you invest in the human individual you achieve richness for the entire nation."

Whether the nation continues to invest in its people, Meany said, is the key question as stake in the election this year.

Humphrey and Muskie, he noted, on the basis of the parts they played in the programs of the past eight years have demonstrated that they believe along with the AFL-CIO that the answer must be "yes."

Their Republican opponents, on the other hand, "clearly reflect the opposing philosophy," the AFL-CIO President declared.

"It shows in their record and the record of the party they represent. It is a theory of government that puts its faith in the rich and the well-born. It is one of suspicion and distrust of both men and government. And, as the record shows, the result is stagnation, slow-down, and recession."

As for the third-party choice offered by George C. Wallace, Meany charged that the former Alabama Governor would "turn the government of the country over to the police" and that, "to the American trade union movement, is completely unacceptable."

Meany concluded:

"The American working people have invested too much effort—they have fought too hard and too long to achieve the goals we have reached—there is still too much to be done to achieve the goals ahead—for us to do less than our best in the remaining weeks of this election campaign.

"If we do that, I am confident we will win a victory this fall—a victory of all America—through the election of Hubert Humphrey, Edmund Muskie and congressional candidates who believe, as we do, in a better America for everyone.

"So talk to your fellow workers—to your neighbors—to your family and friends. And urge them to vote with you for Humphrey Muskie and a better America."

SAN FRANCISCANS by the thousands jam the city's financial district to greet Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey. In the car with the Democratic presidential candidate is San Francisco Mayor Joseph Alioto, a staunch Humphrey supporter.

Alaskan Labor to Open Intense Voter Campaign

Sitka—The Alaska AFL-CIO will devote all of its energies in the next few weeks to an intensive register-and-vote campaign in behalf of the Humphrey-Muskie ticket and other endorsed candidates, officers reported at the 18th biennial convention here.

Hard work from now until election day, the convention was told can produce victory for the presidential ticket, for Mike Gravel, Senate candidate to succeed Sen. Ernest Gruening, and for State Sen. Nicholas Begich (D), who is opposing Rep. Howard W. Pollock (R).

COPE Area Dir. Walter Gray and Mrs. Margaret Thornburgh, area women's activities director, both reported intensified programs in all major cities.

Stanton Smith, coordinator of AFL-CIO central bodies, warned that the candidacy of former Alabama Gov. George Wallace could change the election results in several states. He told the delegates: "It is your responsibility as leaders to see that your members get the true story" about the danger of a victory for the Republicans.

The delegates adopted a series of legislative goals for 1968-69. They raised per capita taxes from 20 cents per member per month to 25 cents; authorized moving state AFL-CIO offices from Fairbanks to Anchorage, and voted new terms in office for Pres. Dwayne Carlson, Fairbanks, and Sec.-Treas. Henry Hedberg, Anchorage.

The convention enlarged the executive council from 10 members to 14 by adding three new seats for the Anchorage and Fairbanks areas and one for southeast Alaska.

Gravel, who won the Democratic nomination over Gruening in August, was endorsed because of his voting record in the state House of Representatives—100 percent in accord with labor's objectives.

The convention urged Gruening to disavow a write-in campaign initiated, it said, by a small group of university students and others. Gruening told the delegates he will not withdraw, and he is campaigning without the endorsement of labor or his party.

The following vice presidents were elected by the convention:

Anchorage: Inez Franz, Retail Clerks; M. F. Alewine, Operating Engineers; Watson Busby, Hotel & Restaurant Employes; Mel Evans, Plumbers & Steamfitters; Jack Turner, Carpenters.

Fairbanks: W. Wier, Bartenders; Julius Kornfeind, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Fred Hough, Retail Clerks.

Southeast Alaska: Don Barnhart, Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers, Sitka; Greg O'Clary, Inland Boatmen of the Pacific, Juneau; John Mott, Laborers, Ketchikan, and Marvin Kinberg, Jr., Sitka, Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers, at large.

Wallace Appeal Goes Just So Far

Austin — Democrats in Texas have been heartened recently by what they detect as a turnabout in the flow of union members to George C. Wallace.

And Roy R. Evans, secretary-treasurer of the Texas AFL-CIO tells the story of the farmer seen tearing the Wallace bumper sticker off his pickup truck.

"Don't you like Wallace any more?" he was asked.

"It's not that I don't like him," the farmer replied, "I just don't want that——— to be President."

Humphrey Hits Nixon 'Silence,' Renews Challenge to TV Debate

Nixon by avoiding discussion of the issues is taking the public for granted.

"When Richard Nixon takes people for granted," Humphrey said, "he is really taking it for granted that they are unhappy and desperate enough to elect even Richard Nixon President of the United States. I don't think things are that bad."

The Vice President, who a week earlier had outlined his position on the war in Viet Nam, called on Nixon "to tell the people what he would do about Viet Nam if he were elected President and tell them now."

As for Wallace, Humphrey said the third-party candidate has no experience in foreign affairs and now has brought to his side a "bombing general" as a running-mate, retired Air Force Gen. Curtis Lemay, "who thinks the nuclear bomb is just another weapon — who once suggested that we bomb Viet Nam back to the Stone Age."

Wallace, he said, is running for President on an "organized and deliberate appeal to hate, to fear, to anger, to frustration, to all that's worst in America."

Nixon, Humphrey suggested, "is more careful."

"In the South he says he will not use the only effective federal instrument to enforce the Supreme Court school decision—but in the North he says he doesn't really mean it. In the North he stood silent during the ugly campaign against Mr. Justice Fortas—and in the South he slyly joined it.

"He says he is for the treaty to stop the spread of nuclear weapons, but he is against ratifying it now and he will not encourage the Senate to ratify it."

Humphrey charged that while the GOP candidate has been silent himself, "his campaign managers have been mailing secret messages to special interests, such as the stock market traders on Wall Street, assuring them that a Nixon administration will look after their interests." (Story, Page 10.)

The week brought new evidence that the Humphrey campaign fortunes were on the upswing.

In Boston, where he had been heckled and shouted down by student anti-war demonstrators during an earlier appearance, he was greeted by a crowd of more than 300 students who pledged to enlist thousands of volunteer canvassers for his campaign.

In New York, he accepted the support of the state's Liberal Party in a nationally televised speech.

And in Washington, his campaign headquarters reported that a flood of favorable mail and campaign contributions had followed the Vice President's Viet Nam speech—more than 10,000 letters and nearly $200,000 in donations ranging from 25 cents in coins to thousands of dollars in checks.

In his New York speech to the Liberal Party, Humphrey lashed out at Nixon's selection of Maryland Gov. Spiro T. Agnew as his vice presidential candidate.

The choice of a running mate, he said, is "the most important selection a President makes" since "there is one chance in three that this man will become President."

Then he recalled Agnew's "insult to Americans of Polish and Japanese descent" and his charge that Humphrey was "soft on communism," incidents for which the GOP vice presidential candidate was forced to apologize.

"Before the Republican convention," Humphrey recalled, "Mr. Nixon talked about picking all sorts of responsible Republicans such as Mayor John Lindsay. But when the chips were down, he yielded to Strom Thurmond and picked Spiro Agnew."

He charged that if Nixon wins the election "the same kind of men that held him captive" at the convention would be named to federal offices "and there isn't a liberal among them—and you know it."

Teachers Post Pair Of Organizing Gains

The Teachers scored two organizing successes in widely separated areas—one by winning an election from the Warwick, R.I., Education Association, 415-318, the other by gaining a promise of recognition after a one-day strike at Delegado College in New Orleans.

Johnson Assails Nixon As Threat to Progress

progress of the past eight years.

As to the Republicans, Johnson spoke sharply:

"The gains America has made in these years were not won by the Republican Party and they are not going to be held and enlarged by the Republican Party. Indeed, by their words in this election campaign, Republican candidates for the presidency, the vice presidency and Congress have already promised to dismantle what you—the American people—have built in these years. They propose nothing more or less than to pull this nation downward, and to pull it back into another cycle of Republican reaction and inaction. And in doing so, they really promise to pull America apart."

At stake on Nov. 5, he declared, are housing and jobs and education and health, and progress in these areas can come only from the Humphrey-Muskie ticket.

They will continue to search also for ways to reduce "the awful danger of nuclear war and work for an honorable settlement of conflicts that threaten world peace."

The President cited the progress of the past five years and the 59 months of unparalleled economic growth, unprecedented job opportunities and unmatched earnings as well as the record of help to weak and struggling nations.

On Viet Nam, he expressed regret that it has not yet been brought to an end with an honorable settlement "of a war that we did not invite, but from which we could not run."

Declaring his hopes for an agreement out of the Paris conference, the President stressed that regardless of what happens there "I am determined that the next Administration will find America, South Viet Nam and our allies in a strong position on the battlefield."

Humphrey Pushes Attack As Drive Hits High Gear

ENTHUSIASTIC STUDENTS at Rockhurst College in Kansas City greet Vice Pres. Humphrey as the Democratic presidential candidate arrived for an address and a question-and-answer session.

Campaign Fired Up By Crowds

By John M. Barry

En Route with Humphrey—Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey approached the final two weeks of his drive for the presidency with an air of confidence and aggressiveness, spurred by the belief that his campaign is catching fire.

As he swung through the mid-America states of Indiana and Missouri, Humphrey was greeted at every stop by huge, enthusiastic crowds that buoyed spirits of the candidate as he sharpened his attack on his opponents.

Presses for Debate

The Vice President focused on the record of Richard M. Nixon and vowed his determination to "smoke out" the Republican candidate for a televised debate on the issues in the presidential election.

Humphrey campaigned exuberantly despite a back-breaking schedule that included addresses to student groups and unplanned stops to greet well-wishers along the campaign route.

Speaking in the home territory of former Pres. Harry Truman, Humphrey reminded his audiences of Truman's come-from-behind victory in 1948 despite predictions of the polls that he would lose. Humphrey suggested that a similar upset is now in the making 20 years later.

This drew exhortations from his listeners to "give 'em hell" in the Truman style.

The crowds roared their approval as Humphrey repeatedly challenged Nixon to abandon his strategy of silence and join him in debate before the voting public.

He suggested that the reason Nixon has so far refused to do so is is that he is well aware of his own

Coalition Dominates Congress

By David L. Perlman

The conservative coalition put its stamp on the record of the 90th Congress.

There were some bright spots. But the overall tone of the Congress chosen in the Republican "comeback election" of two years ago was one of retrenchment.

Programs launched by the liberal 89th Congress to overcome the nation's most pressing problems were starved for funds. Important new legislation was sidetracked.

As AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller sees it, labor's hopes for "real progress" were largely frustrated by "phony, pinch-penny budget-cutting" in the House and by "minority-rule filibusters" in the Senate.

"Instead of plowing new ground," Biemiller said in his evaluation of the 90th Congress, "liberals had to fight a defensive battle. Again and again the coalition of conservative Republicans and Dixiecrats raised the 'economy' battle cry to cut funds for programs that help working men and women and their families."

There were some bright exceptions to the retrenchment record.

The list of consumer bills that became law was genuinely impressive. The "truth-in-lending" bill that former Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) first introduced eight years ago, that labor had lobbied for year after year, was written into law.

Housewives Prevail

The voice of the housewife overcame the influence of the big meat packers and federal inspection standards were extended to billions of pounds of meat sold without crossing state lines. The following year, the same principle was extended to poultry inspection.

An open housing bill became law as a coalition of church groups, labor and responsible civil rights organizations proved its effectiveness — and overcame opposition from both white and black extremists.

The promise—although not yet the money—of a large-scale program to build low-cost housing the nation desperately needs was achieved with passage of Pres. Johnson's housing bill.

And in the closing days of Congress, a big new step was taken to expand vocational education and make it a more meaningful preparation for the jobs

In Network Broadcasts:

Meany Warns Nation On Nixon, Wallace

The nation's future cannot be entrusted to Richard M. Nixon who has built a career on deception and trickery or to George C. Wallace who seeks office on a platform of bigotry and hate.

"There is only one reasonable choice," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the country in a pair of radio broadcasts, the Humphrey-Muskie ticket, "men who have proved themselves in the bright glare of public affairs."

Speaking over the NBC radio network on programs sponsored by the AFL-CIO and the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union, Meany ran the record of the Kennedy-Johnson-Humphrey Administrations of eight years of gains and progress and Nixon's opposition to those programs.

He characterized Nixon as "the certified enemy of the labor movement, the opponent of medicare, the man who delayed federal aid to education for years, the man who throughout his career has used tricks and deception so often that the word 'tricky' has become part of his nickname."

Of Wallace, Meany declared him to be a man "who arouses the worst passions in the hearts of men, who has demonstrated in his own state his unfitness to govern, who seeks the presidency on a platform of bigotry and hate."

Nixon Recessions

Of the Nixon years as Vice President, Meany recalled "three job-killing, wage-cutting recessions" and not a single piece of constructive social legislation. In his years in Congress, Nixon's record shows that he was "against virtually everything the American labor movement has worked for."

In contrast, on every vote of importance to American workers "Hubert Humphrey stood with them —a record matched by few men in public office in our time."

Based on the record, Meany stressed, Nixon's election will call forth a fight for survival against anti-labor legislation, an economic slowdown and a recession and "a

J. P. Stevens Loses Again In High Court

The nation's most notorious union-busting firm—J. P. Stevens & Co.—lost another round in the U.S. Supreme Court.

The nation's highest court refused to consider the company's appeal from a National Labor Relations Board finding that the Stevens firm had engaged in flagrantly illegal conduct to smash a union organizing drive in the Carolinas.

It was the second time within a year that the high court in effect upheld NLRB findings that the big textile chain—a major U.S. government contractor—engaged in "massive" unfair practices to punish and discourage employe activity on behalf of the Textile Workers Union of America.

Carpenters Go Humphrey For His 100% Record

The Carpenters' executive board has unanimously endorsed Hubert H. Humphrey for the presidency, as a "tested and proven" leader who advances programs of "vital concern" to the union.

Citing Humphrey's "long public career" in support of health care, social security, jobless benefits and education, the board said "his voting record has been 100 percent in the interest of working people."

The endorsement was explained in an "open letter" to each of the union's 800,000 members. It was signed by Pres. M. A. Hutcheson, Sec.-Treas. Richard E. Livingston and all of the board members.

In studying the records of the presidential candidates, the board found that Richard Nixon "was against legislation supported by organized labor" on 59 of 69 votes. His election, it said, would "undermine" social and labor laws and unions' rights.

As for George Wallace, the board pointed out that as governor of Alabama he had "done nothing to change" anti-union laws and had increased taxes "which hit working people hardest."

"This is no time to jeopardize our gains," it concluded, "by turning over control to Nixon or Wallace, neither of whom has shown any real concern for the cause of organized labor."

Senate, House Races In Far West Spotlight

San Francisco—Hard-fought battles for at least two Senate seats, a handful of House seats and two state houses share the limelight in the Far West with the Humphrey-Nixon presidential contest.

The main event is in the same vein with both contenders gathering for all-out drives down the home stretch with 70 electoral votes at stake in the seven-state area.

In California the battle for the state's 40 electoral votes is heating up. Humphrey forces, far from counted out, are massing their troops for the Vice President's campaign swing through the state.

Barely second to the presidential contest in public interest is the struggle for the state's second Senate seat. Here liberal Democrat Alan Cranston is pitted against rightwing Republican Max Rafferty, described as the "fastest tongue in the West."

Rafferty was made the early favorite when he defeated Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel, number two Republican in the Senate, in the primary. He faded rapidly, however, and polls currently give Cranston a substantial margin.

In good Hollywood fashion, however, Gov. Ronald Reagan and GOP presidential candidate Rich-

4 Win Awards At Conference On Civil Rights

Chicago—Three local unions and a local labor newspaper won top awards for their work in civil rights at a conference here sponsored by the Jewish Labor Committee and endorsed by the Illinois and Chicago AFL-CIO.

Over 500 union and civic leaders attended the 14th Labor Conference on Civil Rights, attended workshop sessions and heard a number of speakers including the Rev. Ralph D. Abernathy, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference and Illinois Gov. Samuel H. Shapiro.

Abernathy said he is urging the widest possible turnout at the polls to elect "people who will try to lead us out of the darkness." He singled out for special attack George Wallace and noted that Richard Nixon "already owes political debts to reactionary forces who insured his nomination."

The top civil rights awards were presented to Dining Car Employes Local 849 of the Hotel & Restaurant Workers; Local 150 of the Operating Engineers; Local 743 of the Warehouse & Mail Order Employes and The Record, published by Steelworkers Local 1011, East Chicago, Ind.

Other awards went to Clara Day, community affairs director of Local 743, the Midwest edition of Steel Labor and the Federation News published by the Chicago AFL-CIO.

Special civil rights wards were presented to Abernathy and Eliseo Medina, regional director of the Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

The workshops discussed the rights of protest and domestic tranquility and a re-examination of the civil rights battle in 1968.

Harold Schwartz, midwest director of the Ladies' Garment Workers Union, was conference chairman; David Schacter, secretary-treasurer of Chicago Jewelry Workers Local 4, served as conference coordinator.

"WE CAN NEVER stop fighting for civil rights," Illinois Gov. Samuel H. Shapiro told the 14th Labor Conference on Civil Rights in Chicago attended by over 500 union and community leaders. At right is Harold Schwartz, assistant midwest director of the ILGWU who served as conference chairman.

Profits Study Planned By Flight Dispatchers

Miami Beach—Delegates to the Air Line Dispatchers' 26th convention here have adopted a broad program of research to equip the union for bargaining battles ahead.

The program calls for the budgeting of funds to compile and update figures on airlines profits, expenses, wages being paid inside and outside the industry and pensions.

"When we go into collective bargaining from now on, we are going to be better armed to combat company claims," declared ALDA Pres. Robert E. Commerce.

Commerce was elected to a new four-year term, winning a three-way race over J. H. Steele of National Airlines and G. M. Kinley of Eastern Airlines, both vice presidents.

Sec. Treas. James Boyd was re-elected to another two year term, without opposition. John Blake of United Air Lines was elected a new vice president, succeeding Kinley, whose term expires at the end of the year.

The terms of Steele and two other vice presidents, L. Fred Ritter of Ozark Airlines and Frank O. Wicks of Eastern Airlines, were not up for re-election.

The union, which represents highly-skilled operations control specialists on airlines, voted to continue to limit union membership to dispatchers and meteorologists.

Francis A. McDermott, an astronaut safety consultant at Houston and Cape Kennedy, told the convention that the Civil Aeronautics Board and the National Transportation Safety Board have a poor record in finding the cause of air accidents.

He suggested that the agencies would be less frequently reversed by courts in their findings if they were made independent of the Federal Aviation Agency in investigative procedures.

The union chose Las Vegas for its 1969 convention.

Shop Steward Wins Own Case on Firing

The president of a California maintenance firm broke the law when he fired a union shop steward on a charge of "stirring up unfounded grievances," the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled at San Francisco.

The three-judge court agreed with a National Labor Relations Board finding that Stanley Szczesniak, unit chairman and shop steward for the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, was engaged in protected activity when he solicited grievances from employes of the F. J. Buckner Corp., doing business at Compton, Calif., as the United Engineering Co.

The decision was a victory not only for the NLRB, one of its trial examiners and the union, but also for Szczesniak himself, who "wrote up" his own grievance and processed it to a successful finish.

The court decision relates that Szczesniak worked for the company nearly nine years before his firing and served his union as steward, shop chairman, chairman of the negotiating committee and member of the policy board.

As unit chairman, the court noted, it was his duty to supervise and conduct meetings, assist union members in interpreting the labor-management contract and "see that all the provisions of the contract were followed."

While a new contract was being negotiated in 1965, the court said, company president Buckner accused Szczesniak of soliciting grievances not only during working hours but also on his own time at the home of unit employes.

In an affidavit submitted to the trial examiner, Buckner said he was "fed up" with this activity, intended to put a stop to it, and demanded that Szczesniak stop "harassing" the company with grievances.

Union Official Fired

The union official was fired by Buckner shortly after contract signing on charges of excessive absenteeism, soliciting "unfounded" grievances and presenting grievances orally. Szczesniak filed a written grievance charging his firing was a contract violation and, when Buckner refused to let the firing go to arbitration—step four of the grievance procedure — OCAW filed an unfair labor practice charge with the NLRB.

Buckner appealed the board's order to reinstate the unit chairman, but the court turned him down.

Delegates Unanimous:

Iron Workers Roar Humphrey Support

New York—The Iron Workers voted unanimous endorsement of the Humphrey-Muskie presidential ticket as the more than 900 convention delegates firmly rejected the policies of both the Republican and third party candidates.

Passage of the resolution was greeted by a long, cheering and standing ovation. It was, said Pres. John H. Lyons, "a fitting answer" to a New York Times story that had described as "disinterest" the intent and respectful attention delegates had given a speech by Humphrey's running mate, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie.

The resolution of the 165,000-member union charged that Republican Richard M. Nixon "consistently voted against every liberal and progressive measure" which would "better the lives of the American people and the trade union movement."

It called attention to former Gov. George C. Wallace's advocacy of the Alabama "right-to-work" law and his fostering of low wage policies for workers. It also said Wallace "has no concept or understanding of the American people and leans towards establishment of a dictatorship."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the delegates that Wallace "represents the very first threat that I have seen in my lifetime of fascism in America."

'Democratic Procedures'

"We have problems in this country," he noted, "and we are going to solve them by the democratic processes. . . . We are not going to turn into a police state. We see too many police states around the world. We see the experience of other people."

Meany traced the parallel of Wallace to Hitler in Germany 30 years ago who "sold determined people on the idea that he could bring order out of chaos, that he could change things, that he could rule, and he gave them a police state."

"We can't afford to have that kind of man. We are not going to have him, but we can't afford to have Nixon either.

"I tell you that a vote for Wallace is a vote for Nixon," Meany said.

Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz warned that a protest vote for Wallace was "setting the table" for him to "play poker with the presidency," since he had reiterated his intention of throwing his electoral votes to the candidate with whom he could make a deal.

Another resolution criticized a proposed order of the Office of Federal Contract Compliance, which it said would require "specific ratios or quotas of minority group employes."

The resolution pointed to the union's impartial hiring halls and referral systems, its contract clauses barring any racial job tests and its non-discriminatory apprentice and retraining programs.

In his report to the convention, Pres. Lyons said the union plans to move its headquarters from St. Louis to Washington, D.C., by mid-1970. Several other unions would share the costs of the new Washington building which will also house their headquarters, he said.

Re-elected to new four-year terms were Pres. Lyons, Sec. James R. Downes, Treas. James V. Cole and nine vice presidents. The union also voted to raise the annual salaries of the officers $8,000. The new salaries ranging from president through vice president are $48,000, $35,000, $30,000 and $25,000.

Per capita taxes were raised 25 cents for shopmen to $1.25 a month and $1 for outside workers to $3.75 a month. Delegates also voted to raise death benefits from $600 to $750.

Hall Blasts Diversion of Food Cargoes

The Agriculture Dept. has been accused by the Seafarers of "ignoring" a congressional mandate that a minimum of 50 percent of all Food-for-Peace cargoes be carried on American-flag ships.

In telegrams to members of the Senate Commerce and House Merchant Marine committees, SIU Pres. Paul Hall said that American-flag tramp ships carried only 26 percent of these cargoes in 1966, and only 24 percent in 1967.

In addition to charging the department with "laxity" in enforcing the 50-50 requirements, he said the decline in American carriage was due in part to "activities" of foreign trade brokers "who are systematically denying this cargo to U.S.-flag vessels."

"I WILL NOT CROSS," said Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), second from right, upon arriving at the Towne House Motor Inn, Rochester, N.Y., and finding a picket line set up by Hotel & Restaurant Employes Local 466 in a demand for union recognition. Local 466 Sec.-Treas. John F. Litto, right, said the local later decided to remove the line long enough to allow Javits to speak because "he is labor's friend" and "he was there to speak for gun control, which we support."

Many Close Contests in 8 Big States:

Voter-Rich Midwest Becomes Major Election Battleground

The eight states of the Midwest have 139 electoral votes, slightly more than half of the 270 total needed for election and Democratic presidential candidate Hubert Humphrey is reported moving up in several of them and could end up winning a respectable portion of the vote.

The region is also a major battleground for control of the House of Representatives, and this year will choose five governors and six senators.

The area elects 113 members of the House. At the present time 68 of the seats are held by Republicans and 45 by Democrats. Republicans are seeking gains in the Midwest to improve their position in the 91st Congress.

Republicans are making a major effort in the Senate races where they hold only two of the six seats and in the gubernatorial contests where only one of the five incumbents is a Republican.

The Midwest seems to be in the process of shifting back to traditional patterns after the 1964 Johnson landslide. Seven of the eight states—Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, Ohio and Wisconsin, have cast their electoral votes for Republicans most of the times. Missouri is the only state with a Democratic voting pattern.

In 1960 Republican presidential candidate Richard Nixon carried Indiana, Iowa, and Ohio by comfortable margins and Wisconsin by 64,000.

Democrat John F. Kennedy barely squeaked by in the other four states—Illinois, Michigan Minnesota and Missouri, with less than 51 percent of the votes.

The general feeling among observers in the area is that Humphrey has turned the corner and is starting to move up. Humphrey's Viet Nam speech has won him some new support. His vice presidential choice, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, is proving a real asset on the campaign trail.

Third party candidate George Wallace is still considered a problem for Humphrey but strong labor campaigning, pointing up Wallace's poor record as governor of Alabama, is beginning to have an impact.

Here is a current analysis of the key races in the Midwest region:

ILLINOIS—Strong finishes will be needed by the Humphrey-Muskie ticket to capture the state's 26 electoral votes, and by Democratic senatorial candidate William G. Clark.

Clark, the state's attorney general, is running against Senate Republican Leader Everett Dirksen. Clark accuses Dirksen of ignoring Illinois needs. He refers to Dirksen as "an absentee Illinoisian."

Democratic Gov. Samuel H. Shapiro is given a good chance to beat back the challenge of Richard Ogilvie, Cook county board president. Shapiro moved up from lieutenant governor when former Gov. Otto Kerner resigned to accept a federal judgeship.

The 24 congressional races are mostly in the safe Democratic or safe Republican columns. Only two or three of the seats are considered doubtful, reinforcing opinions that the present 12 and 12 split between the parties may not change.

INDIANA—Humphrey is begining to move in a state which Nixon carried by 222,000 votes in 1960. Wallace has strength in areas with a high concentration of new Southerners but is reported to have peaked.

Sen. Birch Bayh is battling for a second term against William D. Ruckleshaus, Republican leader in the Indiana House, with Bayh listed as a favorite.

Both parties are battling for control of the congressional delegation which presently shows six Republicans and five Democrats. Redistricting and the retirement of Charles A. Halleck (R) in the 2nd District contribute to the uncertain results.

Edward F. Kelly is the Democratic nominee to try to win the Halleck district from Republican State Sen. Earl F. Langrebe, an extreme conservative.

Two incumbents—Democrat J. Edward Roush and Republican E. Ross Adair, have been thrown in the same 4th District in a tightly fought battle.

IOWA—Democratic Gov. Harold E. Hughes is running for the Senate seat being vacated by Republican Bourke B. Hickenlooper. Hughes is given a good chance to win this seat away from the Republicans who have nominated State Sen. David M. Stanley.

The close battle for the governorship is taking place between the Democratic state treasurer, Paul Franzeburg, and Republican Robert D. Ray.

Democrats may pick up congressional seats in the 1st or 4th Districts which Republicans won back in 1966 after losing in 1964.

Labor is supporting all five proposed constitutional amendments. These provide item veto power for the governor, annual sessions of the legislature, home rule for cities, fair apportionment of the legislature and new compensation provisions for legislators.

MICHIGAN—Latest polls show Humphrey holding a slight lead over Nixon with Wallace cutting into both Democratic and Republican strength. A campaign to whittle down the Wallace support among union members is beginning to show results.

A major area of concentration is the battle for the 19 congressional seats, now favoring the Republicans, 12 to 7. Five districts won by Democrats in 1964 but lost to the GOP in 1966, are the major battleground. The Democrats need at least three of these districts—the 2nd, 3rd, 7th, 11th and 19th, to win control of the delegation.

Labor is supporting a "fair tax" constitutional amendment. The proposal would eliminate the present inequitable requirement for a flat-rate income tax. Labor is also backing clean water and quality recreation bond proposals.

MINNESOTA—Humphrey is considered leading his home state. Minnesota does not have contests for governor or senator this year.

Republicans are waging an expensive campaign to defeat Democratic Rep. Joseph E. Karth in the 4th District and Donald M. Fraser in the 5th. Democrats are eyeing the 7th District seat where Robert Bergland is challenging the Republican incumbent.

MISSOURI—This normally Democratic state reports Humphrey gains in the St. Louis and Kansas City areas.

Democratic Gov. Warren E. Hearnes is favored to win re-election to a second four-year term over his Republican challenger. Lt. Gov. Thomas F. Eagleton, who defeated incumbent Sen. Edward V. Long in the Democratic primary, is putting on a vigorous campaign. His Republican opponent is Rep. Thomas B. Curtis.

The first Negro congressman from Missouri will be elected in the 1st District where Democrat William Clay is favored over Republican R. Curtis Crawford. James Symington, son of the state's senior senator, is waging a spirited campaign to capture the congressional seat in the normally Republican 2nd District.

OHIO—This state's southern area is fertile ground for Wallace supporters and Nixon is leading in the polls. He carried Ohio in 1960 by 273,000 votes.

Democrats are looking to another fast finish by former Rep. John J. Gilligan to retain the Democratic senate seat. Gilligan upset the experts to defeat conservative Democrat Frank Lausche in the primary. He faces Republican state Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe in the final.

Democrats also hope to improve their standing in the congressional delegation which is now 19 to 5 in favor of the Republicans. Ohio's first Negro congressman may be elected from Cleveland's 21st District. Democrat Louis A. Stokes, brother of the Cleveland mayor is reported holding a good lead.

Redistricting has resulted in two incumbent House members—Republican Frances P. Bolton and Democrat Charles A. Vanik facing each other in the 22nd district.

WISCONSIN—Sen. Gaylord A. Nelson is apparently ahead in his fight for re-election against a well-financed campaign by a Republican state senator, Jerris Leonard.

Republican Gov. Warren P. Knowles faces a potent Wisconsin vote getter—state Atty. Gen. Bronson C. LaFollette. Humphrey faces an uphill fight to capture the state which went to Nixon in 1960.

Best chance for a Democratic pick-up in the congressional races is in the 1st District where conservative Republican incumbent Henry C. Schadeberg is challenged by former Democratic representative Lynn Stalbaum.

SOME OF THE CHILDREN who will attend a Verona, Va., child-care center, built by the health and welfare fund of the Clothing Workers Baltimore Joint Board, greet ACWA Vice Pres. Sam Nocella and Asst. Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson at ribbon-cutting ceremonies. The center will serve women employed at an L. Greif & Bros. coat manufacturing plant.

Election of Humphrey Pressed in Nebraska

Lincoln, Neb.—Political action was the theme of the 13th annual Nebraska AFL-CIO convention here, where delegates gave their emphatic endorsement to the Humphrey-Muskie ticket and also endorsed contestants for the three seats in Congress now held by Republicans.

State Pres. Richard W. Nisley urged the convention not to forget the efforts Humphrey has made down the years for legislation in the public interest. Labor is quite familiar with the kind of "law and order" preached by presidential candidate George C. Wallace because it is the kind long used against labor activists, he said.

The endorsed candidates for Congress, Democrats Clair Callan, Maxine Morrison and J. B. Dean, spoke of their records and intentions.

By unanimous vote the convention endorsed a reduction in the state sales tax from 2.5 percent to 2 percent, and approved a homestead exemption amendment due for a vote No. 5.

It was agreed that if the state income tax is repealed by Nebraska voters, the state AFL-CIO will ask for a study of the entire state tax structure with a view toward recommending changes to the 1969 session of the Legislature.

The 300 delegates voted to raise officers' salaries and to extend the term of all state officers from two years to four. Salaries were increased from $11,000 to $13,500 for the president and from $9,600 to $11,750 for the secretary-treasurer. Earlier the state executive board voted a raise from $7,200 a year to $8,600 for the state political education director.

Alan Kistler, assistant AFL-CIO director of organization, charged presidential candidate Richard M. Nixon with "profound stupidity" for saying the farm workers should go to the National Labor Relations Board with their dispute. Farm employers are not required by law to bargain with their employes and Nixon should be well aware of that, he observed.

The convention supported a proposal to lower the minimum voting age from 21 to 18 after a speech by Chairman Dave Piester of the Nebraskans for Young Adult Suffrage.

Women Score Wide Gains Since '63 With Aid of Progressive Legislation

Women have made "remarkable gains" over the past five years in education, employment, training and other fields, Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz has reported to Pres. Johnson.

The report, "American Women—'63-'68," comes jointly from the Interdepartmental Committee on the Satus of Women, headed by Wirtz, and a Citizens Advisory Council.

They have been concerned with improving the status of women, under a program initiated by Pres. Kennedy in 1961 and headed by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt until her death in 1962.

Without her "pioneering" on behalf of women and determined work in this area, Wirtz noted, "we would not have realized today's accomplishments."

The gains scored by women were reflected by statistics in the report, such as these:

- In 1963, 72 out of every 100 17-year-old girls were high school graduates; in 1967 the ratio was 77 out of 100.
- In 1963 some 300,000 women were enrolled in junior and community colleges; in 1967 the figure was 600,000.
- In 1963 there were 200,000 children being cared for in licensed day-care centers; in 1968 the figure was 500,000.
- In 1963 some 2.1 million women were being trained under the Vocational Education Act; in 1967, 3.8 million.
- Approximately 285,000 unemployed and underemployed women have acquired new job-skills through training provided by the Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962.

Among measures cited by the report as benefitting women is Executive Order 11375 issued by Pres. Johnson last year to prohibit discrimination based on sex in federal employment and federally-contracted employment.

Further, a series of "substantive" laws in which "the women of America rank high among beneficiaries of new opportunities were passed between 1963 and 1968," the report states.

Singled out are the 1964 Civil Rights Act which prohibits discrimination by sex, color, race, religion or national origin; 1966 amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act which helped workers of both sexes; and the 1967 social security amendments, which enabled women to obtain family planning information and provided additional widows' benefits.

Also listed as "immeasurably" benefitting women and girls are education and economic opportunity acts of the last five years.

Note: Electoral College votes total 538. They are apportioned on basis of one for each representative, one for each senator. Thus the House totals 435, the Senate 100, with 3 for District of Columbia. A simple majority of 270 is required to elect a President. Lacking this, the election goes to the House of Representatives.

Congress Takes First Step to 'Winterize' Jobs With Study of Fluctuations in Construction Work

The "age-old curse" of seasonal fluctuations in construction employment may be on its way out of existence as the result of action taken by the 90th Congress in its closing days.

Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. made that observation in hailing passage of legislation calling for a study of the problem and recommendations toward solving it.

He pointed out that while it's "only a start toward doing something about a national problem requiring a national solution," it is a start that building trades unions have been seeking for some time.

In testimony before Congress earlier this year, Haggerty said the pattern of sharp layoffs in construction in the fall and winter is as old as the weather—and though supposedly based on it—occurs in both cold and warm climates of the country.

The "unnecessary" fluctuations, he added, result from "obsolete" building codes and government planning that makes money available for construction only in summer months.

Elimination of the fluctuations, he said, would bring "more efficient use of skilled manpower" and also "reduce the cost of construction . . . to the great benefit of all our people."

Pres. Thomas F. Murphy of the Bricklayers noted that bricklayers are unemployed an average of 15 weeks a year due to "seasonality." Vice Pres. Maurice Fancher of the Laborers said members of his union were working only about five months of full-time employment annually.

Labor Under Sec. James J. Reynolds said that fluctuations in employment in construction "result in a steady drain on unemployment insurance trust funds, far in excess of contributions by the construction industry."

The study of "seasonality in the construction industry," as an amendment to a bill extending the Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962, would be made by the Secretary of Labor, Secretary of Commerce, and representatives of several federal agencies.

Focusing on the problem's "implications for a national manpower policy," the study would look into the application of modern techniques in building to reduce the influence of weather.

It would also seek resolution of technical problems, changes in procedures of allocating of government contracts and improved planning and scheduling of projects. A report and recommendations would be submitted to the President and Congress by Dec. 31, 1969.

Chief sponsors of the legislation were Rep. James G. O'Hara (D-Mich.) and Senators Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) and Winston L. Prouty (D-Vt.)

Screen Actors OK Industry Film Pact

Hollywood, Calif. — Members of the Screen Actors Guild, voting in a nationwide mail referendum, have approved a new industrial contract providing improved wages and conditions for acting work in industrial and educational pictures. The vote was 7,884-106 for ratification.

SAG Executive Sec. John L. Dales said gains include wage increases from $100 to $110 a day in the first year of the new pact, to $115 in the second and to $120 in the third contract year. Weekly players will go from $375 to $392 now and to $420 next July 1.

Fired Worker Wins Expense Of Job Hunting

An employe fired wrongfully for union activity is entitled not only to his job and lost pay but also to reimbursement for the reasonable expenses he incurred in trying to find another job, a National Labor Relations Board examiner has decided.

Trial Examiner Paul Bisgyer added the expense item to the usual reinstatement order in finding that Gamble's, Inc., steel fabricator in Montgomery, Ala., illegally discharged employe Glenn H. Hall last January for trying to help the Steelworkers organize the plant.

At the hearing into charges brought by the union, NLRB General Counsel Arnold Ordman's office requested Bisgyer to change the customary backpay order by adding Hall's expenses in his search for work "whether successful or not."

"I find such a remedy fair and equitable," the examiner said in his decision, and "a necessary corollary of the duty imposed on a wrongfully discharged employe to seek other employment in mitigation of his loss of pay." He cited a recent decision of the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans.

In order to be entitled to backpay, that court said, an employe must "make reasonable efforts to find new employment which is substantially equivalent to the position from which he is discharged and suitable to a person of his background and experience."

Therefore, the examiner reasoned credit should be given Hall for his reasonable expenses in determining the backpay owed him by Gamble's. The examiner recommended also that the firm be ordered to stop illegal threats to other union members.

Air Engineers Stress Wages, Job Conditions

Miami Beach—Improving wages and working conditions must always be the union's "primary objective," Pres. William A. Gill, Jr. told delegates to the 20th annual convention of the Flight Engineers.

The convention also received reports on technical and labor activities of FEIA's units in Israel, Holland, Spain, France, Australia and Pakistan.

FEIA Sec.-Treas. Harry S. O'Brien was re-elected with out opposition to another two-year term. Gill was elected last year to a two-year term.

In stressing the importance of future collective bargaining efforts, Gill said the union will continue to be autonomous. Attempts to work out a merger with the Air Line Pilots have failed, he pointed out.

A convention-adopted resolution, condemning "hijacking" of aircraft, urged airline crews "to refuse to fly" to or from any state which fails to immediately release planes and crews pirated to within its borders.

The resolution was similar to one adopted by the Intl. Transport Workers Federation at its recent conference in Weisbaden, Germany, which brought the release of an Israeli aircraft from Algeria. A representative of FEIA helped draft the ITF statement.

The delegates also approved a resolution supporting workers involved in the strike-lockout at the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner and their "don't buy" campaign against advertisers in the Hearst scab-operated newspaper.

Tight Senate, House Races in Far West

70 Electoral Votes Go to Victor In Region's Presidential Battle

ard Nixon are galloping to the right winger's rescue.

Reagan loaned Rafferty two of the men who figured largely in his own 1966 victory along with, some reports say, the powerful and wealthy "kitchen cabinet" that financed and masterminded the Reagan election victory.

Nixon is heard repeatedly in person and on television crying out, "I need Rafferty."

Cranston, twice elected state controller, holds the record for the largest plurality ever racked up in the state. Rafferty in two races for state superintendent of instruction proved to be a fast finisher.

Cranston boasts the united support of every section of labor and of the Democratic party, along with a sizeable chunk of Kuchel support from Republican ranks. Rafferty is the longtime favorite of the well-heeled conservatives.

The outcome probably hinges on whether Cranston's indicated lead can stand up against Rafferty's last-minute heavily-financed sprint.

In Oregon veteran Sen. Wayne Morse, who celebrates his 68th birthday this month, is in a fight for his political life against a 36-year-old Republican leader, Robert Packwood, whose TV pitches make the most of the contrast in their ages.

Morse won renomination in a tough primary battle and labor is solidly united behind him, but Packwood's leading role in a four-year campaign to bring the state House of Representatives under Republican control gave him a healthy leg-up in his senatorial ambitions. He bills himself as a "new" or "constructive" voice. He says frankly he opposes repeal of Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b) and situs picketing.

In Washington, another veteran and ranking member of the Senate, Warren G. Magnuson, is running what observers described as the best campaign of his career.

Sen. Magnuson is making a big point of consumer protection. "Keep the big boys honest," his billboards proclaim. Washington voters apparently like it. Coupled with his long record of service, he is credited at this stage with a substantial lead.

Right-Wing Favorite

His opponent, Jack Metcalf, a school teacher and Republican state senator, echoes the conservative Republican line. His appeals for support are reported being sounded throughout the national right-wing network.

In Arizona, a familiar face on the political scene seems to be within reach of a return to the Senate. It belongs to Barry Goldwater, the 1964 GOP presidential standard-bearer, who is contesting for the seat vacated by 91-year-old Carl Hayden, who is ending 41 years in the senate. Hayden's chief aide, Roy L. Elson is bucking the Goldwater tide.

Alaska's former House Speaker Mike Gravel, who toppled 81-year-old Sen. Ernest Gruening in the primary, is showing strength in the polls over his Republican opponent, banker and Anchorage Mayor Elmer Rasmussen.

Gruening's write-in campaign is given little weight. Gravel supporters claim it's unlawful under a state law specifically prohibiting write-ins for a defeated primary candidate.

Incumbent Democratic senators —Alan Bible of Nevada and Daniel K. Inouye of Hawaii—seem to be in no trouble.

House Battles

Battles for seats in the House of Representatives—there are 56 in the seven-state area—are shaping up in a number of districts throughout the Far West.

Rep. James Corman in California's 22nd District in Los Angeles is locked in a tough battle with Republican Joe Holt who represented a Los Angeles district in the House for four terms. Democrat Corman has hung up a 45-right, 1-wrong voting record since he took over the House seat.

Democrat John V. Tunney, who has voted 22 right and 2 wrong in his two terms in the House, faces tough opposition from contractor Robert O. Hunter. Democratic registration favors Tunney, son of the heavyweight boxing champion and a friend of the Kennedy family, but his district also takes in some of the better-known rightwing territory.

GOP Rep. Robert R. Mathias, one-time Olympic champion, is challenged by former Rep. Harlan Hagan. Mathias rode in on Reagan's coattails two years ago. Peace & Freedom and American Independent candidates on the ballot may affect the outcome of the renewed contest.

In the Los Angeles 17th District, Glenn M. Anderson, two-term lieutenant governor under Pat Brown, is favored to succeed Cecil King who is retiring.

In Oregon's 4th District it's a race involving Republican incumbent John R. Dellenback and state Sen. Edward Fadeley. It's the only house contest in the state where the challenger is rated as having a good chance.

A contest is developing, too, in Arizona's 3rd District where Republican incumbent Sam Steiger (COPE voting record: 13 wrong) is facing Democrat Ralph Watkins in what is shaping up as a bitter fight.

House battles are shaping up in two Washington districts, in part reflecting the sharp contest for the governor's chair. Pressure is on in the 2nd District currently represented by Democrat Lloyd Meeds. He is challenged by an Everett businessman, Wallace Turner. And in the 5th District incumbent Democrat Thomas S. Foley faces a serious challenge.

Incumbent Republican Howard R. Pollock, Alaska's lone representative, is bucking a determined effort by state Sen. Nicholas J. Begich of Anchorage. The seat's "up for grabs," observers say.

The gubernatorial contest in Washington pits incumbent Republican Daniel J. Evans against three-term state Atty. Gen. John J. O'Connell.

Union forces are deeply involved in the contest. They have bucked Evans over workmen's compensation legislation. They oppose as needless his increase in the sales tax (covering food and drugs along with everything else) that produced a $130 million surplus in the state treasury. Evans keynoted the Republican Convention at Miami.

Initiative Measure 245, a labor-sponsored proposal to cut the interest ceiling on retail credit from 18 percent to 12 percent, is adding its share of heat to the Washington campaign.

The initiative, placed on the ballot by 143,000 union-gathered signatures, has drawn fire from the state's retail business, said to be outspending the proponents 10 to 1.

Arizona Gov. Jack Williams is bucking a comeback attempt by former Democratic Gov. Sam Goddard. Reports peg the race as "nip and tuck."

In Hawaii Republican vice presidential candidate Spiro T. Agnew may have put the state's four electoral votes into the Humphrey column with his references to an obese Japanese. More than 35 percent of the state's population is of Japanese descent.

STEELWORKERS picket Selma, Ala., plant of the Bush Hog Co. whose vice president is co-chairman of the national fund-raising campaign of presidential candidate George C. Wallace. When the USWA won an election, the firm not only refusd to bargain but fired the union president and hired strikebreakers, USWA charges. Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel said "this shows the real feelings of the Wallace camp" toward workers.

Rafferty Uses Struck Paper For Vote Bid

"Max Rafferty, Republican candidate for the Senate, bared his total disregard for workers' collective bargaining rights by running a big political ad in the strikebound and strikebreaker-operated Los Angeles Herald-Examiner," Sec.-Treas. Thos. L. Pitts of the California AFL-CIO charged.

Pitts said the appearance of the ad on Oct. 14, in the Hearst-owned paper, which is the object of a nationwide AFL-CIO consumer boycott, "amounts to a deliberate slap in the face to the 2,000 printing trades workers who have been fighting for more than 10 months" to have a voice in determining the wages and conditions under which they work.

Pointing out that Democratic Senate nominee Alan Cranston has respected the workers' boycott, Pitts said:

"All California workers, union and non-union alike, have a vital stake both in the senatorial race and in the Herald-Examiner dispute.

"If a multi-million dollar corporation such as Hearst is to be permitted to thumb its nose at the nation's established policy of encouraging free collective bargaining then the wages and working conditions of all California workers will be gravely jeopardized," he added.

Moreover, Pitts pointed out that the Rafferty ad is apparently the only political ad placed in the boycotted paper by any candidate of any political party in the general election campaign.

"If that isn't proof of Rafferty's anti-worker philosophy I don't know what is," Pitts said.

Pitts said that the ad showed Republican Presidential nominee Richard Nixon saying, "I need Max!"

Joint Programs Urged For Alcoholic Workers

Joint labor-management programs are vital to helping workers conquer alcoholism, a union representative told the 28th Intl. Congress on Alcohol and Alcoholism in Washington.

This is so, John D. Carney of the Steelworkers' education department declared, because "it is at the place of work that the alcoholic must come face-to-face with the hard facts of both his illness and his economics."

Carney's paper submitted to the 2,000 persons in attendance marked the first time the congress has received a detailed viewpoint on alcoholism from a labor spokesman.

Complex issues are involved in treating and curing alcoholism, so no single, uniform labor-management program can cover all work situations, Carney pointed out. Parts of the program must be administered on a local union and local plant basis, he added.

Based on meetings he has held with other labor representatives, Carney said the program should be directed toward improving an understanding among the problem drinker and his shop steward, foreman, and management executives.

Carney called attention to the latest contract between the Steelworkers and the steel industry, providing for a "coordinated program" at the plant level to secure the rehabilitation of workers "afflicted with alcoholism."

But in urging other unions and employers to similarly negotiate on the subject, he emphasized that the call for "coordinated action" is "not a mechanical process" that automatically succeeds.

There must be training procedures, he said, to develop "positive attitudes" among employers and union leaders on alcoholism "as a disease" and the alcoholic "as a sick person whose conduct is neither willful nor immoral."

"The problem of alcoholism is a health and social issue around which management and labor can establish warm, effective and constructive relationships," he concluded.

65 Take Part In Arkansas Labor School

Hot Springs, Ark.—Economics, labor history and issues in the 1968 election were featured courses at a one-week Arkansas-Oklahoma Labor Institute, attended by 65 representatives of unions from the two states.

The students saw two films—"Remedy for a Riot," dealing with the Kerner Commission report on the nation's urban crisis, and "Do Not Fold, Staple, Spindle or Mutilate," portraying the problems of young members of trade unions.

Speakers included William Walker, director of Little Rock's anti-poverty program, and Edgar Berlin, labor liaison to the Office of Equal Opportunity in Austin, Tex., both of whom discussed anti-poverty efforts.

The final session was addressed by Arkansas AFL-CIO Pres. J. Bill Becker, who urged the students to "grass-roots work" in which they will put into practice what they learned during the week.

Instructors at the institute were George T. Guernsey and Stuart Brock of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education; Marvin Friedman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research; Daniel A. Powell, COPE area director; and Al Wickman, education director, Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers.

Unholy Alliance

IN OUR MODERN political life the radical right and the radical left have long made common cause against the liberal, progressive forces. In their never-ending thrusts to seize power they employ the same weapons—violence, repression, exploitation of fears and frustrations, manufactured "big lie" propaganda. Any means are justified in their approach to secure the end—control and power.

The American people have rebuffed these forces sharply and decisively when they have used the political process as a path to power. The demagogues of the 1930s were brushed off for the progressive policies of Franklin Roosevelt. In 1948 both the right and the left went down to smashing defeat at the polls as the country again chose the liberalism of Harry Truman.

In 1964 the boldest attempt yet of the radical right was demolished in Lyndon Johnson's landslide victory over Barry Goldwater.

This year the radical right is back in business with George Wallace and the radical left with a "vote no" slogan. Both have a common enemy—Hubert Humphrey.

But this year sectors of the American electorate are giving more attention to the extremists of the right and left and thus providing them with the cloak of respectability and status.

Those who are in the direct line of fire of the civil rights struggle and the social protests against poverty have become the target of Wallace's cruel exploitation of their fears and anxieties. And some are buying the red-hot emotionalism, the promises of violent retaliation.

AT THE OTHER POLE are those who would destroy the democratic structure we have so painfully erected because its foreign and domestic policies do not measure up to their totalitarian concept of "revolution." They have lured to their side through skillful demagoguery and dissension over policies on Viet Nam some who have called themselves liberals and a group of intellectuals.

Dismissing the threat posed by Wallace's radical right to their own continued freedom and the prospect of a conservative rollback under Nixon, they are peddling a "dump democracy" line of sitting out the election, supporting no presidential candidate and welcoming a Humphrey defeat.

The New Republic and the Progressive magazines, for example, have rationalized an anti-Viet Nam position into a refusal to support Humphrey, a man they have praised and published for over 20 years. Four or eight years of Nixon is preferable to Humphrey's election, these magazines maintain.

The strategy of the radical right and the radical left is always identical—wipe out the liberals and progressives as a first step towards a takeover. As long as the liberals and the progressives hold their ground and retain political power the extremists are effectively stymied.

That's what this election is all about. The election of Hubert Humphrey is the key to defeating the extremists on both the left and right, to securing the democratic middle as a base for progress and freedom and peace.

In ILGWU Broadcast:

Johnson Pins Nation's Progress On Humphrey-Muskie Election

The following is excerpted from a radio address by Pres. Johnson sponsored by the ILGWU over a nationwide NBC network.

THERE ARE HARSH political voices in the air that seek to divide our country and our people, to set them against each other in mutual fear and suspicion. The man who stood at the school-house door, defying the law, is now pretending to be the apostle of order.

I don't believe many Americans will be fooled by that pose. I don't believe many people will be beguiled into thinking that order—in a democracy—can ever be achieved by empty rhetoric and violent appeals to emotion. Americans are too wise to waste their votes on a false prophet of fear.

Neither will they agree with Mr. Wallace when he says "There is not a dime's worth of difference" between Mr. Nixon and Vice Pres. Humphrey. Because the people know the record of both of these candidates.

They know that "Nixon is the one" who cast the tie-breaking vote that killed aid to education back when he was Vice President. They know that "Nixon is the one" who said that Medicare "would do more harm than good." And they know that "Nixon is the one" who speaks for the Republican party—Mr. Nixon's Republican party—that always opposes so much vital and progressive legislation.

The voters have now heard Mr. Nixon recently call for "delay" in adopting the treaty against the spread of nuclear weapons—the treaty we worked for, in so many forums, for so long a time—though further delay on our part will delay and jeopardize the acceptance of the treaty by other important nations, I think, to the lasting detriment of world peace and to our own American security.

So then the record and the differences are quite clear. There is all the difference of daylight and darkness between the Nixon-Agnew-Republican record of reaction and recession—and the kind of forward-looking leadership that the Humphrey-Muskie ticket offers to you Americans.

I have known and I have worked with Hubert Humphrey for 20 years. When I was Majority Leader of the Senate, he was a leader of the progressive forces in the Senate. When I was Vice President, he was responsible for many of the finest legislative achievements of the Kennedy-Johnson Administration—as one of the Senate leaders—including the Peace Corps and the nuclear test ban treaty. He was also first to sponsor medicare and the Food for Peace Program.

I asked Hubert Humphrey to be my running mate in 1964, for one simple reason: because I believed him to be the best qualified man to serve as President, in the event that I did not serve out my term. That was a paramount consideration for me—as it should be for every voter this year.

There have been 12 Presidents in this century. Four of them—one-third of our 20th Century Presidents—did not get to live to finish the term to which they were elected. So the intelligence, experience, and the integrity of the vice presidential nominee was of crucial significance to me back in 1964—as it must be to every American in 1968. Vice Pres. Humphrey's choice of a running mate—Sen. Edmund Muskie—has shown himself fit in every way, to serve a heartbeat from the presidency.

FEW MEN THAT I have ever known have understood our urgent national needs so well as Hubert Humphrey and Edmund Muskie.

My fellow Americans, the gains America has made in these years were not won by the Republican party; and they are not going to be held and enlarged by the Republican party. Indeed, by their words in this election campaign, Republican candidates for the presidency, the vice presidency and the Congress, have already promised to dismantle what you—the American people—have built in these years. They propose nothing more or less than to pull this nation downward, and to pull it back into another cycle of Republican reaction and inaction. And in doing so, they really promise to pull America apart.

So, as Nov. 5 approaches, I ask you to consider the stakes—for you, consider the stakes for your family and your country. When that day comes, go to the polls then and vote your conscience. Vote for housing for yourself and for all Americans. Vote for jobs for your family and an expanding economy. Vote for better schools for your children and every child.

Vote for men whose entire lives have been given to the fight for justice and for progress, for human dignity in this great land of ours.

When you vote for Hubert Humphrey and Edmund Muskie, you will be voting for all of this—for progressive Democratic leadership in America.

Meany Cites Clear Choice:

Recession-Riddled GOP Record Dogs Nixon's Anti-Union Trail

Following is the text of an address by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany over the NBC radio network on Oct. 18, 1968.

AS WE ENTER the final weeks of the 1968 presidential campaign there are some hard questions and hard answers each of us must face. They concern the basic economic facts of life . . . jobs, wages, working conditions and the safety of our unions.

I want to talk to the members of the AFL-CIO about those questions tonight. Let's look at the undisputed facts.

From 1952 to 1960 we had a Republican Administration in charge of our national government. Richard Nixon was Vice President for those eight years.

In his eight years there were three job-killing, wage-cutting recessions. At the end of that period the national unemployment rate stood at almost 7 percent.

Medicare, one of the most important pieces of social legislation passed in this generation, was bottled up in Congress. Mr. Nixon then said medicare . . . and I quote . . . "makes no good sense at all, except in an America that has given up its heritage of freedom and joined the dull, drab ranks of the bureaucratic superstate."

Our unions were under constant attack. The Landrum-Griffin Act, which created 17 new federal crimes of which 16 were directed against unions, was passed. And Mr. Nixon cast the deciding, tie-breaking vote against us. But not a single piece of constructive social legislation was passed during Mr. Nixon's years as Vice President.

But that is only part of the record. Mr. Nixon came to the Congress in 1947. In all the years he served in the House of Representatives, in the Senate and as Vice President he failed to vote once, even by accident, for fair labor-management relations. Instead, the record shows, he voted time and again against labor . . . against social welfare . . . against teachers . . . against the minimum wage . . . against virtually everything the American labor movement has worked for.

It should, therefore, surprise no one that today Mr. Nixon has given to Sen. Strom Thurmond veto power over the policies of his party . . . the same Sen. Thurmond who has introduced bills in the Senate which would outlaw industry-wide collective bargaining, abolish the National Labor Relations Board, and in other ways return labor-management relations to the jungle law of the 1920s. It should surprise no one that today Mr. Nixon lists among his economic advisers men with bitter anti-union records.

Now look to the other side of the coin.

In the past eight years of a Democratic Administration the unemployment rate was cut to 3 percent. Real wages rose $14.30 a week for the average worker in manufacturing as against $6.84 a week in the previous eight years. Instead of three recessions, there has been steady economic progress. And above all, landmark social legislation has been placed on the statute books.

It was Hubert Humphrey who, in his first year in the Senate, proposed the legislation we now know as medicare.

While Mr. Nixon was beating the war drums against labor, it was Mr. Humphrey who stood on the floor of the Senate to tell the country "what's right with labor."

THE RECORD SHOWS that on every vote of importance to the American working man and woman Hubert Humphrey stood with them—a record matched by few men in public office in our time.

Thus people who say there is no choice, are saying in effect that there is no choice between good and bad . . . between proven friendship and proven hostility. To people who say there is no difference I say look at the record. The difference couldn't be greater. The choice couldn't be clearer.

There are some, I understand, inclined to support a third candidate but it is clear that inclination is not based on reason. It is based on fear . . . fear of facing up to the many problems of our day . . . fear of our ability to meet the crises of our times in a rational way.

Either Mr. Nixon or Mr. Humphrey will be the next President. If it is Mr. Nixon we can expect, based on the record, a fight for survival against the consequences of bills already introduced by Mr. Nixon's friends. We can expect, based on the record, an economic slow-down and a recession. And we can expect, based on the record, a halt to the search for solutions to our pressing problems.

If Mr. Humphrey is elected . . . and American labor is proud to be working toward this goal . . . we can expect, based on the record, a continuation of the progress of the past eight years. We can expect broadening of the goals set by John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson . . . a constant raising of our sights toward a better world for our children and our grandchildren.

I am confident that when workers consider the record their verdict at the polls will be Humphrey and Muskie. There can be no other choice.

Boosting Basic Benefits:

Humphrey Social Security Plan Praised as 'Forward-Looking'

CONSTRUCTIVE and forward-looking—that was the description of the Humphrey program for immediate and long-range social security improvements made by the director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

Questioned by reporters on the network radio interview, Labor News Conference, Bert Seidman cited Humphrey's pledge of an immediate 15 percent boost in basic benefits, and 50 percent "over the next four or five years," as the major difference between Democratic and Republican proposals on social security.

A higher basic benefits level is the key to lifting many social security recipients "out of the ranks of the poverty-stricken," he said. The public affairs interview is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EDT, over the Mutual Radio Network.

Seidman condemned Richard M. Nixon's suggested "periodic cost-of-living adjustments," without any increase of basic benefits. The result would hinge social security to price rises, and rule out any general improvement for older Americans.

"The Republican platform position on social security is just about as deficient in what it recommends—and defective—as what Mr. Nixon is now saying," he asserted.

THE UNION spokesman also scored Nixon's suggestion that everyone be paid social security benefits at age 65, regardless of whether or not they have paid into the system or their earnings from continued employment or self-employment. That, he said, "would tend to benefit the rich at the expense of low-income people."

Seidman pointed out that the existing surplus in the social security trust fund would cover a "substantial increase now." He supported Humphrey's proposals to raise the contributions base and add a federal general revenue contribution. These proposals, he said, would eliminate the need for a higher social security tax.

Such a program, he said, was developed by "educational bills" in the 90th Congress, and pronounced "actuarially sound" by social security's chief actuary, "who has a reputation for being a very, very sound person."

Seidman was questioned by Al Goldsmith, editor of the Washington Insurance Newsletter, and Theodor Schuchat, columnist for the North American Newspaper Alliance.

WHAT WILL the next Administration do for the consumer? The newly-formed Consumer Federation of America, under the Rev. Robert J. McEwen, S.J., has obtained the views of the political parties and the candidates and is now in a position to answer the question.

Father McEwen appeared before the platform committees of the Republican and Democratic parties. He urged a Consumer Bill of Rights providing for:

- Right to representation in government.
- High quality medical care at reasonable rates.
- Right to use all products in safety.
- Right to be informed about products.
- Right to fairly price products and services.

As a result, the Republican platform contained one paragraph at the end of a section entitled "The Poor." It declared:

"A new Republican Administration will strive for fairness to all consumers, including additional information and protection programs as necessary; state and local consumer education; vigorous protection of numerous protection laws already enacted and active encouragement of the many consumer-protection initiatives and organizations of private enterprise."

The Democratic platform had a lengthy section entitled "Consumer Protection." It pledged to "take steps, including necessary legislation, to minimize the likelihood of massive electric power failures, to improve the safety of medical devices and drugs, penalize deceptive sales practices and to provide consumer access to product information now being compiled in the federal government."

The Democrats pledged, in addition, to help states pass consumer fraud laws and push extensive consumer buying programs to aid the poor.

To determine further the views of the candidates for the presidency, the federation sent out questionnaires. No reply was received from George Wallace.

Nixon, in his reply, declared that "the American standard of living is substantially based on self-reliance in the marketplace and the sound balance between rights and responsibilities . . . of businessmen and consumers under free enterprise."

He urged that the "full protective forces of government should be brought to bear . . . against a small minority of businessmen who . . . engaged in fraud and misrepresentation."

Nixon further called for "consolidation and coordination of existing consumer machinery" in the federal government. He also wants disclosure of product information, but is vague as to specifics.

Father McEwen, in his view, feels that Nixon, in his speeches, "has never mentioned the (consumer) issue, at least as far as I could discover," and that the GOP platform "gives small comfort to those who want to emphasize the importance of consumer issues and, in one sense, promises nothing that we can hold a Republican Administration to."

Humphrey submitted to Father McEwen a three-page reply in which he pledged that "protection and advancement of consumer interests will play an important role in shaping the program and policies of my Administration."

Humphrey said he would "review and unify the present patchwork of legislation" and would call for additional legislation where needed, plus adequate funding.

The Vice President specifically answered Father McEwen in saying that he "would recommend the establishment of an Office of Consumer Affairs to represent the consumer interests . . ." and continue the functions of the special assistant to the president, now handled by Betty Furness.

Humphrey also outlined details of plans for full consumer access to information about product safety, updating consumer credit laws, pricing policies, attention ot future anti-trust policies and increased consumer education.

HUBERT HUMPHREY'S social security proposals were hailed as "constructive and forward-looking" by AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman, center, on Labor News Conference on Mutual Radio. Questioning him on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs interview were Al Goldsmith, left, editor of the Washington Insurance Newsletter, and Theodor Schuchat, columnist for the North American Newspaper Alliance.

How To Buy:

Family Expenses Driven Up As Auto Prices Continue Rise

By Sidney Margolius

IF YOURS is a typical family, you probably spend about $850 a year, or $1 of every $7, for transportation—mostly for the family car. You can figure that owning a car now takes about $1 of every $8 of family expenses.

But the high cost of getting anywhere is becoming even higher as the result of the latest price increases by the auto manufacturers, and higher charges this year for gasoline, tires and auto insurance.

Actually the latest increase of 2 percent in new-car prices would have been even higher if the Administration had not done some fast talking. The Administration persuaded the car makers to hold the hike to about 2 percent instead of the approximately 4 percent a major manufacturer first had announced.

That means an increase in the 1969 cars of about $50 plus about $20 for the new head restraints (required on the new models as a safety measure). This is at least better than the whopping $120 first expected.

The price increases on used cars have been even more drastic. In general you have to pay about 25 percent more for a used car than 10 years ago.

A good late-model used car is still a relatively good buy. In fact, the standard used in the government's "moderate-cost" budget is a car bought two years old and kept for four years.

But a used car bought at excessive prices for the car and the financing from a high-pressure dealer advertising low or no down payments, can start a whole series of financial problems. First come high repair costs, then, in sequence, repossession, a deficiency judgment for the unpaid balance, and garnishment of wages.

In buying, perhaps the first question to ask yourself is whether this is the kind of used-car dealer you would be willing to vote for for President. Here are other tips:

● Have a good idea of current market prices for different models. There are cases of buyers who have signed installment contracts to pay $400 for old cars worth $100, and $1,100 for cars worth in the neighborhood of $400-$500.

Check current prices at other dealers, and in classified ads by private sellers. In addition, you can use our handy formula for judging values: take off 30 percent of the current value each year. Thus a car originally $3,000 would be worth $2,100 after one year; about $1,500 at the end of the second year; about $1,050 at the end of the third; about $750 at the end of the fourth, and so on.

● Don't trust the mileage shown on the odometer. These often are set back by dealers and sometimes by private sellers. Everybody in the trade and in charge of law enforcement knows it and blinks at it. Only Massachusetts forbids dealers to change the mileage.

A more dependable guage of the use the car has had, is the signs of wear shown in such tell-tale places as the rubber pad on the brake, the upholstery around the driver's door latch and window handle, and at the floor boards, and whether the doors are loose.

● If a dealer won't let you take the car for a test drive, don't buy it. A reliable dealer will. When you do take the car out, ask your own mechanic to check the engine and chassis.

● Read the warranty carefully before closing the deal. Only written guarantees count.

● Arrange your own financing. You can get car loans from your credit union or a bank usually at $6 to $7 per $100 (true annual interest rates of about 12-14 percent a year.) But dealers' finance companies usually charge more to finance used cars than new; $10 per $100 and more depending on the age of the car, state laws and the dealer's integrity. This means you pay true annual interest of about 20 percent or more.

Betty Furness:

Consumer Advisor Files A Grievance

By Ruth Stack

BEING THE PRESIDENT'S Advisor for Consumer Affairs hasn't made Betty Furness immune to the pitfalls of the marketplace. Some of her recent troubles with suppliers will sound familiar to weary spenders.

She's at war with a furniture company that delivered a couch two and one-half months later than the expected arrival date; she's also doing battle with a top-flite luggage firm that sold her baggage, the lining of which promptly ripped out.

New York City's Consolidated Edison Co. claimed another victim when it presented Miss Furness with a lump sum bill for $600 which it says she owed because of the company's own billing errors over a period of time.

And she's constantly in quarrels with dry cleaners whose costly errors leave her "with no dress and no redress."

When Betty Furness came to Washington, there were protests that she wouldn't be able to do the job because she didn't do her own supermarket shopping.

Today Miss Furness has shown she's a fast learner and a stern defender of consumer interests, in Congress and out. She's found out the consumer scene is broader than the supermarket aisles.

In an interview with PAI, where she revealed her own troubles with suppliers, she suggested that one answer short of more regulation of industry was for consumers to complain, complain and follow through on their complaints.

"It's not pleasant to carry on these constant skirmishes with manufacturers," she acknowledged. "But if we all did it, we might change the way industry operates."

Miss Furness has been outspoken in her demands for industry excellence. She defended American workmanship in a recent speech and laid the blame for poor quality on production techniques instead.

HER HEAVIEST volume of mail concentrates on poor servicing of appliances, TV's and automobiles, and her staff has compiled a report on appliance service practices which it is submitting to the White House.

Despite her identification with Westinghouse, she's been highly critical of appliance warranties and guarantees and told industry to make these guarantees more meaningful to consumers.

She finds consumers still confused about labels and packaging because new regulations are not yet in effect. At a recent meeting she asked 500 women if they understood what "cents-off offers" meant. Two women raised their hands. When she asked again "cents-off what?" the hands went down.

Miss Furness has found that testifying before Congress on pending legislation is one of the most challenging and enjoyable aspects of her work. When she first started, she told PAI, she and her staff would conduct a "rehearsal" of the upcoming hearing, with staff members firing hostile questions at her. She thinks her stage training has been invaluable here.

Miss Furness has been a strong and loyal campaigner for Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey. She's convinced that Humphrey's time has come and that the nation needs him. "Republicans care about things," she says firmly, "and Democrats care about people." (PAI)

Soup to Nonsense:

Foggy Past Put in Balance By Old Cancelled Checks

By Jane Goodsell

I HAVE JUST SPENT a poignant morning re-living the past as I sifted through a large grocery carton stuffed with a seven-year accumulation of cancelled checks. What prompted this journey down memory lane was not sentiment but parsimony. I was searching for proof that the five-year guarantee on my electric can opener had not expired. I didn't find the check I sought, perhaps because I got so lost in reverie that I forgot I was looking for it. That box of checks, like Proust's cookie, stirred up a flood of remembrance of things past:

May 3, 1961 . . . Henry Stouffer. . . . $3.65. Henry Stouffer? Henry Stouffer? Oh, of course, he was the nice old man who used to come around every few weeks to sharpen our knives. He did birdcalls to amuse the children, and now and then he'd bring me a jar of honey made by his own bees.

June 18, 1961 . . . Hammacher Schlemmer. . . . $8.00. The wine thermometer I sent away for. Fingering the check, I wondered what had ever become of that thermometer.

August 5, 1961 . . . The Paper Tree. . . . $4.15. That one was easy to pinpoint. Molly's birthday is Aug. 6, so I had no doubt bought favors and table decorations for her party. Wasn't '61 the year of the balloon fiasco? I'd bought 25 blue balloons and 25 red ones, and I blew them up the night before, knowing that I wouldn't be equal to all that huffing and puffing the day of the party.

When I came downstairs the next morning, my big beautiful balloons had magically disappeared, and the dining room floor was littered with what appeared to be shrivelled-up prunes.

JULY 6, 1962 . . . Public Library . . . $3.50. Oh-oh. That was the time we had to pay for the copy of How to Train Your Cocker Spaniel, which was chewed to shreds by our new puppy, Skeezix.

October 23, 1962 . . . Lloyd's Auction Mart . . . $14.50. That would be my rosewood tea caddy, the first thing I ever bought at an auction. I was so rattled by the rapid-fire bidding that I groaned in disappointment when the auctioneer banged his gavel and barked, "Sold to the lady in the red coat!" I didn't grasp what had happened until my husband explained that the lady in the red coat was me.

November 8, 1962 . . . Mary Colliver. . . . $7.50. My middle daughter had to figure that one out for me. It was, Katy explained, "The girl I bought my ski boots from at the PTA Swap Sale's mother."

January 10, 1963 . . . W. B. Barker Appliance Co. . . . $365.99. Even in retrospect, that made me wince. It was payment for the new refrigerator we had to buy when our old one sighed and died—on Christmas eve.

So you see? Cancelled checks are not merely dry records to be preserved in case the Internal Revenue Service should get a sudden impulse to investigate your 1963 tax returns. They are nostalgic keepsakes from times past.

Court Denies Review:

Stevens Loses Bid To Upset NLRB

York City, had ordered enforcement of an NLRB finding 18 months ago that Stevens officials in North and South Carolina plants were guilty of:

- Firing employes for their union activity.
- Punishing union supporters, spying on them, threatening them, discriminating against them and otherwise interfering with their right to engage in organizational activity.

The latest case involves 17 workers fired in 1964 for joining TWUA, and one employe fired for testifying as a government witness at an NLRB hearing. The NLRB, and the 2nd Circuit judges ordered Stevens to rehire the 18 workers, give them backpay for their wage losses and stop its terroristic drive to destroy their legal rights. That order now can be enforced.

In a similar case, called Stevens No. 1, the Supreme Court previously let stand an order finding the giant chain guilty of illegally firing 71 other workers in 1963 and intimidating others to destroy any vestiges of union organization in 20 Carolina plants. Stevens complied with this latter order by offering reinstatement to 69 surviving victims.

In the wake of the latest Supreme Court action, the TWUA called on the National Labor Relations Board to institute contempt proceedings against the Stevens firm for its contining violation of the law "in the face of court decisions directing the company to cease and desist from such actions."

TWUA Pres. William Pollock told newsmen that "the normal processes of justice apparently have no effect on J. P. Stevens. What is apparently needed to bring this company to its senses are fines and imprisonment for contempt of court orders."

Three other charges against the Stevens firm are pending on appeal. They grew out of the company's continuing union-smashing actions in the face of NLRB and court orders that it obey the law.

Stevens carried the first two Appeals Court rulings to the high court in challenges to the unusual remedies devised by the labor board to force the chain to stop breaking the law. In Stevens No. 2, the firm is now under these orders:

- Give union representatives for a one-year period "reasonable access" to all plant bulletin boards.
- Read the board's order to all its employes at meetings called during working hours.
- Mail a copy of the NLRB order to all employes in the company's Carolina plants, and post copies asserting that Stevens will obey the law and stop its illegal actions.

The Supreme Court refused to review 22 cases involving unions, but did accept two others for argument. One involves the legal right of a union to fine members for exceeding production quotas set by the union. The other concerns the legality of a union shop clauses on the Erie Lackawanna Railroad.

Democrats Get Labor Backing In Wisconsin

Green Bay, Wis.—Delegates to the Wisconsin State AFL-CIO convention voted all-out support for the re-election of Sen. Gaylord Nelson and the state's three Democratic congressmen—Robert W. Kastenmeier, Henry S. Reuss and Clement J. Zablocki.

Earlier they unanimously endorsed the Humphrey-Muskie presidential ticket, and State AFL-CIO Pres. John W. Schmitt said a follow-up meeting of union leaders will be held in Milwaukee Oct. 18 as the campaign moves into its final stage.

The convention also called for the election of six Democrats challenging incumbent Republican congressmen. The labor endorsements went to Lynn Stalbaum, Gunnar Gundersen, John Race, Lawrence Dahl, John Nixon and Mrs. Carol Bauman.

In statewide races, the convention backed Bronson LaFollette for governor and the Democratic candidates for attorney general, lieutenant governor and state treasurer.

Arkansas COPE Backs Humphrey, Hits Wallace

Little Rock, Ark.—Noting the 100 percent pro-labor record of Hubert H. Humphrey, the Arkansas COPE convention overwhelmingly endorsed the Vice President in his bid for the presidency.

Coupled with the endorsement was a blistering attack on the third party candidate, George C. Wallace, and his interference with unions while governor of Alabama.

Delegates also cheered support for Democratic gubernatorial candidate Marion H. Crank, who addressed the convention. Crank, a state representative, is attempting to unseat one-term Republican Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller.

A resolution adopted by the convention warned that a vote for Wallace might help carry the state for Richard M. Nixon "because of the strong Republican effort this year."

Arkansas AFL-CIO Pres. J. Bill Becker noted that Wallace has some backing from union members. He said, however, that he had "great faith that when they know the record, they will support the Humphrey-Muskie ticket."

The convention resolution pointed out that while governor, "Wallace had tremendous power but it was not used to help the working people. He appeals to racism and hatred; his call for law and order is hollow."

Becker said that the recent voting pattern in the state in rejecting Jim Johnson for governor showed that "racism is dead."

Delegates also heard Hardy Croxton, the Democratic candidate for the state's third congressional district. Croxton faces a tough fight in opposing Republican Rep. John P. Hammerschmidt. COPE had endorsed Croxton before the state's primary election.

Sen. J. William Fulbright was endorsed for re-election without discussion by the convention because of his luke-warm labor voting record. Fulbright is expected to win easily over Republican Charles J. Bernard.

SOME 400 FRIENDS of Gordon M. Freeman, who recently retired as president of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, honored him at a dinner in Washington. On hand were leaders in the IBEW, government, management and labor, including AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Freeman, at the rostrum, said he was leaving the union "in good hands" and predicted it "will go on to new heights and new horizons."

Harrassed N.Y. Teachers Battle To Save Schools from 'Vigilantes'

By Eugene A. Kelly

New York—For the third time in a month, members of the United Federation of Teachers voted to stay out of their classrooms until Mayor Lindsay and the school superintendent agree to abide by the union's contract with the city.

The work stoppage, like the others before it, was caused by the refusal of the semi-autonomous Ocean Hill-Brownsville school district in Brooklyn to permit 83 unlawfully suspended teachers to resume their duties, free of harassment by mobs of "militants" invading their schools.

The latest "stayout" of 53,000 UFT members brought these reactions:

Lindsay appointed a three-member panel headed by Theodore W. Kheel to review the dispute; the Brooklyn district attorney began an investigation into reports of terrorism, including death threats, at Junior High School 271 in the "decentralized" Ocean Hill-Brownsville district; and the union appealed a court decision denying jury trials to UFT Pres. Albert Shanker and Pres. Walter J. Degnan of the School Supervisors Association, both accused of contempt of court for "striking" in violation of the state Taylor Act.

The union voted to stop work again when School Superintendent Bernard Donovan reopened the junior high school he had previously closed to prevent disorders.

It said in full-page ads in New York daily newspapers:

"We would rather teach than picket. But we have no choice.

"We are determined to defend sanity in our schools. We will not tolerate capitulation to small groups who use the threat of violence to have their way.

"We are fighting to protect the rights and the self-respect of teachers. We are fighting to defend our schools, our local boards, our parents' associations from takeover by vigilantes."

The union emphasized: "We are not opposed to decentralization or experimentation. We are pledged to cooperation with any community which wishes to experiment in a framework of justice, academic freedom and respect for the contractual rights of teachers."

The UFT, the local affiliate of the AFL-CIO Teachers, called on all parents to "let the mayor, the Board of Education and Dr. Donovan know that you want an end to vigilantism, hate propaganda and terror in the schools of New York."

In the ad, the UFT related that a week earlier, Donovan "took firm action, consistent with the written assurances of the mayor and the Board of Education that all teachers, including those at Ocean Hill-Brownsville, would be protected from harassment and intimidation. He relieved Rhody McCoy, district school administrator, and his offending school principals of their duties."

The results, the union said, were "immediate and heartening." Teaching returned to normal in seven of the district's eight schools. Returning teachers were assigned classes. Harassments and threats against them ended. Pupil attendance increased, and many parents brought their children to school "for the first time" since the school year started, the UFT asserted.

One school was the exception—JHS 271 where, the union said, "the vigilante forces, too scant to spread out, mounted a single concentrated stand. They turned the school into a shambles" by this conduct:

"McCoy's teacher partisans used classrooms for hate sessions against returning teachers. Those attempting to join their classes were assailed by obscenities and threats. Outsiders were allowed to roam the corridors." They "forced their way into the teachers' lounge, screaming 'filthy pigs' and 'punks' and other epithets at returning teachers and threatening to 'get them' at their homes."

After Donovan announced the closing of JHS 271, seven of the eight district schools soon were "restored to reasonably normal teaching conditions." But two days later the superintendent reopened the school run by the militants and, the union said, restored the seven rebelling principals to their posts at the other schools "without any assurance that the riotous conditions that had led to their suspension would not be repeated."

The UFT said it its ad: "Now we are back where we started. The suspended governing board is still functioning. McCoy is still at his desk, drawing his salary of $30,000 a year. The suspended principals, still pledged to take their orders only from the suspended board and their suspended supervisor, and still pledged to prevent the 83 returning teachers from teaching their classes, will be back at their jobs."

Labor Board Upholds IUE Right to Time Study

The National Labor Relations Board ordered the General Electric Co. to stop violating the labor law by refusing to permit a union to make its own time studies at GE's plant in Hickory, N. C.

Three NLRB members signed a decision upholding a trial examiner's finding that management violated the law when in 1966 it refused the request of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers to allow a union time study engineer to examine GE time study data on production standards involved in a union grievance; also when it failed to furnish the IUE with information about area wage surveys that GE had made.

Another ruling by Examiner Melvin Pollack was rejected. The examiner held that the IUE and its Local 182 had waived the right to make its own time study when it signed a contract without any provision for such a study, but the board rejected his reasoning.

During 1966 negotiations the union proposed a contract revision permitting the IUE to bring in industrial engineers and specialists to assist it in studying or inspecting the work involved in the grievance.

GE refused to permit this but, the board pointed out, the union "continuously and consistently asserted its statutory right to make its own time studies prior to the 1966 negotiations, during the negotiations and subsequent to the negotiations."

Further intent of the union's "firm intent" not to waive its legal right is, the board said, the fact that the union signed an unfair labor practice charge the day before a meeting with company officials on the contract, and filed it with the NLRB the day after the meeting.

The board stated the rule it previously laid down in a time study case: "Although a statutory right . . . may be waived by collective bargaining, a waiver . . . must be clearly and unmistakeably established and is not lightly to be inferred." Such a waiver was not proved in the Hickory case, the NLRB said.

TWUA Wins 2 Kayser-Roth Canadian Units

Workers in two Canadian plants of the Kayser-Roth Corp. have chosen to be represented by the Textile Workers Union of America despite "intense opposition" by chain management.

TWUA Pres. William Pollock said a hosiery manufacturing unit in London, Ont., voted 71-35, for union representation. The Ontario Labor Relations Board certified TWUA as representing a majority of the 40 workers at a Kayser-Roth tricot knitting and dyeing facility in the same town.

Pollock said the victories gave a "decided lift" to the morale of 500 Kayser-Roth employes in Dayton, Tenn., on strike since May 6 in protest against the company's refusal to bargain in good faith. Also, he said, they demonstrate that the firm's union-busting policies have not blunted the desire of its employes for union representation.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council at its meeting here in September called for support of the strikers by the entire labor movement, and urged consumers to bypass Kayser-Roth products —Supp-Hose, Kayser, Mojud, Phoenix and Schiaparelli women's hosiery, and Esquire, Bachelor's Friend and Supp-Hose for men—while the strike lasts.

The Council described conditions at the struck plant: "Many of the workers make only the federal minimum wage. Fringe benefits are grossly substandard. Working conditions are deplorable. Unless real bargaining begins, no improvements can be secured."

Vermont Labor Backs Democratic Candidates

Burlington, Vt.—All candidates for state office spoke at the Vermont AFL-CIO convention here, the largest on record with delegates present from 145 affiliated local unions.

The delegates endorsed Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey and his running mate, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, on the national level. Their state choices were Lieut. Gov. John Daley (D) to succeed retiring Gov. Philip H. Hoff (D) and William Hunter (D) for lieutenant governor.

Prospects are good, Pres. Ralph E. Williams reported, that Vermont labor can count on most of its 45,000 voters to help carry the labor's register-and-vote campaigns state for Humphrey. He said there is no shortage of volunteer help anywhere across the state.

The convention voted to oppose any state sales tax increases; pledged to contribute $1 per member of affiliated unions for the Pittsford, Vt., child health center; and agreed to continue its annual "buy union" campaign Dec. 1-7.

Returned to office by vote of the convention were Williams, for his seventh term; Sec.-Treas. Carroll P. Comstock, Jr.; and Executive Vice Pres. Martin Berger. Mrs. Jane Noury was elected director of the Women's Activities Division, succeeding Mrs. Ruth Colombo, now assistant WAD director for the AFL-CIO's Eastern area.

The delegates cheered an announcement on the opening day that the State, County & Municipal Employes had won a representation election among Burlington city service employes despite harassment by Mayor Francis Cain. Earlier the officers had withdrawn an invitation to the mayor to address the convention.

The officers reported a gain in membership since the last convention and good organizing potential despite a shortage of organizers.

The delegates approved resolutions favoring a reduction in the voting age from 21 to 18, calling for full civil rights for all citizens, and supporting the farm workers and their California grape boycott.

Marine Cooks Launch Youth Training Project

San Francisco—A precedent-setting program to prepare poor youths—many of them from minority groups—for merchant marine careers, was announced here by the Labor Dept.

The program is embodied in a contract entered into by the department, the Marine Cooks & Stewards division of the Seafarers an employer group of ship owners and stevedore firms.

Under the program, 225 trainees will be selected in California to undergo two months of pre-apprenticeship training to find out if they have the aptitude and ability to enter apprenticeships as cooks, bakers and butchers.

The youths who pursue the apprenticeship route will receive two more months of pre-apprenticeship training, and then be placed aboard PMA ship lines for their formal four-year apprentice training.

Those who do not go on into apprenticeship training, will be offered employment aboard ships as waiters and stewards. Thu, every youngster is assured of a job if he wants it.

Applicants for the apprenticeship program will be drawn primarily from Neighborhood Youth Corps projects. In addition, the union will also be referring some youngsters to the program.

Edward Denny, California supervisor for the department's Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training, said the program is " a major breakthrough and is the first of its kind in the nation."

Ships Lack Facilities

In the past, he pointed out, BAT has been unable to launch marine apprentice programs for poor youths because ships do not have facilities to give them the educational courses that must supplement the job training.

Denny said the Marine Cooks & Stewards now will provide the needed courses at the union's Santa Rosa, Calif., training facility, entirely at the union's expense.

Under the contract, the Labor Dept. has underwritten the pre-apprenticeship phase of the training through a joint allocation of $42,769. Labor and management, through a joint apprenticeship committee, will finance remaining costs.

Signing the contract at PMA's offices here were Rocco C. Siciliano, president of the employer group, and Edward Turner, executive secretary-treasurer of the Marine Cooks & Stewards.

Jobless Rise Okay With Nixon Advisor

Richard Nixon's top economic advisor is willing to accept a rise in unemployment for the sake of better price stability.

Alan Greenspan told the Washington Star in an interview that Nixon, if elected "would be willing to take slightly more unemployment in the short run" as the price of checking inflation.

Greenspan declared that if economic policy concentrates on lowering unemployment there is a risk that miscalculation may trigger severe inflation.

James Zink Dies, Leader in Oilers

James B. Zink, 59, executive vice president of the Firemen & Oilers and leader of the union's railroad membership, died of cancer at his home in West Springfield, Va., just outside of Washington.

A native of Bloomington, Ill., Zink joined the union in 1932 and came up through the ranks on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, holding various local union offices.

He became the union's general chairman on B&O in 1940, was appointed vice president in 1957 and re-elected at union conventions in 1961 and 1967. He came to the Firemen & Oiler's headquarters in Washington as executive vice president in 1965.

In Latin America:

Unions Seen Key To Free Countries

Strong, free unions are essential to the preservation of democracy in Latin America, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a graduating class of the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

He spoke at Georgetown University in Washington where 20 representatives of unions in 15 Latin American and Caribban countries received certificates as graduates of a nine months' course in labor economics.

This is the second group of union representatives to complete AIFLD's labor economics course. The first group took the course last year at Loyola University in New Orleans.

To Aid Bargaining

The program, which includes studies in economics, industrial relations and collective bargaining, is designed to prepare Latin Americans to provide their unions with research and economic material to facilitate bargaining.

The "self interest" of U.S. labor and management in aiding Latin American unions and economies, Meany said, lies first in making them strong enough to resist attempted take-overs by Communists or military dictatorships.

"Every threat to freedom in Latin America is a threat to our freedom as well as freedom elsewhere around the world," he emphasized.

U.S. Economy Helped

Further, Meany continued, the U.S. economy is strenthened in relation to the extent that poverty is eliminated in Latin America and its countries and people are better customers for our products.

"Freedom," Meany said, "is fundamental to our whole society. A worker cannot gain his fair share unless he is free to use the trade union instrumentality."

In helping to train labor leaders from Latin America, the AFL-CIO through AIFLD "has never demanded conformity with our trade union system," Meany pointed out.

"The only reservation," he added, "is that the unions being helped are free—not under government control, not under employer control."

AIFLD Executive Dir. William A. Doherty, Jr., who also spoke at the graduation exercises, said, "skill in labor economics is one of the most important tools of the trade unionist today. He cannot sit at the bargaining table without it."

Meany and David Kaplan, director of the labor economics program, presented certificates to the graduates, after Julio Cesar Parola of Argentina spoke for the class.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who is secretary-treasurer of AIFLD's board, and Dr. Jesse A. Mann, dean of Georgetown's School of Foreign Service, addressed a dinner that followed the graduation exercises.

Beirne told the students that the civil rights struggle still going on in the United States is "really part of our never-ending revolution, going back to 1776, when the country was founded on the belief that all men are created equal."

He spoke of how the "labor movement has taught us we are all brothers wherever we may live." He challenged the graduates to use their knowledge "to participate fully in determining economic policies in their countries."

Mann stressed that Georgetown had benefitted from having the course, "just as you have benefitted from the training you have received."

"We know that you return to your homes with the equipment and desire to make your freedom a continued reality," he added.

Valedictorian Speaks

The valedictory address was given by Gaston A. Benjamin, a largely self-educated printer from Trinidad, who said "as much as the 20 of us have improved our knowledge, that much has labor movement of our countries improved."

He spoke eloquently of the "bonds of trade unionism and fraternity" that were created during the course and movingly described the grief his fellow-students felt over the assassinations of Martin Luther King and Robert F. Kennedy.

Relocation Allowances Help Jobless Workers

Experimental relocation of jobless workers to areas where they are able to find and keep jobs has proven successful, according to the U.S. Dept. of Labor.

A review of 18 relocation projects for 3,141 disadvantaged workers shows that 88 percent of the relocations were successful. The average individual allowance cost for the participants in these projects was $325.

The projects covered the 12-month period ending June 30. Compared to the previous two years, there was marked improvement in the percentage of successful relocations, coupled with substantial reduction in average individual allowance costs.

During 1965, there were 705 relocations with a 70 percent success rate. In 1966 and 1967, there were 2,488 relocations and the success rate climbed to 82 percent. The average individual allowance costs for those years was $442.

A higher success rate also was achieved in 1968, in spite of the fact that the workers involved were those with lower educational and skill levels, the Department said. They also had poorer employment records and a much higher percentage of them were collecting welfare or unemployment insurance benefits.

The success of the experimental relocation programs was also demonstrated by higher wages and improved occupational categories.

Although all participants were unemployed when they entered the program, the average wage they earned on their last regular job has been $1.80 an hour. The average wage on their new job rose to $2.25 an hour. Also, most of the individuals moved from unskilled and entry level jobs into semiskilled, skilled and managerial jobs.

Some Bright Spots in 90th:

Fund Cuts, Filibusters Set Conservative Congress Tone

industry must fill now and in the future.

But this progress was overshadowed by the economy axe wielded by House conservatives and the willingness of a minority of the Senate to use filibusters and the threat of filibusters to block action.

Biemiller noted that this year the filibuster was used in "an outrageous, vindictive attack on the Supreme Court, seizing as a pretext the nomination of Justice Fortas to be chief justice."

And, Biemiller added, just before adjournment "the simple threat of a filibuster by Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen prevented consideration of the bill to permit TV debates among the presidential candidates."

Left for the 91st Congress, Biemiller said, if the conservative tide can be turned back on Election Day, are such key issues as "a massive new job program; occupational safety and health; education, manpower training, health and anti-poverty programs; organizing and bargaining rights for farm workers; on-site picketing rights in the construction industry, and adequate funding to meet the urgent needs of the urban crisis."

The final days of the 90th Congress were symbolic of the retrenchment mood of the past two years.

A supplemental appropriations bill, to carry a number of government agencies through the fiscal year, was cut by more than one-third.

Instead of $90 million for food stamps for the poor, Congress appropriated $55 million. The $75 million sought for rent supplements for low income families was hacked to $25 million; an identical cut was made in money for home-buying assistance. Only $2 million of the $8 million sought to enforce fair housing was granted.

In a separate bill, money for foreign aid was slashed to the lowest level—by far—in the program's 22-year history.

A compromise bill intended to set standards for television sets to protect viewers from radiation emissions was enacted. But dropped from the measure was any protection for workers who manufacture the sets and face the greatest potential danger.

The resurgent strength of the conservative coalition was demonstrated on the opening day of the 90th Congress.

A motion to continue the rules of the 89th Congress was beaten, 224-196. Then 76 Democrats joined with 156 Republicans to abolish the 21-day rule adopted two years earlier, which had curbed the power of the Rules Committee to block legislation indefinitely. Voting against the conservative majority were 159 Democrats and 26 Republicans.

The loss of liberal congressmen in the 1966 elections meant only a "half-loaf" social security benefit increase, sharply pared down from the amount proposed by Pres. Johnson.

Not only were benefit increases inadequate, particularly at the lower levels, but harsh restrictions were put on welfare programs for dependent children and mothers.

On labor issues, committee-approved bills to permit picketing at construction sites used by more than one contractor and to bring farm workers under coverage of the National Labor Relations Act never reached the House floor.

In this conservative-oriented Congress, the votes weren't there to pass the legislation.

Also pigeonholed—because of employer complaints that it would be too costly—was Pres. Johnson's proposal for federal on-the-job safety and health standards and inspection.

An AFL-CIO News survey found that only a handful of states had any meaningful safety programs.

But the U.S. Chamber of Commerce launched a wild-swinging campaign charging that the government wanted to send in "bureaucrats" and unqualified people plucked off welfare rolls to tell employers how to run their businesses.

The first session of the 90th Congress restored the 7 percent investment tax credit and ended up giving corporations a much bigger tax windfall than they had before.

But it took no action, until the second session, on Pres. Johnson's request for an emergency tax increase to help meet the cost of the Viet Nam war.

And when it did, Congress exacted a stiff price. It insisted on a meat-ax $6 billion cut in the President's budget—virtually all of it out of the small portion of the total budget earmarked for domestic programs.

The Senate's slim liberal majority was again subject to the veto power of Republican Leader Dirksen.

Dirksen demonstrated his willingness to use the Senate's rule of unlimited debate to block action when he led the filibuster in the 89th Congress against repeal of Taft-Hartley's "right-to-work" Section 14(b).

At the start of the 90th Congress, he first dropped hints that he would be willing to go along with a compromise anti-filibuster rule. But when the showdown came, he voted against halting a filibuster against any change in the rule.

In a surprise turnabout, he helped break a filibuster against the fair housing bill, carrying enough Republicans with him to make up the two-thirds majority needed to limit debate.

On the Fortas nomination, he took the opposite course. He had started off with high praise for Fortas and disassociated himself from the partisan effort of Sen. Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich.) to block confirmation.

But in the moment of decision, Dirksen voted against ending the filibuster which had prevented the nomination from even coming to the Senate floor.

And the mere threat of an end-of-the-session filibuster killed the television debate bill opposed by the Republicans and kept the Senate from ratifying the nuclear nonproliferation treaty, despite an urgent appeal by Johnson.

On the plus side, Congress did finally pass a bill incorporating most of Pres. Johnson's crime control legislation, including federal grants to help improve local police forces.

Congress initially passed a weak, extremely limited gun control law. But after the assassination of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King, it added important strengthening amendments — although stopping short of the President's request for registration and licensing of firearms.

Sent to the White House just before adjournment was a bill to create an independent Federal Maritime Administration, not tied to either the Commerce Dept., where it now is or to the Transportation Dept.

It was described as "mediation to finality" but labor called it by its name of "compulsory arbitration" when Congress barred rail shopcraft workers from striking and set up a special board to set new wage rates.

A labor-backed bipartisan proposal to create emergency public service jobs narrowly lost in the Senate in the 1967 session.

While authorizing the start of a bold new housing program, Congress was parsimonious in voting money to carry on the massive model cities program launched in the 89th Congress. The result is that timetables for rehabilitating entire city neighborhoods have been drastically set back.

There was progress in conservation legislation, continuation after bitter fights of major school and college aid programs, pay raises for government workers and advances in health services.

But a Treasury Dept. regulation which would have ended the tax exemption on job-stealing industrial bonds was in effect reversed.

The conservative forces weren't strong enough this Congress to pass the blatant anti-labor legislation drafted by the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

But the two business organizations say they have laid the groundwork for action in the 91st Congress—if the voters cooperate on Nov. 5.

COMMUNIST DICTATORS seized Latvia in 1940 "but they never will be able to crush the love of liberty of a brave people," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in accepting the American Latvian Association's "Medal of Merit" for services to freedom. With Meany, from left, ALA Sec.-Gen. Bruno Albats; Sigurds Rudzitis, ALA's director in the U.S. and Dr. Peter P. Lejens, president of the Latvian Free World Federation.

Too Many Pigeonholes

Rhode Island Unions Vote Endorsement

Providence, R. I.—The nation requires the leadership of a man "who has spent 23 years fighting for" social progress, the Rhode Island AFL-CIO convention stressed here in endorsing Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey for President.

Some 500 delegates to the federation's 10th anniversary convention also endorsed state and congressional candidates after hearing 14 office-seekers in both parties "plead their cases" in speeches of 10 minutes or less.

Endorsements went to Democrat Frank Licht for governor; the state's two incumbent congresssmen, Fernand J. St. Germain and Robert O. Tiernan, and the Democratic slate for state offices.

Sen. Harrison A. Williams. Jr. (D-N.J.) told the delegates that unions "never had a better friend than Hubert Humphrey" and he can be elected if workers "will get out the vote for him."

Williams described Richard Nixon as "the pied piper of pessimism" and scored George Wallace as "that noisy relic of a shadowy era in American politics."

Civil Rights Action

The covention adopted a resoluiton calling on all federation affiliates "to continue to take action to eliminate any vestiges of segregation of membership on the basis of race or color." It called for full cooperation with all civil rights organizations.

Also approved was a resolution pledging state unions to continued support "on an ever-greater scale" for programs that "attack the shame of hunger and poverty in America."

Other resolutions urged an increase in the federal income tax exemption from $600 to $1,200, improved benefits under the state's workmen's compensation law, a strengthened U.S. maritime policy, better health care and expanded medicare and expanded educational programs.

One resolution called for the inclusion of farm workers under the nation's labor laws. Another pledged full support of United Farm Workers Organizing Committee's boycott of California grapes. Delegates contributed more than $1,000 to help the farm workers' cause.

State AFL-CIO Pres. Thomas F. Policastro and Sec.-Treas. Edwin C. Brown were re-elected without opposition. Named to the executive board were Thomas J. DeAngelis, John F. Beirne, Mary Kamer, James Delmonico and Geral Sherlock.

Injunction Extended In Longshore Strike

New York—A temporary order restraining a strike of 75,000 East and Gulf Coast Longshoremen was extended to a full 80 days under the Taft-Hartley Act by a U.S. District Court judge here.

Judge Sylvester A. Ryan granted a U.S. Justice Dept. petition to restrain strike action until Dec. 20. ILA members struck Oct. 1 and 2 after their contract expired but returned under a temporary court order. The union said it may appeal Judge Ryan's latest ruling.

Fire Fighters Appeal to Halt Harassment

W. H. McClennan, newly-elected president of the Fire Fighters, met with reporters in the nation's capital to plead for cooperation in alerting the country to the problem of civilian harassment while fighting fires.

He said that in 1967, reports from 11 cities show that "82.5 percent of the firemen had received injuries, to some extent, while on duty." The cities are Buffalo, Louisville, New York, Cincinnati, Detroit, Grand Rapids, Hartford, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Newark and Rochester.

These cities have 72,336 fire fighters, 55 percent of the total membership of the IAFF. Of these, 59,724 sustained some injuries during the year. McClennan noted that "this is an all-time high."

The harassment takes many forms. Some occur during civil disturbances while fighting fires. There has been a heavy increase in false alarms and the station houses have been looted while the firemen are out.

Many communities have been burdened with the added expense of providing a "bubble" covering on engines to protect firemen going to and from fires.

McClennan said that harassments come from both white and Negro youth, and is directed at both white and Negro firemen.

What fire fighters want, he said, is to receive police protection, not to carry firearms. "Firemen want to fight fires, not use guns," McClennan declared.

The union, which represents 135,000 of the 160,000 professional fire fighters in the country, has set up a committee for the study of the harassment of fire fighters under the chairmanship of James P. Neelon of Cleveland.

Humphrey Campaign Hits Full Stride

Sharpens Attack on Nixon in Bid To Smoke Out GOP on Issues

record and fears that "the American people will find out where he stands."

"Richard the Lionhearted is Richard the Chickenhearted." Humphrey declared.

"Mr. Nixon is afraid that I will ask him, if he and his party still think that medicare won't work, because that is what I am going to ask him. I am tipping him off. He is afraid I will ask him if he still thinks it is a harmful socialist scheme, because that is what they said.

"Or maybe he is afraid I will ask him why he cast the tie-breaking vote that killed federal aid to education when he was vice president.

"I think he is afraid I will ask him if he still thinks the Peace Corps is a haven for draft dodgers.

"He is possibly afraid I will ask him why he writes special letters—little secret communications — to Wall Street brokers telling them that the Securities & Exchange Commission is being unfair to them, apparently forgetting that the purpose of the commission is to be fair to the investors.

"Maybe he is afraid that I'll ask the 'real' Richard Nixon to stand up. I'm not worried about the 'new' one or the 'old' one; it is the 'real' one you need to be thinking about."

Then, playing on the Republican slogan, "Nixon's the one," Humphrey asked:

"Is he the one that says he's for a treaty to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons, to prevent Mr. Nasser and Mr. Castro from getting their itchy, erratic fingers on the nuclear trigger?

"Or is he the one who says he's for delaying the ratification of that treaty?

"Is he the one who favors integration in the North or the one who is sort of against it when he tours in the South with his new-found ally, Strom Thurmond?

"Yes, Nixon's the one, all right. He is afraid and I don't blame him, because the record is there. I intend to smoke him out, and I intend to keep at it until he comes out."

Earlier, Humphrey had announced that he was reserving an hour of prime television time on CBS, Sunday night, Oct. 20, for a three-way debate involving third-party candidate George C. Wallace as well as himself and Nixon. And he called on his opponents to agree to the debate, offering to pay the entire cost if they were unwilling to share it. Wallace accepted the proposal at midweek on the condition that Nixon do likewise, but so far there has been no reply from Nixon.

The Vice President's warmest reception on the current campaign tour came at the COPE meeting, where more than 1,000 St. Louis union leaders jammed Carpenters Hall to welcome him.

Trade unionists made up a large part of the gathering of more than 10,000 at the $10-a-plate dinner in Evansville. Communications workers waved Humphrey signs among the crowd of 8,000 that filled a busy intersection for the downtown Kansas City rally. And at the St. Louis airport, when the Vice President's plane arrived, the welcoming throng included machinists and steelworkers, retail clerks and service employes, all identified by union signs calling for Humphrey's election.

Humphrey told the COPE audience that he had learned Nixon plans to reserve four hours of television time on the Saturday night before the election for his final TV "blitz."

That, the Vice President noted, would be more TV time than the Humphrey forces have been able to purchase in the entire campaign.

"Let him have 10 hours," Humphrey declared. "I'd like to give him 24; maybe he'd finally say something."

Again he called on Nixon to come from behind the "bush" and debate. The American voters, he said, "have a right to hear us speak—to cross-examine each other" on the issues.

"If you have a candidate who can't talk to you when he wants to be President, he'll have nothing to say to you when he is President," Humphrey declared.

The Vice President warned the COPE delegates that "this is not just my fight—it's yours," and he cited a suggestion from an adviser to Nixon that the country could use a little more unemployment as a means of combatting inflation.

"Whose job is he talking about?" Humphrey asked.

He said there would be no question about the outcome of the election if only two parties were involved. But he noted there is a third-party candidate—Wallace—who is "boring in."

And he pointed to a COPE pamphlet to emphasize its title: "Don't Let George Do to the United States What George Did to Alabama."

"And when they tried to unionize to do something about those wages, former Gov. Wallace used to call out the state trooper to take care of the organizers."

The Vice President derided Wallace's choice of Gen. Curtis LeMay as his running mate, calling the third-party slate "The Bombsey Twins."

As for Wallace's attempts to "scare" people about "law and order," Humphrey ridiculed the example the former governor had set while he was in office.

"Mr. Wallace decided which courts suited him—and he disobeyed the rest.

"He decided which judges he liked—and he vilified the rest.

"He decided which laws he preferred—and he violated the ones he didn't like."

Humphrey emphasized that he alone among the major candidates has had actual experience in improving law enforcement. As mayor of Minneapolis, he recalled, he strengthened and professionalized a weak police force and wiped out corruption that had been rampant until he took office.

The Vice President spoke bluntly about the support Wallace is reportedly drawing from a small segment of rank-and-file union members and attributed it to baseless racial fears.

"They're saying this fellow Humphrey doesn't care about the blue collar worker who is white. Well, I've been a blue collar worker and I'm white, and I care about workers, black or white. Wallace doesn't, and that's the difference.

"What I want is an economy that will give everyone a job—black or white. . . . I want a bigger pie to split up, not a smaller one to share among more people."

"Every man that is without a job is a drain on the man with a job. And every time a new man comes on the job, it benefits the man who is already there—he moves up."

Humphrey said he has been told the polls show that he loses votes whenever he speaks in such terms, but he added:

"I think it's my job to create public opinion, not to follow it."

He noted that Nixon has accused him of preparing to increase the anti-poverty program and invest billions in cities, education and health.

"Mr. Nixon says I would take risks for peace," he added. "I would do all these things. I would do these things because this country needs help—and many of its people need help.

"I would do these things because I think time is running out now on the arms race. If we do not act, the time is near when 15 or 20 countries will have their own tidy little stockpiles of nuclear explosives.

"And if we do not act I think this country we love could be rocked with human explosion that could change the whole nature of our society and our free institutions."

The Vice President repeatedly focused on the need "to heal the hatreds and divisions among us. . . . to reaffirm the basic decency of spirit which lies within us as a people." And he declared:

"We can build into reality the free and open society we all came to find.

"That is the choice before us: who can you trust to lead America forward. It is a choice among men, a choice among parties, a choice about our basic direction as a people."

Nixon, Wallace Pose Risk to Future—Meany halt to the search for solutions to our present problems."

Noting the progress of the past eight years and the country's present problems, Meany spoke of the deep concern about crime, the uneasiness about race relationships and the discontent about the war in Viet Nam.

These problems "cannot be solved by sheer force of arms—unless America is ready to become a police state at home and the instrument of world destruction abroad. They can be solved only by correcting their causes; by creating a better society in America and in the world."

The American people of all races and in all neighborhoods must be protected against riots, arson, assault and murder—"just as the South Vietnamese people must be protected against those who would take away their freedom."

Police Role

There is a need for well-trained, well-paid, sensibly directed police under state and local control, Meany stressed, but "we do not need—and we do not want — a federal gestapo."

There is a need for "firmness and fortitude" in the defense of freedom in South Viet Nam, but "we do not need—and we do not want—a policy that calls for so-called 'victory' regardless of the cost to humanity."

The AFL-CIO president noted that "there are no simple answers," and this is not and never again will be "a simple world." We need "reasonable answers," he added, and those can be found in the programs of Hubert Humphrey and Edmund Muskie.

Of Nixon's eight-year record as Vice President, Meany cited his comments that medicare "makes no good sense at all," his tie-breaking vote on passage of the Landrum-Griffin Act, his votes against social welfare, teachers, the minimum wage.

Nixon has given Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.) "veto power over the policies of his party," Meany charged, singling out Thurmond's bills designed to weaken and destroy unions. Nixon lists among his economic advisers "men with bitter anti-union records," Meany added.

Big Difference

To those who say there is no choice, Meany said, the difference is between proven friendship and proven hostility. The "difference couldn't be greater. The choice couldn't be clearer," in deciding for the Humphrey-Muskie ticket.

Humphrey's election would be a continuation of the progress of the past eight years, a broadening of the goals set by Kennedy and Johnson, "a constant raising of our sights toward a better world for our children and our grandchildren."

Union Friendly to GOP Brands Nixon Anti-Labor

The executive board of the Glass Bottle Blowers—a union with strong Republican ties—has unanimously endorsed Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey for president.

The board, meeting in Washington, studied Humphrey's long record in public service and found "he has been 100 percent in support of programs to benefit workers and the nation generally."

By contrast, it said, Nixon "has consistently opposed every objective the trade union movement has fought for to gain a better life for those who work." His election, the board concluded, "would be disastrous."

In reporting the board's action, the union noted that GBBA Pres. Lee W. Minton is a life-long Republican who had a leading role in New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller's campaign for the GOP presidential nomination.

It pointed out also that there are other Republicans on the board and that the 122-year-old union "prides itself on independence—particularly political independence."

Spiro Agnew Blues Latest Campaign Hit

GOP vice presidential candidate Spiro T. Agnew has made the hit parade, campaign version, with his malaprop, low-road campaigning.

Making the rounds of rallies and meetings is "The Spiro T. Agnew Blues," a "lowdown" tune that concludes: "I sound rough and not polished enough and like I'm always blowing a fuse. Dick will say to Strom now you know how come I've got the Spiro T. Agnew blues."

The back-up tune on this hit tape is "Strom Along With Dick" retelling in rock tempo how Strom Thurmond made the Nixon nomination possible.

Optimism Buoys Campaign As Humphrey Narrows Gap

Meany Ties Wallace to Police State

Law and order cannot be chieved "by stripping away the onstitutional rights of all Ameri-ans in the name of police ower," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany warned.

The creation of a police state —a solution sought by George Wallace — would be a direct hreat to the trade union move-ent, Meany said in a nationwide adio broadcast over NBC.

In the third of a series of talks n the issues in the 1968 election, Meany asserted that "tyranny is not elective," that the first target of very police state, every dictatorship the trade union movement.

Wallace, he noted, talks in erms of "a police state that would be directed against Negroes and other minorities; against yippies and hippies; against all who annoy or alarm Wallaceites." Union members, he said, know better and will not vote on the basis of fear that Wal-ace is projecting.

Neither Wallace nor Richard ixon share the labor movement's ith in America, the AFL-CIO resident said. Nixon's "say noth-g" campaign points up this lack f faith along with his voting rec-rd against medicare, aid to educa-on, minimum wage and labor gislation.

Meany expressed his confidence at union members will vote "in upport of a free and progressive merica . . . for the only candidate at not only shares but personifies

Key States Responding To Drive

By Albert J. Zack

En Route with Humphrey—"We're on our way." That was the unanimous sentiment in the Humphrey camp as the candidate slammed hard toward the finish line.

Hubert Humphrey was hoarse but suddenly happy and his supporters were uniformly optimistic for the press corps was now calling the election "a horse race."

With less than two weeks to go, Humphrey saw these encouraging signs:

- The polls suddenly and sharply shifted. No longer were they calling Nixon a cinch winner. Big gains for Humphrey were being reported in key states.
- The crowds were bigger, the hecklers quieter, the pro-Humphrey shouts louder, and enthusiastic.
- Democratic Party splits, widely reported in early days of the campaign, were being publicly healed. In Texas, for example, Gov. Connally and Sen. Yarborough stood side-by-side, hailing Humphrey, pledging support, and denying they ever even had a family quarrel.
- The Democratic youth groups, many of them former supporters of Senators Kennedy, McCarthy and McGovern, were flocking to the Humphrey camp, forming ad hoc local committees, outcheering the Wallace and Nixon hecklers and lending a youthful spark to the campaign.

It was obvious that Humphrey's united support from labor was playing a major role in the new spirit. Labor was everywhere—billboards in New York City, hand lettered

GE Found Guilty:

Coordinated Talks Win Board Approval

By Eugene A. Kelly

The National Labor Relations Board ruled that a union may put representatives of other labor organizations on its contract negotiating committee as long as it bargains in good faith with an employer for its own members only.

In a landmark case involving the General Electric Co. and 11 AFL-CIO unions, the board voted that under the circumstances a company cannot exercise veto power over a union's selection of its bargaining committee. It added that "the same right to determine the composition of its own bargaining committee exists for employers as well."

A board majority decided that GE unlawfully refused to bargain with the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers when it walked out of a meeting with IUE and its "coordinated" bargaining committee May 4, 1966, and continued refusing to meet until ordered to do so three months later by a U.S. District Court.

IUE Pres. Paul Jennings said the board decision "strengthens our conviction that coordinated bargaining is not only lawful" but is the "effective and responsible way" to secure needed benefits for union members. Bargaining with GE and Westinghouse in 1969 will again be coordinated by the 11 unions, he said.

The NLRB majority said "we find that by walking out of the scheduled May 4 meeting because of the presence of 'outsiders' on the union's negotiating committee, respondent (GE) violated" the National Labor Relations Act; that this violation continued until Aug. 23, 1966, and was repeated briefly on Sept. 20 and 21 of that year when the corporation "while continuing to bargain, refused to re-

Muskie Cites 'Real Issues' Facing Voter

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie is counting on "the common sense and decency of the American people" to elect Hubert H. Humphrey President of the United States.

Muskie, the Democratic vice presidential candidate, voiced his calm, unshakeable confidence in America in a network radio broadcast sponsored by the Ladies' Garment Workers.

He described the presidential election as a contest "between those who would bring out the best in the American people and those who would exploit their differences."

Election Seen Pivoting On Mid-Atlantic Area

By David L. Perlman

The six mid-Atlantic states, where more than one-fifth of the nation ves, works and votes, have emerged as the principal battleground of e election campaign.

Democratic hopes for winning the presidency rest on the region's 12 electoral votes—especially the 43 of New York and the 29 of ennsylvania.

It would be hard to put together ven an electoral college plurality ithout the bulk of the region's otes.

And the Republican goal of capturing control of the House of Representatives will almost certainly fall short without a solid majority of the region's 97 congressional seats.

Democrats now hold 58 House ats to 39 for the GOP in the re-on which includes New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware, as well as New York and Pennsylvania. The District of Columbia, which voted in a presidential election for the first time in 1964, has three electoral votes but no voice in congressional elections.

In the area's three Senate races, Democratic incumbents Joseph S. Clark of Pennsylvania and Daniel B. Brewster of Maryland face strong Republican challenges. New York Republican Sen. Jacob K.

Labor's Foes Launch Move to Wreck NLRB

Big business foes of the labor act have launched a "highly organized" smear campaign to smash the National Labor Relations Board and weaken the right of workers to protection against predatory employers, the chairman of the House Special Subcommittee on Labor has warned.

In a statement published in the Congressional Record, Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr., (D-N.J.) charged that promoters of the massive public relations campaign to weaken the law rely on "distortions, half-truths and hyperbole" to mislead and incite the public and help clear the way for an "unprecedented frontal assault" on the NLRB in the next Congress.

Thompson also called attention to a statement by Republican presidential candidate Richard M. Nixon promising, if elected, to appoint a watchdog committee to give him "the facts" on the actions of the NLRB.

Nixon's views on what he called "corrective action" against the labor board were printed in the June issue of the American Craftsman, journal of the Intl. Society of Skilled Trades, an or-

Organizing Stressed:

Cement Workers Back Humphrey

Miami Beach—Delegates to the Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers convention here voted an enthusiastic endorsement of the Humphrie-Muskie presidential ticket and approved a program to strengthen the union in organizing, at the bargaining table—and on the picket line.

Pres. Felix C. Jones reported membership growth through organizing in the two years since the last convention and record gains in negotiations.

"In no other like period in our history," Jones told the degelates, "have the fruits of collective bargaining been so sizable and meaningful. These achievements reflect competency, preparedness and determination throughout our union."

He predicted continued progress, but warned that new gains "will not be won easily."

The convention voted a 50-cent increase in per capita payments, increased the union's minimum monthly dues from $5 to $6, and voted to increase the amount of strike benefits available to members.

The convention turned down resolutions which would have imposed compulsory retirement of all officers and staff members at age 65 and re-elected Jones, Sec.-Treas. Reuben Roe and all incumbent vice presidents. In the only election contest, August Clavier, Jr., of Alpena, Mich., defeated Frank Wiesler of St. Louis, Mo., for 8th vice president.

Delegates voted a two-step salary increase for officers—5 percent effective No. 1 and another 5 percent a year later. They chose San Diego, Calif., as the 1970 convention site.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told the 260 delegates that labor's enemies are hoping to take over the legislative halls to weaken the trade union movement.

He urged them to vote as trade unionists, declaring "we can move forward or we can go backward" on Election Day. "Unless you choose wisely," he cautioned, labor will enter another "regressive period."

Rep. Claude Pepper (D-Fla.) told the convention that the election represented a choice between a government "that will try to help you" or a government "that will put a fist in your face."

Problems facing the labor movement aren't greatly different across the Canadian border, Pres. Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Labor Congress told the convention.

Both nations he said, face common problems of unemployment and underemployment, poverty and government interference in collective bargaining.

Other convention speakers included COPE Deputy Dir. Joseph Rourke, Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept., Executive Sec. Howard Chester of the Stone, Glass & Clay Coordinating Committee, Sec.-Gen. J. Refugio Avelar of Mexico's Cement Workers Union and others.

The convention strongly endorsed the California grape boycott.

Marie Downey Dies; Editor, IBEW Official

Marie V. Downey, 52, director of publications for the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers since 1955, died in a Washington, D.C., hospital following a short illness.

Miss Downey, also managing editor of the Electrical Workers Journal, served in her capacities as a special assistant to IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman, who recently retired, and his successor, Pres. Charles H. Pillard.

Under her direction, the Journal won numerous awards in the annual contests held by the Intl. Labor Press Association. She was a former vice president in the organization.

Kenneth Feister, ILPA secretary-treasurer, described Miss Downey as "one of the warmest, most compassionate persons I have ever known. She had deep insight into the role of labor journalism. Her understanding and guidance will be sorely missed."

Born in Chesapeake City, Md. and a lifelong resident of Alexandria, Va., Miss Downey was a graduate of St. Mary's Academy there and received a bachelor of arts degree from Trinity College.

Active in civic affairs and charity efforts, she headed the Girls Service Organization of U.S.O. during World War II and was chairman of the Volunteer Nurses Aides of the Alexandria Hospital.

In 1964 she was one of 12 women appointed by former Sec. of Defense Robert McNamara to the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services.

She held membership in the Office & Professional Employes and the Newspaper Guild. She is survived by her mother, Mrs. Julia Downey.

Bewildered by Election, Firm Says It's Bewitched

San Juan, Puerto Rico—Add "witchraft" to the reasons an employer can think up for objecting to an election won by a union.

The regional director for the National Labor Relations Board found the charge so unusual that he made public a "white paper" on witchcraft filed here by General Cigars de Utardo along with objections to a representation election won by the Machinists in the mountain village of Hato Rey.

The cigar firm wants the election set aside. It asks the NLRB to hold hearings into mysterious goings-on.

For example, the company charged that a female employe who was an IAM leader came to work one morning with a bottle containing a "magic potion which would cast a spell on the employes." The potion, she reportedly said, had been prepared by a remarkable "espiritista" or sorcerer with magical powers. Smelling it or rubbing a bit on the forehead and neck would have the effect of "nullifying the will of the employes" to vote in any other way than for the IAM, the employer charged.

The company cited other unusual happenings: "exactly the minute that the election began, a heavy rain started to fall and the skies turned black"; "some employes felt terribly ill while in the process of voting, but the illness disappeared after they voted"; others reported that "a short time after they left the voting area they just didn't know which way they had voted."

Summing up, the company said the "laboratory conditions" required by the NLRB for a valid election were "completely destroyed" by these occult shenanigans. Attached to its list of objections was a 13-page report on the history and practice of witchcraft in Latin lands.

The Machinists' members greeted a reading of the charges "with great hilarity and derision." They told the NLRB they won fair and square.

Not once, said IAM Rep. Juan Maldonado, did he ride a broom from San Juan to Hato Rey. He always drove a Ford, he claimed.

UFWA Board Gives Support To Humphrey

New York—The Furniture Workers executive board voted formally to endorse the Humphrey-Muskie team and encourage members to vote for them Nov. 5.

Board members took unanimous action in a vote proposed by UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer. "There is no doubt," Pizer said, "that the outcome of this election will affect the bread-and-butter economic conditions of all our members."

The union has started an all-out campaign for the Democratic candidates with Sec.-Treas. Fred Fulford named to coordinate an educational campaign stressing the issues.

Rallies are being held in union areas. A special issue of the Furniture Workers was devoted primarily to the election. Thousands of leaflets warning workers of the danger of heeding Wallace and Nixon are being distributed at factory gates.

Board Backs Coordinated Bargaining

cognize or deal with the non-IUE representatives."

NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown signed the order upholding recommendations made June 8, 1967, by Trial Examiner David London.

Member Sam Zagoria agreed that GE refused to bargain as of Aug. 18, 1966, but not on the earlier date when it walked out of a preliminary meeting. Member Howard Jenkins, Jr., dissented completely from the majority decision. He favored dismissing the charge of refusal to bargain.

The majority decision related that a group of unions that bargain with GE decided, in the winter of 1965-66, to bargain jointly with the corporation but abandoned the plan when GE objected. The unions then prepared to coordinate their bargaining through an AFL-CIO committee, and put the plan into effect when IUE and GE held a first meeting May 4.

GE refused to proceed until Aug. 23, 1966, when it decided to comply with a District Court ruling. Contract talks continued "under protest" by GE as IUE filed charges with the NLRB that GE was unlawfully refusing to bargain. The talks produced a contract later that year covering 80,000 IUE members but other unions in the coordinated group felt compelled to strike to win changes in GE's offer.

The majority decision cited two rulings by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Cincinnati, O., upholding the right of unions to have "outside" union officials on their negotiating committees.

With Smear Campaign:

Union Foes Unleash Drive to Ruin NLRB

ganization not listed as a union in the 1967 union directory of the U.S. Labor Dept.

"When regulatory commissions and operating agencies ignore congressional intent," Nixon wrote, "they assume legislative rather than administrative functions, thus denying the will of the American people."

Nixon said that "it is the duty of the President to prevent or correct this situation." He wrote that, while the courts have "vitally important appellate powers with which we must not interfere," zealous bureaucrats "must not be permitted to use the power of the administrative agencies to subvert the intent of Congress."

The Nixon letter escaped public notice until Thompson called attention to it in his statement to the House.

The congressman cited "other indications of where Mr. Nixon stands" — his selection of J. P. Stevens, textile tycoon who has battled unions for years, as an "economic adviser;" his relations with far-right Sen. Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.), and his inaccurate condemnation of the California grape boycott by the AFL-CIO farm workers' union as "illegal."

Against the background of the "massive public relations program" now under way, Thompson said, Nixon's "guarded promise" to ride herd on the NLRB "can be understood quite clearly."

The New Jersey congressman said the responsibility of his Special Subcommittee on Labor has a "continuing concern" with the policies and administration of the labor act. The statute, he said, has "made incalculable contributions to labor harmony and economic progress in the United States."

He charged that attacks on the law "in a torrent of speeches, articles and editorials" are clearly designed "to discredit the labor law" and to cast "ugly aspersions" on its administration. He pinpointed the principals in this "destructive drama" as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, the Reader's Digest, the Wall Street Journal, and publications of other business organizations.

Thomspon concluded that these attacks "do not reveal flaws in the law or its administration," but instead "expose the existence of a highly organized, subtly conceived and purposefully executed public relations campaign to mislead and to incite the public."

Any doubt of the purpose of the campaign was laid to rest, Thompson asserted, in a speech by Peter J. Pestillo, labor relations manager of the Chamber, who said Sept. 12 that the 1968 election has "particular significance for labor law reform" for employers have much at stake "and the time to start protecting that stake is now."

How is this to be accomplished? "The public is the key," Pestillo said. The same point was made last January, according to Thompson's statement, when NAM Vice Pres. William K. Zinke told an audience:

"Before we can take action to introduce legislation seeking major labor law reform, it is necessary to create the kind of favorable public climate which resulted in the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin acts."

Pestillo explained what he had in mind:

- Eliminate the NLRB and replace it with a national labor court, or transfer its unfair labor practice cases—about 17,000 every year, and still rising—to U.S. district courts. The effect of this proposal, Thompson said, would be to "cripple and delay" the administration of the labor act.
- Reverse dozens of major Supreme Court and appeals court decisions enforcing NLRB rulings. This, Thompson charged, would "deprive employes of a whole range of rights and protections" given them by Congress since 1933.
- Limit NLRB remedies fashioned to prevent employers from violating the law. Thompson said this would "assure the weakness of the law and place a premium on violations."
- Reverse NRLB decisions on appropriate bargaining units and thus, Thompson said, "erect steep hurdles over which employes would have to jump" to exercise their "precious right to engage in collective bargaining."
- Reserve a series of Supreme Court decisions encouraging private labor arbitration and prevent the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia from hearing any labor appeals from outside the District.

"These are merely a few of the drastic proposals which labor law 'reformers' have in mind," said Thompson. "All of them, I believe, are contrary to the public interest. All of them . . . are likely to create unprecedented labor strife in our country."

None of the proposals are new but have been considered by Congress and rejected over the years. They are, according to Thompson, "part of a fat package of anti-worker proposals which a 'blue ribbon' committee of the C of C and the NAM have been working on since 1965 in the hope that there will be a change in the Administration and Congress next year."

The subcommittee chairman said he does not question the right of any group to propose legislative changes or to spend "large amounts of their tax-exempt assets" to try to persuade the public to support their views.

What he does object to is arguments based on "distortions, half-truths and hyperbole" calculated to mislead the public and Congress and "designed to deprive American workers of basic rights, to weaken the institution of collective bargaining, to jeopardize stable labor relationships and to threaten the health and orderly progress of our economy."

No one can mistake the purpose of the Chamber-NAM proposals, Thompson declared—"to strip the American worker of protection which Congress has painstakingly enacted over a period of 35 years."

Meany to Air Last Of Election Series

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's final five-minute broadcast on Nov. 1 on the issues in the 1968 election will be rebroadcast over NBC's Monitor program Nov. 2 at 9:50 a.m. (EST).

The series, directed to AFL-CIO members and their families over the NBC network, have been rebroadcast in various parts of the country by individual AFL-CIO unions.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph will be heard in 30 cities on local stations Nov. 1 and 2 on "Black America's Stake in the Election."

Louis Stulberg Takes Post on UN Delegation

New York—Sec. of State Dean Rusk installed Louis Stulberg, president of the Ladies' Garment Workers, as a member of the U.S. delegation to the 23rd General Assembly of the United Nations at ceremonies in the U.S. mission headquarters here.

Pres. Johnson named Stulberg to the delegation, on which three other labor leaders had served previously. They are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers and George M. Harrison, AFL-CIO vice president and former head of the Railway Clerks.

Stulberg took the oath of office along with the new U.S. ambassador to the UN, J. Russell Wiggins, and three other appointees. They are Mrs. Harvey Picker and Senators John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky and Stuart Symington of Missouri.

Wiggins succeeded George W. Ball, who resigned to join Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey as foreign affairs adviser.

In accepting Pres. Johnson's appointment, Stulberg said it "is actually an honor accorded to our union and our members. It is in recognition for the role they have played through the years with their active interest in the cause of international peace and order."

Upholsterers Agree On Hillenbrand Pact

Batesville, Ind.—A spunky local of the Upholsterers took everything the locally-powerful Hillenbrand Industries could fire at it for 18 weeks of a tough strike and finally won through to a better contract.

The strike and a nationwide boycott won with the help of a labor movement rallied by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, came to an end when members of UIU Local 525 voted overwhelmingly to accept a new, improved company offer. The settlement achieved most of the goals sought by the 500 strikers since they began picketing June 2.

Descendants of John Hillenbrand, who founded this town in the hills of southeast Indiana more than a century ago, run the Batesville Casket Co. and the Hill-Rom Hospital Equipment Co., where Local 525 was on strike. They also run the town's only newspaper, only hotel, only bank and only hospital.

The union won general wage increases of 50 cents an hour over a three-year period and a raise in the minimum hiring rate from $1.35 an hour to $2.

Other provisions include full reinstatement of all strikers, improvements in pension and insurance benefits, shortening of the automatic wage progression rate from one year to six months, an additional paid holiday, and better funeral leave, jury duty and vacation pay.

The company agreed to put production standards in writing for affected employes and to install a job bidding procedure based on seniority.

The settlement provides that all strikers will get the vacation pay due them under the old contract. The cases of six employes fired shortly before the strike began, and 30 fired during the strike, will be submitted to binding arbitration. All court charges will be withdrawn.

UIU Pres. Sal B. Hoffmann led the negotiations until he became ill and underwent major surgery. A special committee then aided local union negotiators in working out final settlement.

State AFL-CIO Urges Georgia Wage Floor

Savannah, Ga.—The largest convention in the history of the Georgia State AFL-CIO—more than 500 delegates—elected new officers and adopted a legislative program headed by a call for a state $1.25 minimum wage.

Georgia presently does not have any state wage-hour law.

Jim Moore, who has been secretary of the state central body, was elected president, succeeding the late W. H. Montague, Sr. Moore, a member of the Painters, defeated R. J. Butler of the Elevator Constructors, 444-157.

M. J. Counihan was re-elected executive vice president and Louise Dean was re-elected treasurer. Counihan had been serving as president since Montague's death.

Delegates elected J. W. Giles of the State, County & Municipal Employes secretary of the state federation in a contest with John Wright of the Communications Workers.

Moore, in accepting the presidency, told the delegates that a key objective of his administration will be to accelerate the voter registration program.

The convention called on the Georgia legislature to pass a collective bargaining law for public employes and to exempt the elderly from state personal property tax.

Convention speakers included Assistant Sec. of Labor Thomas R. Donahue.

Labor Education Role Cited to Latin Unionists

Front Royal, Va.—Labor education can become a "powerful instrument" for strengthening free trade unions and free economies, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. James A. Suffridge told a graduating class of the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

He spoke at AIFLD's training center here to 26 representatives of unions in Caribbean countries and Brazil who received certificates as graduates of a two-month advanced teacher education course.

The class, the 23rd to take the course, studied teaching methods, communications and planning involved in setting up labor education programs.

Suffridge, who is a member of AIFLD's board of trustees, expressed confidence that the knowledge gained by the students "will be invaluable to you when you return home to put what you have learned into practice."

The most important objective of a union education program "is the training of competent union leaders," Suffridge said. A second purpose, he added, is give workers an understanding of the labor movebent.

But beyond those objectives and others, he emphasized, trade union education "is a practical and powerful instrument designed to assist in bringing about the immediate and long range objectives of free labor."

Used "wisely and responsibly," Suffridge said, trade union education can become a means of supporting and preserving democracy, as well as helping to strengthen it.

In the past decade, he continued, the expansion of such education has been "a major contributing factor to the overall growth of free labor in the Americas."

Only as this growth continues and labor in turn bolsters democracy, "can unions best serve to also guarantee economic progress, industrial development and improved living standards," Suffridge concluded.

Labor's Vital Role

AS THE 1968 ELECTION campaign heads into the final 10 days there is a growing consensus that it will be one of the closest in the 20th Century—not only for the presidency but for seats in the 91st Congress and governorships as well.

Major polling organizations, political writers and analysts, the media generally are hedging predictions. The contests are being described as "tight" or "horse races" or "too close to call."

This caution stems from no political bias or desire to influence the outcome, but from the sure knowledge that in the political year 1968 nothing is certain, nothing is cut and dried.

The result is that responsible, intelligent, liberal candidates are very much in the running despite the appeal to fear and frustration by GOP presidential candidate Richard Nixon and the racist and hate pitch of the Wallace campaign.

The result also is that in this election, as perhaps never before, every effort, every contribution, every vote will have a critical impact on the outcome.

The union member must be informed on the issues, on the records of the candidates, on how the election will affect his job and his family. In the final 10 days no effort must be spared to get to every member with the simple yet tremendously important story of why Hubert Humphrey and Edmund Muskie must be elected President and Vice President of the United States.

Every local union meeting, every piece of literature, every discussion with shops stewards and business agents can carry forward the story of Humphrey's total commitment to the needs and aspirations of the American worker; of Nixon's anti-labor voting record, his opposition to key programs for better education, health, social security, his role in the three recessions of the 1950s.

And every opportunity must be seized to spell out the dismal record of George Wallace in "right-to-work" Alabama, of the man who offers only new violence and division and hatred to a nation that has had enough of all three.

IN THE "HORSE RACE" election of 1968 a switch of a single vote per precinct can make the difference. A switch of even fewer votes may decide the complexion of the 91st Congress.

These then are the crucial days. One more rung doorbell, one more phone call, one more letter may make the difference between more years of progress for the American worker and the nation or more years of civil strife, of rising unemployment, of a rollback of the great advances of the past eight years.

American workers—union members—had a great role in two earlier elections. Their dedication and support made the difference in 1948 and helped elect Harry Truman. Their efforts in 1960 were of major importance in helping John F. Kennedy win the White House.

Now in 1968 the job is to roll up the votes that will spell victory for Hubert Humphrey. For American labor there is no alternative.

Union Welfare at Stake:

'68 Election Crucial for Labor In Face of Four-Way Squeeze

A FOUR WAY SQUEEZE on the labor movement makes trade union welfare one of the key issues of the 1968 elections. On the outcome of the elections hinge the growth and security of the labor movement and its members.

The four factors combining to make election of liberal candidates imperative are these:

1. Conservatives in Congress and among the major business associations in the last year have laid the groundwork for an all-out legislative assault on the labor movement in 1969 if conservatives gain control of Congress and the White House.

Backstopped by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and National Association of Manufacturers, congressional conservatives throughout 1968 were promoting proposals to:

- Dismantle the National Labor Relations Board.
- Clamp anti-trust laws on trade unions and destroy industry wide bargaining.
- Ban joint multi-union bargaining, which in recent years has proved a valuable and essential union bargaining technique.
- Cripple labor's political programs by prohibiting contributions to candidates.

Lurking behind the pack is a proposal for a nationwide open shop law, imposing so-called "right-to-work" laws on all 50 states.

2. Richard Nixon, the Republican presidential candidate, has a 20-year record of anti-unionism. His first public statement as a congressman, Jan. 3, 1947, was, "I was elected to smash the labor bosses."

As a member of the House Labor Committee, he joined in drafting the Taft-Hartley Act. In subsequent years he has stated, "I helped write Section 14(b) into law." It is 14(b) that spawns state open shop laws.

In 1959, Nixon as Vice President cast the tie-breaking Senate vote that nailed Sen. John McClellan's falsely-named "bill of rights" into the Landrum-Griffin Act.

In January of this year, Nixon called for a re-evaluation of labor law to "bring it in tune with the times." In this, there was implicit approval—indeed advocacy—of the looming series of anti labor legislation.

3. The curious alliance of Nixon and Dixiecrat-turned-Republican Sen. Strom Thurmond (S.C.) is based in part on a shared anti-unionism. Except in this area, there is an ideological gulf between them. Thurmond is a racist. Nixon is not. Thurmond has close ties with the right wing. Nixon has steered clear of the extreme right.

They appear to converge ideologically mainl on labor matters. Thurmond has introduced legis lation to ban multi-union bargaining. He has bee one of the Senate leaders for other restrictive pro posals, has long supported 14(b) and state ope shop laws, often attacks "labor bosses."

4. The Republican party platform, in its labor plank, embraces the assault on the labor movement in carefully camouflaged language. In two sections of the labor plank, the GOP comes down particularly hard:

"We will be vigilant to prevent any administra tive agency entrusted with labor law enforcemen from defying the letter and spirit of these (Taf Hartley and Landrum-Griffin) laws."

This is aimed squarely at the NLRB, in effec endorses recent efforts to hobble the board an approves future ones. It is Republicans in Congres who already have spearheaded the anti-NLR campaign.

"We strongly believe that the protection of in dividual liberty is the cornerstone of sound labo policy."

The phrase "individual liberty" is straight fro the "right-to-work" handbook. It is the cod phrase for open shop. The implication goes be yond simple traditional GOP support of 14(b). suggests sentiment for a national open shop law

The National Right to Work Committee, in i publications, lavishly praised the GOP labor plank

Muskie Warns Nation:

Hate, Fear Linked to Wallace, Nixon Exposed by Past Record

Following are excerpts from the speech of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, the labor-endorsed candidate for Vice President, before the 33rd convention of the Iron Workers.

A QUESTION ALL too rarely posed is this: What will happen if we do not respond to the plight of the poor? What will happen if we yield to the appeals of a Wallace, who says that the way to build safety and security for those who already have a stake in our society is to build a wall between them and those who do not yet have that stake.

Is that sound doctrine?

This has been the question of society after society in the whole history of mankind.

What has been the answer every time, without exception?

The answer has been—every time—that on both sides of the wall you build hatred, fear, instability. On both sides of the wall there is no safety or security for anyone. That is what happens when you build walls.

You don't have to go further back in history that the Russian Revolution to know what happens. You don't have to go further back than World War II and its prelude, and what followed, to know what happened when Hitler built walls.

The question is whether affluent America will have for the great bulk of our people a stake in the status quo; whether or not they will build walls or create additional opportunity as the answer to safety and security for all our people.

And what about the war? On the one hand we find those who are disenchanted with American policy in Viet Nam and they threaten to sit this election out. We combine them with those, many of them laboring people in urban areas, who threaten to vote for George Wallace because of the appeal I have just described.

Do you know what Wallace's record is? His state has the highest murder rate of any of the 50 states—this law and order man. He has one of the real anti-labor records of any candidate for President—this law and order man. His state is a "right-to-work" state.

Have you meant what you said to me about your opposition to "right-to-work?" My record is clear and so is George Wallace's. Which of us is your choice? I say to the laboring men and women of this country that it is time that you looked at the whole record.

Any time I was a candidate you looked at the whole record. I suggest you do the same with Mr. Wallace. He has no law and order record. He has no labor record. He has no record in the field of human rights or social rights or social justice.

I think we have to face the fact that if Mr. Nixon wins in November it will be not because a majority of Americans favor him, but because a minority of Americans have deserted the Democratic party for the likes of Wallace. Now is the time for concerned Democrats and concerned men and women of labor to make their views count.

Now is the time for you to tell the truth to your friends and neighbors about the differences between the Vice President and Mr. Nixon and Mr. Wallace.

Have you heard the Nixon slogan, "Nixon Is the One"? You may have wondered, as I did, what one?

Who cast the deciding vote against federal aid to education when he was Vice President? Yes, Nixon is the one.

Who voted against adequate rural electrification loan funds? Yes, Nixon is the one.

Who was Vice President at the time of the Dixon-Yates contract? Yes, it was Nixon.

Who voted to deny social security coverage to 750,000 workers? Yes, Nixon was the one.

Who was Vice President in the Administration that tried to kill the water pollution control program? Yes, Nixon is the one.

Who was Vice President in the Administration that vetoed the Area Redevelopment program? Nixon is the one again.

Who voted against an increase in public assistance payments to old people, the blind and the disabled? Yes, it was Nixon.

Who is afraid to debate Vice Pres. Humphrey? Yes, Nixon is the one.

Nixon was a member of Congress for six years. There isn't a single piece of legislation associated with his name during that period.

He was Vice President for eight years. You remember when the President was asked whether he could give some instance of a significant Nixon contribution to his Administration, his answer was "If you give me a week, I might think of one."

We have our choice in this election. We can be a continuing, open, expanding, growing society of increasing opportunity, or we can become as a result of this election, an increasingly closed, stagnant, selfish and divided America. It is that kind of an election.

I can't comprehend those who are inclined to stay home. I can't comprehend those who don't see this issue. All you have to do is listen to what the candidates are saying and accept them at face value.

If you people in labor who have gone through this kind of thing yourselves cannot see this; if you people in labor cannot organize and mobilize your resources and your spirits to fight on the right side of this issue from coast to coast and from one corner of this country to another, then our country is indeed in deep trouble.

Rejects Theory of Wallace Support:

Abel Sees Humphrey Victory With Massive Labor Support

THE CHAIRMAN of the National Labor Committee for Humphrey and Muskie predicted a Humphrey-Muskie victory Nov. 5, with an "overwhelming majority" of union members supporting the ticket.

I. W. Abel, president of the Steelworkers, rejected speculation of "strong labor support" for George Wallace and "inferences . . . that labor, down through the years, has voted as one." He said that some union members have voted for Republican and independent candidates in the past and "will continue to do that."

"But," he declared, "I am satisfied that when it comes to election day, the overwhelming majority of the labor people will exercise good judgment, as they always have, and not let their emotions guide them." The AFL-CIO vice president was questioned by reporters on Labor News Conference, an AFL-CIO produced public affairs interview, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., eastern time, on Mutual Radio Network.

Abel said that in view of the established positions of the various candidates on issues of "social progress," the union movement holds the 1968 race as "critical."

"Mr. Humphrey has a long career in the Senate of the United States, where he championed much social legislation," he said. Humphrey has "supported the things that labor believes in—that we feel are good for the people as a whole," he added.

IN CONTRAST, Nixon's record in Congress, as well as Vice President, "indicates that he does not agree with the labor movement on much of the social program we advocate and support . . . and has opposed quite a bit of it," the union president said.

Wallace, he said, "stands for most everything that labor is opposed to . . . and against those things that would advance society as a whole."

He said that the election of Humphrey and Muskie and a liberal, progressive Congress, is the key to meeting such pressing national needs as medicare and social security improvements, expansion of the National Labor Relations Act to include farm workers, and a "Marshall Plan approach" to slum city problems.

Reporters questioning Abel were Stanley Levey, labor correspondent for the Scripps-Howard newspapers, and Neil Gilbride, labor correspondent for the Associated Press.

By Press Associates, Inc.

THE 90TH CONGRESS neglected to do a lot of things. One of the prime neglects was its failure to enact an Occupational Health & Safety bill.

There can be no question about the need for the bill.

Each year 14,500 workers are killed and 2.2 million are injured on the job.

About 250,000 man-days of work are lost.

About $1.5 billion in wages and more than $5 billion in production are lost because of on-the-job accidents.

Some deaths come with sharp finality. Others are long-drawn out as workers suffer from poison materials and poison chemicals.

If this kind of toll of suffering to men and women and loss of production were caused by strikes, the conservative business interests of the country would cry to high heaven. Yet some 80 percent of the labor force is inadequately protected from occupational accidents and the business community keeps on insisting that the states and local communities are doing the job and the federal government should keep hands off.

The 90th Congress had a chance to correct these conditions. Pres. Johnson last January called for a comprehensive occupational health and safety bill. Such legislation was introduced—in the Senate by Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.), and in the House by Rep. James O'Hara (D-Mich.).

The Yarborough bill never got out of committee, but the O'Hara bill, in somewhat weakened form, was reported favorably by the House Education & Labor Committee. It failed to get to the floor of the House for a vote because the highly conservative Rules Committee never got around to giving it a rule.

"It was too late in the session," alibied the committee, thus killing for the time being any chance to get anything done about the staggering toll of occupational accidents.

IN BACK OF what might seem the incomprehensible unwillingness of Congress to take positive action on America's shameful industrial accident record, is the stubborn resistance of business and industry to federal intervention in a field that this same business and industry would prefer to keep on the more controllable state and local level.

A good example of this resistance was presented in an effort by Sen. Yarborough to give federal protection to workers in the electronics industry.

During the outcry that followed the discovery that certain TV color sets were suspected of emitting hazardous radiation, legislation was introduced designed to protect the general public from such dangers.

In-plant inspection was approved by the Senate. It was knocked out of the final bill by the House conferees. So was an amendment introduced by Sen. Yarborough and approved by the Senate, designed specifically to protect workers in electronics plants and repair men who work on electronic products later.

Indeed, the final weakened bill that was passed might just as well have been written by the Electronics Industries Association, so closely does it conform to what the industry was willing to accept.

The industry lobbyist kissed-off worker protection through the Yarborough amendment with the brief comment: "The protection of workers from occupational hazards is a subject extensively covered by state and local laws and regulations."

Which is exactly what it is not.

The Occupational Health & Safety bill will be back in Congress next year with the ardent support of organized labor.

The 90th Congress flubbed its chance to give American workers adequate federal protection on the job and to make a dent in the gruesome death and accident statistics that we get every year. The 91st Congress will have the chance to make up for neglect of the 90th Congress.

BIG MAJORITY of union members will vote the Humphrey-Muskie ticket, Steelworkers Pres. I. W. Abel predicted in a Labor News Conference interview on the Mutual radio network. Questioning him on the AFL-CIO produced program were Neil Gilbride, left, of the Associated Press and Stanley Levey, right, of the Scripps-Howard newspapers.

Union Pay Hikes Cleared Of Blame for Price Rise

The oft-repeated claim that union-won wage increases cause inflation has been exploded by a detailed Wall Street Journal analysis of statistics on price and wage increases.

It lists hospital service, theater admissions, maid service, auto and property insurance rates and men's haircuts as items that led the price climb over the past decade.

By comparison, it notes, only about 10 percent of those who work as maids, medical personnel, movie house attendants and barbers are union members. Only 2 percent of insurance employes are organized, it adds.

A second list shows radios, television sets, other appliances and autos as items that have declined in price over the past 10 years "when quality improvements are taken into account."

Yet in these industries, the Journal reports, the percentage of union employes is among the highest of any industries, ranging from 33 to 70 percent.

The article concludes that the nation's economic records show "that today's inflation, to a remarkable extent, reflects factors that have little direct connection with labor costs."

Labor Snubs Wallace At Alabama Meeting

Montgomery, Ala.—Top aides of Alabama's presidential candidate, George C. Wallace, hovered on the outskirts of the State AFL-CIO convention here, passed out tickets to a Wallace dinner—but left without a labor endorsement for the third party candidate in his home state.

The 500 delegates representing Alabama's growing union movement ignored the former governor's candidacy. But they called for action at the state level to repeal anti-union legislation and to set up a medicaid program to meet the health needs of Alabama's low-income families.

Delegates called for legislation to permit public employes to organize and bargain collectively.

Present Alabama law declares that any state employe or worker in a state-supported institution who joins a union loses the protection of the merit system and may be summarily fired.

And state courts have held that counties and cities do not have the right to recognize or deal with a union unless the legislature passes a law specifically authorizing it.

Forty states presently receive federal matching grants to provide medical care for the needy. The convention delegates said in a resolution that Alabama should do likewise.

Delegates unanimously re-elected Barney Weeks, who has been a symbol of labor-civil rights cooperation in the Deep South, as president of the state federation, A. G. Trammell as secretary-treasurer and William Mintz as executive vice president.

Weeks, in his report to the convention, said new organizing in the state by AFL-CIO affiliates has added 10,000 union members in addition to increases in already-organized plants.

He urged as a major legislative goal a "little Norris-LaGuardia Act" to restrict state court injunctions used repeatedly "to break strikes."

In other areas, the convention called for federal and state action on consumer protection, including an end to auto insurance abuses.

It urged passage by Congress of occupational safety and health legislation, preservation of the TVA fertilizer plant, and tax reform.

Delegates voted strong support for the California grape boycott and for the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

Split Tickets Likely:

Nixon Wearing Mini-Coattails In Six Rocky Mountain States

By Robert B. Cooney

Denver—The Rocky Mountain states may repeat the 1960 pattern and go into the Nixon column on Election Day, but the GOP candidate is wearing mini-coattails.

Observers agree Richard Nixon is leading for nearly all of the six-state region's 25 electoral votes. But they also look for the re-election of a Democratic governor in Utah and see a good chance of Democratic victories in gubernatorial races in New Mexico and Montana and in Senate races in Idaho and Utah.

In the area of House delegations—crucial if the election of the President is thrown into the House where each state will have one vote—the Democrats are expected to retain control in two states, the GOP in three and one may be tied. In all, 13 House seats are being contested in the region, along with three governorships and three Senate seats.

As of mid-October, a survey of Utah, Colorado, Idaho, Wyoming, Montana and New Mexico revealed unusually strong Democratic candidates in basically Republican country. There were also indications of support for George Wallace, who may take votes mainly from Nixon in this area.

All these states save New Mexico voted for Nixon in 1960. And New Mexico has been a political weathervane, going with the national winner in every presidential contest since 1920. This year the vane is shifting uncertainly.

A state-by-state summary of the Rocky Mountain political scene:

New Mexico—This state is pointing towards Richard Nixon. But there are observers who concede Nixon's lead but claim evidence of a shift in the political winds.

"Things have been picking up in the last week," declared one political leader active in the Humphrey campaign. He said not a day had passed recently without visits and requests for buttons and literature from civil rights and university groups and others. He found it encouraging that farmers and ranchers were publicly sporting Humphrey-Muskie buttons and stickers. The supporters of Sen. Eugene McCarthy also have begun to pitch in.

Colorado's Gov. John Love (R) predicted in a speech that Nixon would carry all the Mountain States with the possible exception of New Mexico. And a United Press Intl. survey in mid-October also said that of all the mountain states, only New Mexico was doubtful for Nixon.

In the gubernatorial race, Democratic challenger Fabian Chavez is given a good chance of upsetting incumbent Gov. David F. Cargo.

Cargo was an early favorite for a second two-year term, but has fallen behind Chavez, according to one Republican-sponsored poll.

Both Chavez and Cargo oppose "right-to-work" legislation and both favor raising funds for education through state income tax hikes rather than through sales taxes.

The two Democratic congressmen, Thomas Morris and E. S. Johnny Walker, are favored to win re-election. Here again, the state has a strong tradition, never having elected a Republican to the House in 38 years.

Utah—One of those cab drivers whom George Wallace claims as his own spoke for himself and illuminated the mixed picture in this conservative state.

The 65-year old cab driver, father of five, called himself a Republican and said he would vote for Nixon, for the re-election of Democratic Gov. Calvin Rampton, for Democrat Milton Weilenmann over aging conservative Sen. Wallace Bennett (R) and against the liquor-by-the-drink proposal. The driver called Wallace an extremist and a bigot.

Rampton, elected in the Johnson landslide of 1964, has won broad support in his first term. He is strongly favored over businessman Carl Buehner (R), 69.

The surprise in Utah could come in the Senate race. The Weilenmann-Bennett contest was seen as a "toss-up." Weilenmann, 49, has served two missions for the Mormon Church and headed a state development commission. Bennett, at 69, has been on the defensive because of his sparse record during three Senate terms. A past president of the National Association of Manufacturers, Bennett has a COPE voting record of 3 right, 77 wrong.

The liquor-by-the-drink issue is expected to attract a big turnout. It was petitioned to referendum and is backed for its business and tourist appeal while the Mormon Church has mounted a massive propaganda campaign against it.

Colorado—Nixon is ahead in this state, which he carried easily in 1960. No surprises are expected in the other contests, with conservative Sen. Peter Dominick (R) holding a lead and three of four House seats being retained by Democrats.

Though it is agreed there is widespread lack of affection in Colorado for the Nixon and Humphrey candidacies, Humphrey is seen as benefiting from recent Democratic unity. The leading backers of Sen. Eugene McCarthy and the late Robert Kennedy, both very popular here, are openly supporting the Humphrey campaign. This effort and the absence of Nixon coattails are expected to close the margin.

Idaho—The shortness of Nixon's coattails is illustrated here. With a conservative tide running, liberal Sen. Frank Church nevertheless is considered a good bet to defeat the challenge of militant conservative Rep. George V. Hansen.

It is in a sense a classic battle. Both men are young, personable and articulate. Hansen, 38, served two terms in the House and racked up 1 right and 23 wrong votes on COPE's scorecard. Hansen attacks Great Society programs, disarmament and trade with Communist nations. In contrast, Church has a 54-7 COPE record and backs federal action on domestic problems and trade and aid abroad. Church has long opposed the war in Viet Nam and stresses his independence and seniority.

Church got an unexpected lift when a 1967 recall campaign against him backfired. The disclosure that a rightwing manufacturer from California was behind the anti-Church drive won the senator support from GOP moderates angered by the intervention.

The GOP had a 2-0 edge in House seats, but the Wallace movement here is expected to take Republican votes in both the Senate race and one House contest. With an American Independent Party candidate in the field, Idaho House Minority Leader Darrell Manning (D), 36, has a good chance of capturing the seat vacated by Hansen.

Wyoming—Nixon is ahead here. In the contest for the single House seat, Republican John Wold is favored over Velma Linford (D). Wold won an upset in the primary over William Harrison, who departs the scene with a 5 right, 35 wrong COPE record.

Montana—Republican Gov. Tim Babcock, one of the nation's most conservative governors, may be headed for defeat despite an expected Nixon victory. Atty. Gen. Forrest Anderson (D), 55, is running a strong campaign.

The biggest issue is Babcock's advocacy of a 3 percent sales tax, while Anderson has pledged to veto any such tax, favoring a restructured tax system. Babcock also lacks unified GOP support.

In the contests for the two House seats, which have long been divided between the parties, liberal Rep. Arnold Olsen (D) is threatened by a strong challenge from Richard Smiley (R), whom he beat narrowly in 1966.

Humphrey Seen Gaining in New England

By John M. Barry

Boston—The nationwide upsurge in voter support for Vice Pres. Humphrey's presidential campaign is being felt throughout the six-state area of New England, raising the hopes of the Humphrey forces of carrying as many as 30 of the region's 37 Electoral College votes.

A mid-October survey of New England, however, found only Rhode Island—with four electoral votes—regarded as reasonably safe for the Democrats.

The presidential race was considered "extremely close" in Massachusetts—with its big prize of 14 electoral votes—and in Connecticut with eight and Maine with four. As Humphrey's strength continued to climb in the closing days of the campaign, Democrats voiced confidence that he would capture all three states with the aid of vigorous COPE drives to get out the vote in heavily unionized industrial centers.

Close contests also were developing for two of the three Senate seats up in the region. Also at stake are 25 House seats and three governorships.

Here's how the political picture appeared in the six states:

Connecticut—A strong movement toward Humphrey was detected among union members in a COPE poll, but pockets of support for third-party candidate George C. Wallace cloud the outlook, leading most observers to rate the presidential vote a tossup between Humphrey and Republican candidate Richard M. Nixon.

Democratic Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff is under serious challenge from former Rep. Edwin H. May, Jr., and the result could hinge on the vote for the presidency.

Two of the five Democratic House members are in tough battles for re-election. William L. St. Onge, who represents the 2nd District, is being challenged by State Sen. Peter Mariani, a widely known Republican. In the basically Republican 4th District, Donald J. Irwin hopes the generally liberal constituency will reject his conservative opponent, Lowell P. Weicker, Jr.

Maine—Humphrey's choice of Maine Sen. Edmund S. Muskie as his running mate strengthened the prospects of a Democratic victory in this state—once a Republican stronghold—but observers warn that the result is by no means certain. Maine's two Democratic House members—Peter N. Kyros and William D. Hathaway—are favored to retain their seats.

Massachusetts—The Nixon-Humphrey contest is viewed as close, with scattered Wallace support and some die-hard McCarthy backing complicating the picture. The full endorsement of Humphrey by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, the state's most popular political figure, could put the Democrats over.

There is little likelihood of change in the House line-up of seven Democrats and five Republicans, although Representatives Philip J. Philbin (D), Torbert H. Macdonald (D) and Margaret M. Heckler (R) face strong challenges.

New Hampshire—Strong Nixon strength built up in last spring's primary is expected to carry the state for the Republicans, who are also favored to recapture the governorship with Walter R. Peterson, Jr.

But the Democrats are given a good chance for taking a Senate seat as Gov. John W. King, the biggest Democratic vote-getter in the state's history, seeks to oust aging Sen. Norris Cotton.

Both House seats are expected to remain Republican.

Rhode Island—Humphrey is the clear favorite here and both Democratic House members are expected to win. Republican Gov. John H. Chafee also is favored, although Superior Court Judge Frank Licht is regarded as the strongest Democratic opponent Chafee has ever faced.

Vermont—A return to the state's normal Republicanism is expected with Democratic Gov. Philip H. Hoff stepping out, although some observers give Lt. Gov. John J. Daley a chance to move up against Deane C. Davis, his GOP opponent. Neither Sen. George D. Aiken nor Rep. Robert T. Stafford has any Democratic opposition.

Mid-Atlantic Area Held Key to Election

112 Electoral Votes in Six States, 97 Congressional Seats on Ballots

Javits, running with labor and Liberal Party endorsement, appears to have a clear lead.

The mid-Atlantic states have been a bellwether in the past four presidential elections. All their electoral votes went for John F. Kennedy in 1960 and for Dwight D. Eisenhower in 1956 and 1952. The region has three Democratic and three Republican governors; six Democratic and six Republican senators.

As the campaign moved into its last 10 days, neither Vice Pres. Humphrey nor Richard M. Nixon could claim a firm lead in any of the area's bigger states. The District of Columbia is virtually conceded to Humphrey, and Nixon is given the lead in Delaware. But polls and political observers generally agreed both major candidates were very much in the race in the other states.

The region has also been a major focus of labor's political effort—and by personal observation it has been a massive, coordinated effort reaching deep into the shops, factories, communities and the homes of millions of union families.

With emphasis on the congressional picture, here's how the election looked in the mid-Atlantic states:

In New York, a Republican pickup of a few House seats appears likely if only because more Democratic than GOP seats are currently rated tossups.

For the past three congressional elections, Democrats have won New York districts that by all analysis of voting patterns should have gone Republican. Particularly impressive was the party's 1966 feat of re-electing all seven freshmen congressmen who rode into office in the 1964 Johnson landslide. As a result, New York has 26 Democratic congressmen (including the not-seated Adam C. Powell) to 15 for the GOP.

The Long Island suburbs of New York have long been considered Republican territory, but three of the five congressmen are Democrats.

This year, the Republicans hope to take over two of the districts, both in Nassau County.

One target is Rep. Lester L. Wolff, two-term Democrat from the 3rd Congressional District who won two years ago by a razor-thin 837 votes. The Republican candidate, Abe Seldin, hopes a big Nixon vote in the county will carry him in. However Wolff held on to his seat in 1966 despite the fact that Nelson Rockefeller carried the district in the gubernatorial election by 52,000 votes.

Voters in the 5th District, where Democrat Herbert Tenzer is retiring, have a choice between moving left or right. The Democratic candidate is Allard K. Lowenstein, a McCarthy strategist. Carrying the Republican label is a Conservative Party rightwinger, Mason L. Hampton, who won the GOP nomination as part of a deal between the two parties. Hampton is given a slight edge in most election predictions.

Shifting over to the southeast part of the state, Rep. John G. Dow in the 27th District faces a close race with Republican Martin B. McKneally, a past American Legion national commander, in a normally Republican area. The Conservative Party is running a separate candidate whose 14,000 votes two years ago enabled Dow to win a 4,600-vote plurality.

In the adjoining 28th District, Rep. Joseph Y. Resnick gave up his House seat and the Republicans hope to take it over with Hamilton Fish, Jr., son of the longtime former congressman. His Democratic opponent, 25-year-old John S. Dyson, is conducting a vigorous campaign.

A Democratic takeover of a Republican seat is very possible in the Bronx 24th District, which Rep. Paul A. Fino is giving up to take a judgeship. Here Democrat Mario Biaggi, a retired policeman, also has the Conservative Party endorsement.

Republicans also have designs on several upstate Democratic seats, including the suburban Buffalo district of Rep. Richard D. McCarthy.

The GOP has a chance of taking what should be a safe Democratic, predominately Negro district in Brooklyn with James E. Farmer, nationally-known civil rights leader. The Democrat is Mrs. Shirley Chisholm, a popular member of the legislature, who would become the first Negro woman elected to Congress.

Two possible Democratic pickups are the Albany seat of labor-backed Republican Daniel E. Button and the mid-Manhattan traditionally Republican seat being abandoned by Theodore R. Kupferman, and previously held by Mayor Lindsay.

In the Senate race, Javits appears headed for a third term despite the colorful campaign of Democratic maverick Paul O'Dwyer and the Conservative Party candidate James L. Buckley.

In Pennsylvania, Sen. Joseph S. Clark, after some needed political fence-mending, is conceded by Republican polls to hold a slim lead over his GOP challenger, Rep. Richard S. Schweiker.

Clark, seeking his third term, sees the election as a cliff-hanger He won renomination by a surprisingly narrow margin last spring but party divisions have been healed and labor support is strong. Despite a series of television debates between the two candidates, Schweiker still is not well-known in large sections of the state. Clark has spoken out boldly in the campaign for civil rights, aid to the cities and strong gun control.

Republicans hope to switch control of the state's congressional delegation, now 14-13 Democratic, by taking over the 6th District seat. Rep. George M. Rhodes held it for the Democrats for 20 years, but he is retiring. Both parties have nominated strong candidates—Democrat Gus Yatron and Republican Peter Yonavick.

Republicans are putting on well-financed campaigns in several other districts, but Democratic incumbents are judged in the lead—barring a big Nixon sweep.

Maryland has a three-way Senate race. Incumbent Democrat Daniel B. Brewster's main challenger is Rep. Charles McC. Mathias, Jr., a moderate Republican. The third candidate is George C. Mahoney, who has run losing races over the years as Democratic candidate for governor and senator. This time he is running as an independent. Mahoney showed up so poorly in a three-way television debate that predictions of his vote have dropped. Brewster has a solidly liberal voting record and the advantage of a big Democratic registration majority. But he is probably hurt more than Mathias by Mahoney's "spoiler" candidacy.

In the Maryland House contests, Republicans are hoping to narrow the 5-3 Democratic majority. Their main target is the normally Democratic 5th district where Rep. Hervey G. Machen had to beat seven challengers in a primary contest held so recently that party wounds may not have had time to heal. Democrats see a possibility of picking up the House seat vacated by Mathias.

In New Jersey, redistricting makes it likely—although not certain—that the Republicans can oust the exceptionally able Rep. Henry Helstoski in the 9th District. His opponent helped write the redistricting bill that the Republican legislature passed over the governor's veto.

In the 3rd District, Democratic Rep. James J. Howard is in a neck-and-neck battle for re-election in a district Nixon is expected to carry.

Republicans have an outside chance in several other districts. Among their targets is Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr., one of the leaders of the liberal Democratic forces in the House.

The border state of West Virginia has a close contest for governor between labor-backed Democrat James Sprouse and the state's lone Republican congressman, Arch A. Moore.

Moore's departure from Congress, however, makes it likely that the Democrats can regain the seat with Robert H. Mollohan, a popular former congressman.

Delaware observers give the edge to Democratic Gov. Charles L. Terry, Jr., in his re-election battle, despite a recent heart attack. He has run a stronger "law and order" campaign than his GOP opponent, a DuPont executive, and has had the National Guard patrolling the state's biggest cities.

Republican William V. Roth, Jr., is considered in the lead to retain the House seat he won two years ago from Harris B. McDowell. However, McDowell is making a strong comeback effort.

Wallace Legacy Shackles Workers

Montgomery, Ala.—As George C. Wallace campaigns for control of the White House, working people in Alabama strive to free themselves from the Wallace legacy left over from his reign as governor.

The point was made clear in a personal letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany from a warehouseman with the Alabama Alcoholic Beverage Control Board who made an appeal for assistance in organizing a local along with 50 co-workers in hopes of correcting the conditions.

"The working conditions are very bad and no matter how much seniority one may have, there is no advancement as a warehouseman. There is always the threat of being fired for the smallest grievance one may have," he wrote.

Wallace Support Drops, Spoiler Threat Persists

George C. Wallace may emerge as the spoiler in the 1968 presidential election. But the evidence from every source is that his vote will be substantially less than appeared likely a month ago. His campaign then was on the upbeat and the third-party candidate was claiming he would carry every border state and some in the Midwest, in addition to his Deep South power base.

The reports of a Wallace slippage—at least in the North—come from polls and newspaper surveys, from union shop stewards and political precinct workers.

Some date it from Wallace's choice of a right-wing retired general, Curtis LeMay, as his running mate—a man who apparently considers the hydrogen bomb as just another weapon in America's arsenal.

Others see it as the normal reluctance of Americans to "waste" their vote as Election Day approaches. And some relate it specifically to an effective job by unions and other groups which have exposed the way-out extremist, union-busting records of the men running the Wallace campaign.

A desperate Wallace blames the press, the pollsters, the "anarchists" for his troubles.

A tour of the West turned into a disaster as the candidate repeatedly "lost his cool" and at one point abruptly cancelled his schedule and withdrew into seclusion.

As one newspaper account put it, Wallace's bland confidence of early September has been replaced by "outbursts of temper in public, mercurial changes of mood in private, irritation with aides and newsmen, a seeming surrender to the pressures of fatigue, illogical insistence that poor crowds are actually large and adoring."

But while the Wallace drive may have "peaked"—to use this year's favorite political cliche—the votes he will get can tip the election either way or tumble it into the uncertainty of the House of Representatives.

And Wallace aides talk openly of 1972—implying that the one-man party, organizationally dependent on such radical right groups as the John Birch Society, will become a permanent part of the American scene.

If Wallace in person is losing his appeal, his backers hope that Wallace on television will give a last-minute momentum to the campaign.

The money for a TV blitz has been pouring in—much of it in small contributions from devoted followers but also in the traditional $500 and $1,000 fund-raising dinners.

Alabama's state purchasing agent, now working full time on the campaign, keeps tabs on the businessmen and contractors who contribute—and who don't contribute—to the Wallace campaign.

The Telegraph Workers announced that three divisions that long have represented Western Union workers merged Oct. 1 in one unit with these officers: Pres. M. C. McElhannon and Vice Pres. L. N. Blumberg Dies At 82; Clothing Union Pioneer

New York—Hyman Blumberg, who helped found the Clothing Workers and was one of its top leaders since 1916, died here at 82.

Blumberg's final illness caused him to miss ACWA's June convention in Miami Beach—his first convention absence in 54 years. But the delegates renominated him and members re-elected him in a nationwide referendum completed in September. He had been ACWA's executive vice president since 1946.

Born in Lithuania, Blumberg came to this country in 1890. He quit school at 12 to work as a pocket-maker in Baltimore, Md. Later he became a union organizer and was 24 when elected to his first union office.

Under his leadership, 75 percent of the Baltimore men's clothing shops were organized. He pioneered, along with Sidney Hillman, ACWA's first president, in developing union-sponsored health, retirement and life insurance programs.

His wife Bessie, who shared his interest in union affairs, died in 1965. A son, a daughter, six grandchildren and two great-grandchildren survive. Funeral services for Blumberg were held here Oct. 20.

Election a 'Horse Race':

Humphrey's Stretch Drive Sparks New Optimism

signs at every stop, sound trucks in Brooklyn, registration headquarters in Watts, cheering union groups at airport rallies, labor leaders in every welcoming delegation—everywhere there was concrete evidence that labor wanted HHH.

And it was just as obvious that Humphrey wanted labor. In speeches, interviews, television shows, on every possible occasion he sounded labor's praises, allied himself with its causes and aspirations, recited his own solid voting record on labor issues and pleaded for labor's vote. "I need you," he said again and again.

In New York, Texas and California, labor leaders meeting Humphrey reported unprecedented activity—from volunteer taxi drivers in New York for the campaign motorcade to telephone banks, mammoth fund-raising rallies and record-breaking registration drives, everywhere.

No one, however, was working harder than the candidate. On one day—Tuesday, Oct. 22—he was up at 7 a.m. Eastern time and to bed at 3 a.m. Central time. In between, he flew 2,050 miles, spending five hours in the air, mostly conferring with aides, helpers and supporters and working on speeches and position papers. He made formal speeches in Fort Worth, Dallas, Waco, Austin and San Antonio, shook uncounted hands, got kissed by or kissed Lady Bird Johnson, Luci Nugent, Mrs. John Connally and the wives of congressmen, senators, office-seekers and exuberant lady Democrats, plus several children, one of them the President's grandson.

That occupational hazard of campaigning—strained vocal cords—handicapped him, but Humphrey never stopped talking. He hammered away at the issues, taunted "Richard the Silent" for refusing to debate, scorned "George the Loud" for his campaign of fear, taught campaign workers the nuts-and-bolts of electioneering, inspired contributors to dig down for just-a-little-bit-more, defended the record of the Johnson-Humphrey Administration, and rejected the easy road of political soft soap to talk tough on tough issues.

From four days of the 1968 Humphrey campaign, these scattered examples tell part of the story:

In El Paso, an eight-year-old boy handed Humphrey an envelope. It contained eight dimes, "my allowance for four weeks," and a Christmas card signed "with love."

CWA Poll Shows Humphrey Leading

A poll by the Communications Workers—a reliable indicator in presidential elections since 1948—shows Hubert Humphrey carrying states with 241 electoral votes, to 205 for Richard Nixon and 92 for George Wallace.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said the sampling was cut off on Oct. 7 but "all the trends available to us . . . indicate a Humphrey victory is in the picture."

The poll showed the Democratic candidate leading in the popular as well as the electoral vote.

In Austin, he faced down a small group of loud hecklers, chanting "peace, peace, peace." You're getting your education in a college, financed in part by federal programs Humphrey had introduced, he reminded them. Then, to the joy of the jam-packed auditorium, he added: "Blessed are the peacemakers—not the peace shouters. Blessed are those who work for peace, not chant about it." And he recited his own record—the Peace Corps, the test-ban treaty, the fight for the non-proliferation treaty Nixon had helped scuttle this year.

In Watts, where no other presidential candidate had dared to appear this year, he made the same speech for law, order and justice he had made in the South—and he was cheered repeatedly.

Tabulating the civil rights victories he had helped achieve, Humphrey also itemized the yet unrealized needs and pledged himself to win them. "But when," yelled a black listener. "Elect me and the answer is right away," Humphrey shouted. "Now," the man in the crowd demanded, and Humphrey replied, "You're no more impatient than I am." And again he had the crowd yelling approval.

In Fort Worth, he learned that Hank Brown, president of the Texas State AFL-CIO and a scheduled traveling companion, was in a hospital recovering from an accident. Humphrey sat down and scribbled a telegram of sorrow, then turned to campaign planning with Roy Evans, Texas AFL-CIO secretary-treasurer.

Everywhere he cited the Nixon record of three recessions in eight years and the Wall Street Journal disclosure that the Nixon economic planning included calculated unemployment. "They call us spenders," he observed. "Well, they spent human dignity; they spent other men's jobs—that's paying bills with human misery," he added scornfully. And he noted that unemployment was as contagious as flu.

In Texas, he spurned advice to soft-pedal his law-order-and-justice speech and his pro-civil rights appeals. "I don't think winning this election is worth a compact with extremism," he told a hushed audience in Austin. "I don't think the presidency is worth dealing in racism," he added, and the crowd cheered repeatedly.

He heaped scorn on the vice presidential choices of his opponents. All three presidential candidates had already faced their first major test, he said, the choice of the man to be a heart-beat away from the presidency. "How does Pres. Agnew sound to you," he asked and the crowd groaned. "How about Pres. Gen. LeMay," he continued, and the crowd groaned, then roared with laughter.

In East Los Angeles, he pledged complete support to the farm workers, to Cesar Chavez and the grape boycott. "When I am President, I intend to see that the farm workers get the right to bargain collectively," he promised flatly at a night-time rally where 8,000 Mexican-Americans had waited long past dark for the candidate, whose schedule had collapsed by mid-afternoon.

Everywhere he talked of his complete belief in America and her people, denying charges that the nation was sick. "We are a nation in change, a nation maturing, a nation that has accomplished great things, but a nation that must and can and will accomplish even greater goals," he counseled.

His campaign has a single theme—people. He talked of his concern for them, his trust and faith in them, his need for them.

"People power" will win the election, he told every audience. "I can't match my opponent's money, television time, or campaign machinery," he noted. "All I have on my side is people."

If crowd reaction is any political test, Hubert Humphrey was correct. The people were on his side.

UNION MEMBERS might as well "tear up their union cards" if they vote for Republican presidential candidate Richard M. Nixon in November, Democratic candidate Hubert H. Humphrey tells a rally in Madison Square Garden, New York City. The Vice President, front and center, got warm applause from 14,000 people. Local 3, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, sponsored the rally.

DISTAFF DEMOCRATS—Mrs. Hubert H. Humphrey, left, and Mrs. Edmund S. Muskie, right—join Mrs. Beatrice Warwood, president of the AFL-CIO National Auxiliaries, during a campaign visit in Akron. Wives of the Democratic national ticket candidates received a rousing welcome to the Ohio industrial city.

'Real Issues' in Election Spelled Out by Muskie

paign, Muskie said, are:

- "Whether we can find security in a more peaceful world;
- "Whether we can provide a job at a living wage for every person ready and willing to work;
- "Whether we can provide a full education for every person, on the basis of his ability to learn, not his ability to pay;
- "Whether we can assure that every American family has enough wholesome food to eat;
- "Whether we can assure decent homes in decent neighborhoods, where garbage is collected and streets are repaired, where housing is maintained, and where there is safety for every man, woman and child."

This is America's challenge, Muskie declared, and it must be met "in the midst of the deepest social and political divisions we have known since the Civil War."

The Maine senator, judged by polls to be the best qualified of the three vice presidential candidates in the opinion of the American people, warned that this election "may well decide our chances to survive those divisions as a rational, democratic society."

He spoke of the responsibilities of the next President—in world affairs and domestic crises.

He talked of the transition from a war economy to a peacetime economy—and the opportunity "to use wisely" the national resources released by the end of the conflict.

"We must be prepared to invest them in education, housing, medical facilities, conservation of our resources, economic development, job training and public safety," Muskie declared.

"I would not suggest that if Humphrey and Muskie are elected there will be no crime, no poverty, no racial tensions," he said.

But he read the record of the three presidential candidates and asked which of them would be best able to inspire, govern and unite the nation.

Wallace offers "bayonets at home and bombs abroad."

Nixon, by his actions, "would rather be President than be right."

Humphrey, "as mayor of one of our great cities, as a senator, and as Vice President, has displayed a creativity and compassion unmatched in modern American politics." He is best qualified "by experience, by philosophy, by character to assume the presidency of the United States."

Post Office Issues John Dewey Stamp

Burlington, Vt.—The Post Office Dept. issued a stamp in tribute to the late Prof. John Dewey, who held card No. 1 in the Teachers, at a ceremony here sponsored by the University of Vermont.

AFT Pres. David Selden represented the union which Dewey helped found. The stamp, 19th in the "Prominent American" series of regular stamps, was issued here where Dewey was born and began his teaching career.

Dewey died in 1952. He is best remembered, the AFT said in a memorial tribute, for experiments in Chicago schools that stressed "learning by doing."

our faith in America—Hubert H. Humphrey."

The American system of government "has not broken down," Meany said. "It is working better today for a larger proportion of the American people than at any time in history. And that applies to both the economic and social functions of government."

There are serious problems in the nation, Meany noted, and "without question better police work is needed, better-trained and better-paid policemen, more adequate police protection against crimes of all kinds, including arson, looting, riots as well as exploitation, chiseling and crimes against an individual's civil rights.

"But true law and order are not served by the indiscriminate use of force against innocent and guilty alike—against those who peacefully dissent as well as those who destroy."

Surging Humphrey Drive Holds Key to 1968 Election

In Final Broadcast:

Meany Terms Vote Vital to Workers

The vote to be cast on Nov. 5 will be "as important to your future, the future of your family and the future of our country as any vote you have ever cast," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told American workers.

In his final broadcast over the NBC network on the 1968 campaign, Meany said the vote will be extremely close in many key areas and "your vote . . . may well make the difference."

He noted that in 1960 John F. Kennedy defeated Richard M. Nixon by less than one vote per precinct, adding: "I do not believe that those of you who helped Pres. Kennedy win that victory will allow Richard Nixon to become President of the United States."

The AFL-CIO president warned that the Nixon of 1968 is the same Nixon of 1960 and the years before; that he is the "same representative of conservative interests who have always fought labor." These forces, if elected, will attempt to "ram down the throat of labor" bills already introduced to hamper and weaken trade unions.

Pointing up Nixon's choice of Spiro T. Agnew, his lack of courage to face a debate and running down the racist appeals of George Wallace, Meany said "we can do more than merely reject Nixon and Wallace. We can move our country ahead by voting for Hubert Humphrey and Edmund Muskie."

Humphrey and Muskie are "tried and true friends" and "have never failed us," Meany said. "We must never fail them."

Citing the progress of the past few years as evidence of what's right with the country, Meany listed medicare, aid to education, minimum wage, housing, economic

Democrats Due to Hold SenateEdge

By Duane Emme

The Democrats are expected to remain in control of the Senate after the Nov. 5 elections but with a reduction in their present 26-vote margin.

Strong Republican inroads—even without the GOP winning control—could endanger progressive legislation in the next Senate and increase the chances of threatened new repressive measures against unions.

This is so because most of the Republican challengers are conservatives, most of the vulnerable Democrats up for re-election are liberals.

The liberal edge in the Senate could be overcome by a gain of eight conservative seats.

Democrats now hold 63 of the Senate's 100 seats, which means that the Republicans would have to gain 14 seats to achieve majority control. Of the 34 seats up for election this year, 23 are held by Democrats, only 11 by Republicans.

Humphrey Broadcast:

Jobs, Wages, Trust Called Basic Issues

Vice Pres. Humphrey asked American workers to compare the records of the rival candidates and parties and decide who can be trusted to lead the nation for the next four years.

Speaking on a nationwide radio program, the final broadcast in a campaign series sponsored by the Ladies' Garment Workers, Humphrey stressed the contrast between the Democratic record of "solid paychecks" and the statement by Nixon's economic adviser that Republicans are willing to accept a higher rate of unemployment than the Democrats. (Excerpts, Page 7.)

"Sen. Muskie and I categorically reject such a cruel and cynical Nixon Republican economic philosophy," Humphrey declared.

"Who is to be unemployed?" he asked. "What workers are to lose their jobs? What families are to go without the necessities of life?"

The Democratic presidential candidate contrasted Nixon's silence and evasion on the issues with his own willingness to speak out—on Viet Nam, on human rights, on medicare, social security, education, cities, tax reform.

"You know where I stand because I've spoken out on these issues."

He talked of his detailed blueprint for giving state and local officials "desperately needed help in the battle against crime and violence."

"I intend to see that Americans can live in safety," Humphrey declared. And, he stressed, "we will turn back crime and violence without endangering the traditional American liberties or freedom." Order and justice, he said, "belong together."

He reminded workers, particularly younger workers who didn't live through it, of the "three job-

Hard Battle Hinges on Final Days

By John M. Barry

Support for the Democratic slate of Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie continued to swing upward in the final days of the election campaign as American voters prepared to ballot, Nov. 5, for the nation's next President and Vice President.

The Humphrey-Muskie ticket was riding a strong upward curve in popular support, and political poll-takers acknowledged that it was fast closing the gap on the Republican candidates, Richard M. Nixon and Spiro T. Agnew.

Early in the campaign, the pollsters had given a commanding lead to Nixon and Agnew. But their recent findings make it clear that the contest has become a down-to-the-wire "horse race."

Humphrey's candidacy received a major boost when Pres. Johnson announced that he had ordered a complete halt in the bombing of North Viet Nam to encourage progress in the Paris peace talks. What impact this and other developments in the peace negotiations would have on the election was unclear, but it was generally agreed Humphrey would benefit.

The pollsters also were hedging their reports because of the uncertainties posed by the third-party candidacy of George C. Wallace and his running mate, retired Air Force Gen. Curtis LeMay. Wallace was running far stronger than any third-party candidate since Theodore Roosevelt and the Bull Moose party in 1912. The former

Party Shifts Forecast In Gubernatorial Races

By John R. Oravec

The Republicans may pick up a few more governorships in next Tuesday's election. They now hold 26 seats, the Democrats 24.

The GOP is hoping to score at least a net gain of three state houses for a 29 to 21 edge overall.

Of the 21 governorships up this year, only eight are held by Republicans and 13 by Democrats. Five of the Democratic seats are considered highly vulnerable. They are Illinois, Kansas, Iowa, New Hampshire and Vermont. Incumbent Democrats are leaving office in the last three states, which are traditionally Republican.

But Republicans stand a chance of losing two incumbent governors in Montana and Washington. The Democratic challenger also has picked up steadily in New Mexico to threaten the Republican incumbent.

This is how the races shape up state-by-state:

GOP Effort Falters In Bid to Win House

By David L. Perlman

A lavishly-financed Republican drive to capture control of the House of Representatives may fall short of its goal.

A survey by the AFL-CIO News points to some Republican gains in the 91st Congress—but probably not the 30-seat pickup the GOP needs to form a majority in the House.

Most of the House districts that observers on the scene consider too close to call are currently held by Democrats. If they split pretty much down the middle, a Republican pickup in the 10-to-15 seat range would be indicated.

There are these other possibilities:

- The visible trend to Humphrey can help Democratic congressional candidates. In that case, the makeup of the next House would be very close to the present 247-188 Democratic majority.
- A conservative trend in the nation—adding Nixon and Wallace strength—and an expected last-minute Republican television and radio blitz in key districts could

SIGNS TOLD THE STORY when Furniture Workers' District Council 3 of New York held a "stand up" for Hubert Humphrey rally. Pres. Truth-in-Lending Rules Drafted To Protect Nation's Consumers

The Federal Reserve Board has published 60 pages of detailed regulations to implement the Truth-in-Lending Act which Congress passed in May to take effect next July.

They will apply to banks, savings and loan associations, stores, credit card issuers, automobile dealers, credit unions, finance companies, real estate mortgage brokers—just about everyone who lends money or sells on time.

The regulations, open for comments until mid-November, will be published in their final form early next year.

Board Vice Chairman J. L. Robertson, responsible for drafting the regulations, also announced that the board will start an educational drive covering both consumers and lenders to explain the law and the regulations.

The board said the regulations provide a "mechanism" for improving a customer's knowlege of credit and thus "increase his ability to compare the terms available from various sources of credit."

The regulations themselves appear clearly designed to let the consumer know exactly how much he is paying for a loan or for credit on a purchase.

For instance, the advertiser who says on the air or in print that his product can be bought for only a few dollars a month, won't be allowed to stop at that point.

He would be required also to tell how long the transaction will run, how big the down payment is, what the finance charge is when expressed as an annual percentage rate, what the item would cost if paid for in cash, how much greater the time payment cost will be with the addition of the finance charge.

The regulations outlaw "fine print" when it comes to explaining the essentials of finance charges.

Ten-point bold face type—larger than most newspaper type—is required for the seller's disclosure of the rate of finance charges, the amount of each payment, frequency of payment and other credit details.

Even larger type—12 point, all in capitals—is specified for a notice telling a person that if he has committed his home as collateral in certain types of contracts, he may back out without penalty at any time within three days of his signing of the contract.

Standards also are set forth for the advertising of credit terms via radio, television, public address system, handout leaflets, direct mail, window display and billboards.

The regulations are particularly pointed about revolving accounts, where all sorts of extra charges have been hidden in the past. These must be clearly spelled out when the customer opens an account and in periodic statements.

Consumers who have store revolving credit accounts or bank check-credit accounts as of July 1 are to receive letters from creditors before July 31 explaining finance charges and interest rates used.

Although Congress directed the board to write the regulations, their actual enforcement will be carried out by nine federal agencies with the Federal Trade Commission responsible for the major share of compliance.

Labor Scores Attack On Heart Case Benefits

Chicago—Justice to workers requires that heart disease be compensable under state workmen's compensation laws, an AFL-CIO spokesman told an American Heart Association meeting here.

James R. O'Brien, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, spoke on the subject at the invitation of the AHA's conference on stress, strain and heart disease.

He voiced the AFL-CIO's "distress" at what appears to be "a calculated effort by special interest groups to eliminate payment of compensation in the majority of heart cases among workers."

This effort, he pointed out, goes on despite the fact that state legislatures continue to specify heart disease as a compensable injury and courts, lawyers and doctors "support this position."

O'Brien hit out particularly at employers and insurance companies for trying to "raise fear in the public mind" that heart disease coverage will cause companies to refuse to hire workers with a heart disease record.

"An employer does not have to pay a higher premium if he employs persons with heart disease," O'Brien pointed out, "whether these persons have a higher accident rate or not."

Furthermore, he noted, that in calculating the premiums for workmen's compensation coverage, "insurance carriers do not consider whether or not an employer has workers who are afflicted with heart disease."

He cited statistics showing that heart disease "is not the problem or menace to workmen's compensation systems" it is alleged to be.

Annual reports of state compensation agencies, though limited in availability, show that in some states less than one-tenth of 1 percent of workmen's compensation cases involve heart disease, O'Brien said.

Even granting that heart disease is increasing, compensability should be decided on whether a worker's occupation contributed to his disease and layoff, O'Brien said.

If heart cases are denied coverage per se, he noted, "there is no rationale for not eliminating" many other chronic diseases which offer difficulties in determining their casual relationship to being off the job.

Such a course would lead eventually to complete deterioration of the workmen's compensation system and "severe injustice" to workers, O'Brien concluded.

Third Vote Slated At Aerospace Firm

St. Louis—The National Labor Relations Board will hold a third election here to pick a bargaining agent for some 21,000 employes of McDonnell Douglas Corp., big aerospace firm.

The first election eliminated the Auto Workers, but neither the Machinists nor a Teamster-supported unaffiliated union received a majority. The Machinists won a runoff election, 8,981-8,980 but two ballots were challenged and the result was declared a tie.

Both contesting parties consented to a second runoff election, the NLRB said. It chose Oct. 31-Nov. 1 as polling dates at St. Louis and Oct. 28 at other connected locations.

Wages Outstrip Prices:

Buying Power Up To All-Time High

The purchasing power of workers across the nation reached an all-time high in September as the cost of living showed its smallest monthly increase since September 1967, the Labor Dept. reported.

Its Consumer Price Index increased two-tenths of 1 percent to 122.2 of the 1957-59 base period. This modest increase compared with advances of three-tenths of 1 percent in August and five-tenths of 1 percent in June and July.

The index figure, 4.4 percent above last September, means that goods and services that cost $10 a decade ago now cost $12.22.

Gross average weekly earnings of production workers rose to a record $110.49 in September, up 95 cents from August and $6.59 over the year.

The gain was attributed to a 4-cent rise in hourly earnings—the largest monthly increase in two years—which more than offset a two-tenths of an hour decline in the workweek.

For the worker with three dependents, weekly take-home pay averaged $97.30 in September, up 72 cents over the month. A worker with no dependents had a net pay of $88.37, a gain of 70 cents over August.

Earnings Up

After adjustments for the monthly price increase, real spendable earnings for the family head with three dependents averaged $79.62, up 39 cents over the month and 63 cents over the year.

This real spendable earnings figure marked "an all-time high, topping a previous record of $79.35 reached in October 1965," the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics pointed out.

While single workers shared in the monthly gain in real spendable earnings, BLS added, the buying power of their paychecks was still slightly below their 1965 peak.

Chief contributors to the overall increase in the price index were a 1.6 percent increase for clothing, a six-tenths of 1 percent jump in medical care costs and a two-tenths of 1 percent advance in housing costs.

Food prices declined for the first time this year, although the decrease was less than expected seasonally. Prices for used cars, household furnishings, utilities, public transportation and auto fuels also dropped.

In a special report, BLS said that medical costs have risen about 50 percent more than the general rise in living costs over the 22 years since the end of World War II.

Over the period, it noted, hospital room rates have risen 354 percent and doctors' fees 107 percent for an overall 125 percent increase in medical costs—compared to a 71 percent rise in all living costs.

Workers Get Increases

About 19,000 workers will receive cost-of-living pay boosts as a result of increases in the national and various city indexes. About 10,000 will receive a 3-cent per hour hike based on the national index since June. Other increases will range from 2 to 7 cents.

The Wholesale Price Index rose four-tenths of 1 percent in September but preliminary data indicate it will remain unchanged in October, the government said. A rise in wholesale prices often precedes a rise in consumer prices.

Arnold Chase, assistant commissioner of BLS, told a news conference that there might be further price increases over the rest of the year, but added that he feels "the peak of the inflationary surge is past."

Universal Health Plan Held Essential to Nation

St. Louis—A National Health Insurance system is a necessity if all Americans are to receive the "right to adequate health care," Dir. Bert Seidman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security declared here.

It is the fastest and only way, he added, of achieving a national goal that Congress has spelled out on several occasions—the attainment of the highest level of health for every citizen.

Seidman explained the AFL-CIO's position in support of National Health Insurance and what it would accomplish to students graduating from a St. Louis University program in hospital administration.

The system, he pointed out, should have universal coverage to include not only workers and their families but also the unemployed, students and those on public assistance.

Since this coverage would require federal participation, he continued, NHI should be financed on a tripartite basis under social security with the government, employer and employe — each paying one-third of the cost.

Benefits under the NHI, Seidman said, should cover hospitalization; physician services in the office, home and hospital; nursing care, home health services, psychiatric services, eye examinations and prescriptions.

Preventive health services, such as physical examinations, would also be included, he added.

By National Health Insurance, the AFL-CIO is not advocating a government operated health system such as that which is operated in Great Britain.

"Rather," he stressed, "it would be a financial mechanism to pay for the costs of medical care for all people much like the present medicare program for the elderly. It would not interfere with the clinical practice of medicine."

Patients would not only have a free choice of physicians but also free choice of health delivery systems under labor's version of an NHI, he said. The government would not "freeze in" either a fee-for-service system or a capitation system, he added.

The program, he pointed out, "should allow maximum flexibility in methods of paying for services so that innovations and experiments designed to develop new ways of delivering health care would be encouraged."

Seidman conceded that labor does not expect immediate support from "organized medicine" in a drive for NHI. "But, he noted, the American Medical Association opposed medicare and it is now law."

He pointed out that polls show a majority of people in the country already support NHI, concluding: "With it we could have the best medical care in the world."

Proposed to 350 Firms:

Oil Union Bargains For New Contracts

Denver—The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers announced here that negotiations have begun on the first of 435 labor contracts designed to win a fairer share of the oil industry's increasing profitability and productivity for 60,000 workers represented by the union.

In proposals made simultaneously to more than 350 firms, OCAW has asked for 23-month contracts replacing those due to expire at midnight Dec. 31.

All companies are being asked to agree to wage increases of 72 cents an hour in three steps; additional increases of 25 cents an hour for craftsmen in two installments; increased premium pay for night work; full company payment of the cost of improved insurance, hospitalization and pension plans; time and a half pay during vacations to provide a vacation bonus, and other improvements in the present two-year agreement.

In addition to these mandatory proposals, the union's bargaining policy committee for the oil industry recommended that locals seek management consent for joint union-management safety committees, with power to enforce health and safety rules in each company installation, and a clause providing full income protection for workers affected by any plant shutdown or relocation.

"Employes of the oil industry continue to increase their productivity," the union said in outlining its oil bargaining program. "As a result, total labor costs of the oil industry continue to decline" in the face of "higher and higher profits for the companies."

Meanwhile, the statement continued, "the cost of living has been rising sharply. Wages have not been sufficient to meet this increased cost of living, and present hospital-medical insurance plans have not been adequate."

Because of these and other factors, the union said, "unusually substantial adjustments now are in order."

The union is asking for wage increases of 12 cents an hour retroactive to Oct. 1, 1968, an additional 32 cents next Jan. 1, and a final 28 cents more as of Dec. 1, 1969. It wants shift premiums starting next Jan. 1 of 5 percent for the evening shift and 10 percent for the midnight shift; two additional paid holidays beginning in 1969; increased pensions for those already retired, to be financed by the company at the rate of 1 cent for each hour worked by current employes; time and a half pay for Sunday work.

The 1968 proposals were approved by vote of more than 90 percent of the members affected. Most of the covered employes work in oil refineries; others work in wholesale marketing facilities, oil production fields, on pipe lines and in fringe operations of the oil industry.

Oil workers account for about a third of OCAW's membership, and work in 40 states. Other members work in the chemical industry and elements of the oil industry not involved in current negotiations.

The union said the average oil worker's pay is now about $3.80 an hour for work that is mainly highly skilled. Companies add about $1 an hour as the cost of pensions, insurance and other fringe benefits, OCAW reported.

FROSTY MORN workers at the company's Quincy, Fla., plant joined two other union groups—at Montgomery, Ala., and Clarksville, Tenn.—on strike for fair wages and working conditions. Striking Meat Cutters at all three locations have asked consumers not to buy products sold under the Frosty Morn, Valleydale and Reelfoot brands until the plants, owned by Lorenz Neuhoff family of Roanoke, Va., agree to sign union contracts. They pay $1.25 an hour less than other meat packers in their areas, the union charges.

Meat Cutters Boycott Gains Wide Support

Atlanta—A "don't buy" campaign against Frosty Morn meats and other products of the largest independent meat packer in the South is drawing strong support from unions, the Meat Cutters reported here.

State labor federations in Tennessee, North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Florida have placed Frosty Morn, Valleydale and Reelfoot products on the unfair list in support of strikes at plants of the Lorenz Neuhoff family in Montgomery, Ala., Quincy, Fla. and Clarksville, Tenn.

While pickets have marched for months at three Neuhoff locations the union is continuing its organizing efforts at other company plants in Bristol and Salem, Va., Union City, Tenn., Miami, Fla., and Kinston, N.C.

The union, which said it seeks decent pay and working conditions for 2,000 Neuhoff employes, charges that some Neuhoff plants pay as little as $1.65 an hour—far below the rates paid by other big national firms in southern plants.

At Montgomery, Ala., the maximum Neuhoff wage is $2.30 an hour —53 cents below the minimum for union packinghouse workers in the same city. In Clarksville, Tenn., Neuhoff employes must work up to 100 hours a week to hold their jobs, the union said.

AFM Network Pickets Will Recess for Election

New York—Broadcasting station musicians struck three U.S. networks in a contract dispute but their union said pickets will be withdrawn when necessary to insure the free flow of election returns and broadcasts by political candidates.

"Our quarrel is with the networks, not the public," American Federation of Musicians Pres. Herman D. Kenin said.

The strike began Oct. 30 at Los Angeles and New York City stations of the American, Columbia and National Broadcasting systems. It affects some 800 network musicians who have twice, by secret ballot vote, rejected company proposals.

The union has been trying for several months to win improvements over old terms in contracts that expired July 31.

Miami stations also are owned by the networks but they are not yet included in the strike call.

Kenin said in announcing the walkout: "We feel that nothing should interfere with free access to the air waves by political candidates and parties, so that the American people may have every opportunity to make their decision before voting.

"Therefore AFM pickets will not interfere with the preparation and the broadcast of appeals by candidates, nor with the broadcast of election returns by the networks next Tuesday," Nov. 5.

Kenin said union members are waiving the important right to picket peacefully in recognition of the right of the public to be informed in a presidential election year.

In its strike notice the AFM said the walkout was called because of the networks' refusal to offer acceptable terms for station staff musicians and for "casual" musicians who perform before television or radio audiences.

For staff musicians the AFM asked an immediate wage increase of 25 percent this year and additional raises of 10 percent and 5 percent in the two following years. Also it asked premium pay for work in excess of six hours a day, for work performed beyond an eight-hour spread or between midnight and 7 a.m.

The union wants an increase in pension contributions to 7.5 percent, the addition of Veterans Day and Columbus Day as paid holidays, greater job security, more adequate severance pay, more liberal vacations, and a health, disability and welfare plan to cover staff musicians.

For staff and casual musicians it also is asking a mandatory one-hour meal "break" after six hours of service, and payment of double wages for all air time, performance time and rehearsal time during shows on which a musician doubles —plays any additional instrument.

For casual musicians it is asking "performance" wages at 150 percent of the non-air rate, and premium rates for work beyond an eight-hour spread or from midnight to 7 a.m.

The musicians voted 239-209 to reject the networks' latest wage offer.

Rail Labor Backs Study Of Passenger Service

Railroad labor has announced support for an Interstate Commerce Commission study of rail passenger costs with a view to making the probe as "complete, accurate and objective as possible."

Rail union leaders, through the Railway Labor Executives' Association, further urged creation of a National Railroad Passenger Council to assist in the study and to "move forward promptly from study to action."

ICC Chairman Paul J. Tierney on Oct. 16 informed Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.), chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, that the study would begin promptly with an initial report going to Congress within six months.

The ICC action followed prodding for the study from Magnuson and Rep. Harley O. Staggers (D-W. Va.), chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee.

An RLEA resolution said the study was needed because "considerable dispute exists about the cost and profit elements" of rail passenger service, as well as the policies required to preserve and develop such service.

Charging railroads with the "slaughter" of passenger service, the RLEA said the need for fast, new trains is now vital to handling the "transportation explosion" that strangles the nation.

In calling for the Council, the RLEA said it should consist of "representatives of all parties substantially interested in this subject, to assist the ICC."

The council idea was first proposed in June by Stuart Saunders, board chairman of Penn Central Co. However, he viewed it as a vehicle to help railroads in developing short-run passenger trains while eliminating long-haul service.

Saunders voiced sharp disagreement with an opinion expressed by Tierney in announcing the study—that railroads' bookkeeping methods exaggerate amounts lost in passenger service. However, Saunders agreed to cooperate with the study.

Canadian Price Index Continues Sharp Rise

Ottawa — Canada's consumer price index, pushed by the steadily rising cost of housing, rose from 156 for August to 156.4 in September, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported here. The year-ago figure for September was 150.7.

Moderate decreases in food prices failed to stop the rise. Small increases were reported in transportation, clothing and health costs. Mortgage interest rates, prices of new houses and repair costs all went up.

Decline in Ghetto Unemployment Linked to Job Training, Economy

A stronger economy combined with anti-poverty and job training programs has brightened the employment picture in the nation's ghettos, the Labor Dept. announced.

The conclusion is based on the latest in a series of surveys being made by the Bureau of Labor Statistics to keep abreast of the job situation in the poorest one-fifth of the neighborhoods in the nation's largest 100 cities.

BLS reported that for the past three months the jobless rate in these neighborhoods stood at 5.9 percent, down seven-tenths of 1 percent from 6.6 percent for the same quarter in 1968.

To show the extent of a "narrowed gap," the report noted that the unemployment rate for the nation as a whole dropped only two-tenths of 1 percent during the same period—from 3.8 to 3.6 percent.

At the same time, BLS said there was a drop in the labor force, employment and population in the poverty areas over the year, "probably reflecting the movement of workers out of these neighborhoods into other urban neighborhoods."

The decline in joblessness in the poverty neighborhoods occurred among Negroes, whose unemployment rate fell in the year to 6.9 percent, BLS calculated.

Since the unemployment rate for whites in these neighborhoods was virtually unchanged over the year at 5.2 percent, that meant the Negro jobless rate was 1.3 times the white rate in 1968 compared to a nearly 2-to-1 ratio in 1967.

The jobless rate for teenagers in poverty neighborhoods dropped from 24 to 19.8 percent between the third quarters of 1967 and 1968, with the Negro teenage rate declining from 34.8 to 25.9 percent. The white teenagers' rate—14.8 percent—was virtually unchanged.

The unemployment rate for adult men in the neighborhoods dropped from 4 to 3.6 percent between the third quarter of 1967 and the same period in 1968. The rate for white adult men declined by six-tenths of 1 percent to 3.1 percent, while the rate for Negro male adults went down from 4.6 to 4.3 percent.

Among adult women, the unemployment rate averaged 6.0 percent in the third quarter of both 1967 and 1968. An increase in the rate for white women was offset by a drop in the rate for Negro women.

The unemployment rate for Negro women in poverty neighborhoods, at 5.5 percent in the third quarter, was at about the same level as for Negro women in other neighborhoods, BLS noted. It is the only category in which the rate is not considerably higher in poverty areas compared to non-poverty areas.

Total unemployment in the neighborhoods dropped by about 63,000 to 384,000 between the 1967 and 1968 quarter, BLS said. It estimated that about two-thirds of the slum jobless are Negroes.

Ghetto employment in the past three months of this year totaled 6,071,000, the report said, down 241,000 from the year earlier. Adult whites accounted for three-fourths of the drop in jobs, but there also was a decline of 41,000 in the number of employed Negroes.

However, the combination of fewer unemployed and a decrease of the labor force in the poverty neighborhoods—300,000 over the year—more than offset the employment drop, BLS reported.

Noting that whites accounted for two-thirds of the drop in the labor force, BLS added, "many of the workers . . . probably moved out of these areas and into other urban neighborhoods, since population estimates for poverty neighborhoods showed a substantial drop over the year."

2nd Board Ruling Backs Coordinated Bargaining

A second big American corporation has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to negotiate with a union bargaining committee that was enlarged to include representatives of other unions.

Four NLRB members issued an order sanctioning "coordinated" bargaining between the Minnesota Mining & Mfg. Co. (Three M) and two locals of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers in St. Paul and Hastings, Minn. A fifth member, Howard Jenkins, Jr., dissented as he had in the earlier General Electric Co. case.

The coordination, developed by the AFL-CIO's Industrial Union Dept. consists of adding "observers" to the OCAW committee from other unions that bargain with Three M. The observers may listen and advise the union bargaining agent but may not vote, the board decided.

The NLRB majority approved Trial Examiner Frederick U. Reel's finding that the company is legally obligated to bargain "with whatever representatives the union chooses to send."

The "mere possibility of future abuse, which the union disclaims, is no justification for an anticipatory refusal to bargain," the examiner ruled.

The Three M firm's position, the examiner continued, "suffers from the same fatal defect described in General Electric," which was ordered by the NLRB to bargain with the Electric, Radio & Machine Workers and its committee including representatives of 10 other AFL-CIO unions.

The "fatal defect" was that in each case the NLRB general counsel established the fact that union negotiators, including those who normally represent other unions, were to "engage solely in bargaining on behalf of" the host union.

The examiner concluded: "The company could not, therefore, lawfully refuse to negotiate with them" since the law authorizes unions to choose their own bargaining representatives.

Three M has 2,450 employes represented by OCAW Local 6-75 at St. Paul and 850 employes at Hastings represented by OCAW Local 6-418. It manufactures adhesive tape, abrasives and similar products in 70 U.S. locations and has contracts with 55 local unions affiliated with 20 to 25 international unions.

Contracts for the two Minnesota plants have in the past been negotiated jointly as to major cost items. But when the two unions notified Three M management in 1967 that they planned to include representatives of other unions on the bargaining committee to negotiate only for the OCAW locals involved, management refused to agree. When company bargainers walked out of a meeting with the enlarged committee July 14, 1967, OCAW filed charges of refusal to bargain.

In the GE case, IUE and the other unions represented 200,000 GE workers when the management refused to meet with a coordinated committee in 1966. GE announced it intends to appeal the NLRB order.

In Third Quarter:

Corporate Profits Continue to Soar

New York—A profit "squeeze" predicted for 1968's third quarter has turned into the "biggest profit gain of the year so far."

So said the Wall Street Journal in a roundup of data from 438 U.S. companies reporting their profits in advance of the official Commerce Dept. compilation.

Companies on the Journal's list said they earned profits totaling $4.3 billion—up 13.6 percent from the $3.8 billion they netted for the July through September quarter of 1967.

"This is a profit squeeze?" the business paper asked. It answered:

"To put it mildly, not exactly. . . . Companies reporting early for the third quarter — a period during which many executives and economists had predicted a 'severe profit squeeze' would begin—earned aggregate profits of $4.3 billion."

Similar surveys earlier this year showed profit rises of 11.1 percent for the first quarter and 10.2 percent in the second quarter over year-earlier figures, the Journal said. It added:

"Many executives are shedding earlier pessimism to predict a continued strong performance in the fourth quarter. And some go further to forecast a fast profit start in 1969 as well."

Business Week, a McGraw-Hill, Inc., magazine, agreed that "earnings stay high" but hedged a bit with the observation that "there was evidence of a growing squeeze on profits."

A Business Week tabulation showed that corporate profits before taxes have risen every quarter for the past year and a half and, by Business Week's estimate, will reach their highest point for the third quarter of 1968.

The magazine said "already it seems clear that corporate earnings—before taxes at least—set a new mark in the third quarter, up perhaps $1 billion from the $91.8 billion seasonally adjusted annual rate of the second quarter—nearly $15 billion" above the $80.8 billion pace of last year's third quarter.

Underlying much corporate optimism, the Wall Street Journal said, it "the fact that consumers have been reacting in an unforeseen manner to the income-tax surcharge, which began biting into workers' take-home pay in the third quarter."

"It had been widely expected that consumers would cut their spending," the paper observed. Instead, it said, consumers have reduced their saving and gone on spending at their old clip.

The result, it said, has been "continued high demand for all sorts of goods and services" that executives identify as the main reason for the profit surge. Other reasons, it said, were giant profit gains for companies like major nonferrous metals firms that shut down for eight or nine months while their employes stayed on strike for a share in company prosperity.

The Journal listed 28 groups of companies with increased third quarter profits, and five groups with decreases.

The biggest rise was recorded in the copper industry where six firms reported $70.6 million in profits for the third quarter, an increase of 232.5 percent over the year-ago profit total.

Next highest profit rise was listed for 18 auto and equipment firms—up 127.3 percent to a total of $324 million.

Other big boosts were tabulated for seven rubber companies whose profits totaled $55.9 million for three months; nine mining and metals firms which netted $90 million; nine railroads, $57.5 million; 16 pulp and paper products companies, $135 million; nine office equipment firms, $297 million.

The profit parade was led by 15 petroleum firms which raised their net take to $1 billion—a rise of 5 percent over the year-ago figure of $988 million.

All but 10 of the profit-makers upped their totals by more than 10 percent in the comparison of quarters.

These decreases were tabulated by the Journal: three aluminum companies, down 50 percent to $19.7 million; 15 steel manufacturers, down 31.7 percent to $49.9 million; six airlines, down 29.7 percent to $66 million; six farm equipment makers, off 22 percent with total profits of $32.8 million; four tobacco companies, down 2.5 percent with total profits of $76 million.

Struck Nursing Home Ordered to Negotiate

An order to bargain with striking employes has been issued by the National Labor Relations Board against Mar Salle Convalescent Home.

The home, in Washington, D.C., had 192 patients when its 122 hourly-paid employes struck July 7 in protest against management's refusal to bargain with Service Employes Local 536.

The union was one of the first in the nation to be certified after the NLRB ruled that nursing home employes are entitled to legal protection under federal labor law. The resulting strike was a pioneer move in a new field, as is the board's ruling against Mar Salle management for refusal to bargain.

The ruling affirmed Trial Examiner Charles W. Schneider's finding that the union is the legal bargaining agent for the employes by virtue of winning an election last Apr. 2, and that Mar Salle management has unlawfully refused to deal with it.

The NLRB ordered management to stop refusing to bargain with SEIU Local 536, not to interfere with the union or employes in bargaining, and to sign a contract if an agreement is reached in negotiations.

All the strikers are Negroes, and most are practical nurses. Wages range from $1.30-$1.45 an hour, and employe incomes are so low that many nursing department workers were compelled to work up to 16 hours a day to meet living expenses, local Pres. Peter Sheehan said.

When the strike started, SEIU Pres. David Sullivan asked for public support for the strikers, whose legal and human rights are being violated, he charged.

Union Role Stressed In Better Health Care

Can better health services be provided more efficiently and can unions help bring this about?

An article in the November issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist gives affirmative answers to these questions.

Its author, Richard E. Shoemaker, is an assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security and an authority on health insurance problems.

Shoemaker makes a damaging case against the present method of providing and paying for health services.

The $50 billion a year the United States spends on health amounts to 6 percent of the nation's total national production, more than any other nation spends—including those countries that provide free health services for the entire population.

The cost has gone up faster than almost any other item in the market basket—yet the nation's overall health rating is inferior to many other countries.

Union-negotiated benefits alone pay out some $6 billion each year for hospital, surgical and medical expenses. But during the two-year period ended last December, hospital costs went up more than one-third. In some areas, the $100-a-day hospital charge is now a reality.

While some increases are inevitable, Shoemaker notes that there is a big difference in costs between efficient and inefficient hospitals, even where wage rates are the same and facilities comparable.

The most efficient method of providing comprehensive health care, he points out, remains the prepaid group health type program.

Studies have shown that the cost of such programs—which stress preventive medical care—is less than that of commercial insurance plans and the rise in cost has been considerably less than the national average.

In communities where such plans exist, dual-choice provisions in union contracts enable members to enroll their families in group practice plans as an alternative to conventional Blue Cross-Blue Shield coverage.

Shoemaker points out that unions can also use the buying power of the health benefit dollar to exert influence in any community in which there are large numbers of union families.

He suggests:

"Where feasible, jointly administered health and welfare plans might channel payments for medical care through a consumer oriented community organization created for the purpose of bargaining with the providers of care."

Unions can also, as many have, help set up prepaid group practices medical programs in their communities as an alternative to the traditional "fee for service" system.

"By pursuing these objectives," Shoemaker concludes, "unions could begin to realize full value for the dollars they negotiate for health benefits and restrain the runaway escalation of medical care costs. By stimulating better organization of health services, unions can help improve the quality of care provided their members and all people."

IWIU Board Votes Support For Humphrey

The Insurance Workers' executive board has endorsed Hubert Humphrey for president because he is "uniquely qualified" to lead America to "that better future he himself has envisioned throughout his career."

IWIU Pres. William A. Gillen had earlier announced his personal endorsement of Humphrey and the board, meeting in Washington, unanimously backed his position.

After analyzing presidential candidates and their platforms, the board voiced a "deep conviction that both the Democratic candidates and the Democratic platform merit the wholehearted support of American workers.

"We do therefore recommend, advise and exhort all members of our union to support the Humphrey-Muskie ticket with all the energy at their command."

Outreach Projects Put 1,700 in Building Crafts

Some 1,700 youths from minority groups have been placed in building trades apprentice training through the four-year-old Apprenticeship Outreach program, Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz announced.

Another 1,000 youths, mostly Negroes and Mexican-Americans, will be prepared for apprenticeship tests in the immediate months ahead under current Outreach contracts, Wirtz added.

The secretary brought the program's achievements up to date after announcing the signing of five new contracts to train 220 youths in seven cities.

The new signings, Wirtz noted, bring to 51 the number of cities in which Outreach projects are being conducted by 12 different sponsoring groups. The projects represent a total Labor Dept. investment of $3.1 million over 22 months.

In reviewing the program, Wirtz pointed out that it has recorded "considerable success" since it was developed in 1964 jointly by the Workers' Defense League and the A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund.

The projects, with the aid of federal financing, recruit, tutor and counsel youths in preparing for specific examinations in such trades as carpenter, sheet metal worker, plumber, electrician and bricklayer.

In his breakdown of current projects, Wirtz noted that nine of them are being sponsored by the Workers' Defense League-A. Philip Randolph Educational Fund under contracts totaling $562,204.

Twenty-three projects are being operated by the Urban League with $1 million in funding and 13 are contracted for by AFL-CIO building and construction trades councils with $725,377 in federal investment.

Wirtz emphasized that "the AFL-CIO councils, in addition to sponsoring their own programs, also offer guidance and tutors to all Outreach programs conducted in their respective areas."

The latest contracts announced by Wirtz cover new projects in six cities—Flint, Lansing and Grand Rapids, Mich.; Akron, O.; Portland, Ore., and Los Angeles—and the extension of an existing project in Baltimore.

The Los Angeles project will be conducted by the Mexican-American Opportunity Foundation, actively supported by the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Council of Los Angeles.

NBC Staffers Told to Report Their Holdings

The National Broadcasting Co. has ordered its news department staff to disclose private financial investments that might conflict with their coverage of the news.

Its disclosure action was taken in response to a blast by the Federal Communications Commission, which said the network had been lax in not disclosing that commentator Chet Huntley had substantial investments in the cattle and meat industry when he broadcast sharp attacks on the meat inspection law then before Congress.

Under FCC Order

The FCC directed the network to tell the agency what it planned to do to avoid future conflict of interest situations.

NBC said its news personnel will be required to list investments—including investments by members of their immediate families—amounting to more than 1 percent of the outstanding shares of any company.

A committee of NBC executives, the network said, will then decide if the investment might affect the staff member's news judgment.

If the possibility existed, the network said, another newsman might be assigned to a story or the radio or television audience might be informed of the commentator's financial interest.

Timken Strike Ends As 10,000 Ratify Pact

Canton, O.—The second longest strike in the history of relations between the Steelworkers and Timken Roller Bearing Co. ended when locals representing 10,000 employes ratified a new contract by margins of more that 4-1.

The new pact provides the "most substantial" gains ever won from the steel and roller bearing company, the union said.

The strike began Aug. 25 when union members, refusing any further contract extension, walked off their jobs. It ended 48 days later at Timken's Ohio locations — four Canton divisions, represented by USWA Local 1123; the Timken bearing works in Columbus, represented by Local 2173, and the Wooster steel mill, where Local 2730 has bargaining rights.

The strike-settling agreement provides major economic gains along with a new job evaluation system, a completely revised seniority system, and improved language in many major contract clauses, the union said.

Timken workers are assured across-the-board wage hikes of 20, 12 and 12 cents per hour over three years, and a half-cent increase in the increments between all job classes.

The basic monthly pension benefit per year of service was increased to $6.50. Other pension benefits of the union's Basic Steel agreement, including the survivor's benefit, also were won. The new pact provides improved supplemental unemployment benefit coverage, increased life insurance, expanded hospitalization coverage and the institution of a major medical program.

The contract, which runs through August 1971, provides an additional paid holiday and a vacation "bonus" of $24 for each week of regular vacation.

Even more significant that the economic gains, USWA reported are the job classification program—the first such comprehensive plan at Timken—and new language covering such key areas as seniority, grievance and arbitration procedures, and a wage incentive program. Many local issues also were satisfactorily resolved, the union said.

The agreement on job evaluation calls for a six-month period for job classification and, for the first time in more than 20 years, authorizes union evaluation technicians to enter Timken properties.

Union bargainers headed by District Dir. John S. Johns held out against all management attempts to deduct the cost of the new program from hourly wage increases, a union statement said. It credited the high morale of the strikers with this achievement.

Labor Action Blocks Hike in Auto Insurance

Nashville, Tenn. — Tennessee AFL-CIO Pres. Matthew Lynch announced that he is withdrawing a federal anti-trust suit involving automobile insurance rates "because the action has accomplished its purpose."

The suit was filed after the Insurance Rating Board, which sets rates for auto insurance in the state, had asked the Tennessee Dept. of Insurance & Banking for a 15 percent increase in the rates.

The suit charged IRB and the department with "conspiring to control, regulate and dictate" prices in violation of anti-trust laws. It also charged the insurance-banking commissioner with failing to regulate the insurance industry effectively. It asked the court to prevent the rate increase.

Just as the suit was slated to come up in federal court here, the commissioner announced denial of the rate increase and Gov. Buford Ellington called for an investigation of the state's auto insurance setup.

Filling the Void

THE 1968 ELECTION campaign is down to the final rallies, the last television programs, the climactic series of radio, TV and newspaper advertisements—and the windup editorials.

In the battle for the ear and eye of the voter, the Nixon-Agnew campaign has had a big advantage. It has had readily available the millions of dollars needed to blanket the airwaves—not just in the final days, but throughout the two long months of the campaign.

It has had another advantage—the editorial support the nation's overwhelmingly Republican newspapers normally give to any Republican candidate.

A number of the editors and publishers balked at Goldwater in 1964 as too extreme. But this year they are supporting Nixon as automatically as they support employers over unions in labor disputes, as overwhelmingly as they opposed the candidacies of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry S Truman, Adlai E. Stevenson and John F. Kennedy.

A handful of the best newspapers have provided valuable in-depth coverage of the campaign in their news columns. But too many have covered only the superficial facets of the election, ignoring issues as they sought conflict.

In cities and towns throughout the nation, it has been left for the labor press to fill this void—to speak out on the issues and candidates from the viewpoint of the great progressive mainstream of American political life.

The labor press is, of course, a part of the trade union movement. It makes no pretense of being a disinterested bystander.

For the past three months the labor press has been devoting major attention to the basic issues of the campaign. It has reported and commented on the records of the candidates. It has analyzed the platforms of the parties. It has endeavored to present to union members and their families the basic facts that a voter must have to make an intelligent decision.

It was the labor movement which decided that the weight of the evidence pointed to the clear choice of the Humphrey-Muskie ticket. And it was the labor press which carried the story to the millions of trade union members clearly and distinctly.

In 1968, the labor press did not merely say that a vote for the Democratic presidential ticket is in the best interest of workers and the nation. It spelled out the case based on the past records and present programs of the rival candidates.

And the labor press met head-on the Wallace appeal to fear and frustration—just as the nation's trade unions have met the issue.

As a result, millions of union members and their families have had the opportunity to read the records, weigh the issues and the alternatives.

In this campaign, as in so many others over the years, the trade union movement has been the solid rock on which the nation's progressive forces are based.

The scores of newspapers and magazines published by unions to inform union members have been a proud part of this effort.

For American Workers:

10 Issues Provide Answer To Why Humphrey-Muskie

FOR EVERY MAN or woman who works for a living, there are 10 good reasons why they should vote for Vice Pres. Humphrey and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie.

1. Jobs: The average unemployment rate during eight years of Kennedy-Johnson was only one-half as high as joblessness during the eight Eisenhower-Nixon years. When Kennedy-Johnson took over from Eisenhower, the jobless rate was 6.7 percent. It is now 3.6 percent.

There were three recessions during the last Republican Administration. Only since Kennedy and Johnson have been in the White House has there been an unparalleled record of prosperity and growth.

2. Paychecks: Organized labor has never had a warmer friend than Humphrey. That is why he has such strong labor support. Nixon and the GOP platform openly plan to undermine unions. The Wallace platform doesn't even mention unions.

3. Taxes: The only major tax reduction for working people will be in tax reform, which will close tax loopholes. Only Humphrey has come out for an end to the multi-billion oil and gas tax bonanza. He firmly believes in progressive taxation—tax on the ability to pay.

4. Social Security: Humphrey wants a 50 percent increase in social security benefits over the next four or five years, with a 15 percent boost now. Much of the increase would be paid for out of general revenues rather than increased Social Security taxes.

5. Minimum Wage: Only Humphrey, among all the candidates, has supported a $2 an hour minimum wage and a minimum can affect all pay scales.

6. Crime in the Streets: Humphrey has not only proposed a detailed program to stop crime and punish the offenders but also has long advocated getting to the root of crime—need for education, housing, war on poverty, etc.

7. Consumer Protection: For too long the consumer has taken a rooking in the marketplace. Humphrey, alone, has come out with plans to extend the consumer protection program started under Kennedy and Johnson.

8. Big Business: Humphrey puts the welfare of people ahead of the profits of big business. The close tie between Nixon and the GOP with big business is well-known. Nixon's "secret" letter to the securities industry offers new evidence. Much of Wallace's funds come from H. L. Hunt and other oil and business millionaires.

9. Nuclear War: No sane American can fail to be concerned about the threat of nuclear holocaust. Of all the three candidates for President only Humphrey worked for immediate approval of the treaty. It would halt the spread of nuclear weapons. Eighty nations have already signed.

10. Peace in Viet Nam: No candidate for President has outlined a more detailed program for a negotiated settlement of the war. Only Humphrey has said that he would consider halting the bombing of North Viet Nam and described the action he would take if this did not work. Nixon offers nothing new, while Wallace-LeMay would step up the war. (PAI).

Nixon Letter Held Threat to Savings

Richard M. Nixon's notorious recent letter to Wall Street securities dealers promising to go easy on regulating them is a particular threat to small savers who buy mutual fund shares for retirement and similar purposes, consumer columnist Sidney Margolius said. He added:

"As we have previously reported, the present Administration has been trying for several years to reform present mutual fund selling methods. The Securities & Exchange Commission feels that present sales commissions of 8-9 percent on these shares are excessive, and wants to limit them to 5 percent.

"The SEC also wants to end the 'contractual' method of selling mutual fund shares. Under this system, a family that wants to withdraw from a mutual fund buying plan at the end of the first year loses 35-50 percent of the money it has put in so far. In fact, if at any time you had to discontinue during the first few years you would forfeit part of your investment.

"Be warned accordingly. As we have told you before, there are a number of 'no load' mutual funds which have no salesman and charge no sales fee. Even if you want to invest in one of the fee-charging funds, some do not require you to sign a contract. You can use the 'voluntary' method, simply indicating your intention to pay in a certain amount each month, but signing no contract."

Humphrey Broadcast:

Who Can You Trust to Lead? The Record Gives the Answer

Following are excerpts from a broadcast by Vice Pres. Humphrey over the NBC radio network, the final broadcast in a series sponsored by the Ladies' Garment Workers.

MY FELLOW AMERICANS, a few days from now you will perform one of your most important duties as an American citizen. You will help choose your next President. You must decide what kind of President and Vice President you want. Who can you trust to lead this country for the next four years?

I have taken my stand on the issues—on Viet Nam, on civil rights, on civil peace, on human rights, medicare, social security, education, cities, our struggle against poverty and tax reform. On issues of national security, of peace and war. You know where I stand because I've spoken out on these issues.

To achieve civil peace and civil justice, I have proposed a detailed blueprint on crime control, which with strong federal backing would help combat crime and lawlessness, and which would meet the threat of violence and riots. Your President and your federal government can give your state and local officials desperately needed help in the battle against crime and violence. When I am President, they will get this help, because I intend to take the offensive against crime. I intend to see that Americans can live in safety.

We will turn back crime and violence without endangering the traditional American liberties of freedoms, because we can do it. Order and justice—they belong together.

What is the Nixon Republican record on another matter of great concern—to every one of us—on prosperity and economic growth? When the Nixon Republicans were through running the country in 1960, here was the record: Three job-killing recessions in eight years; 2 million more people out of work than in 1952; unemployment at almost 7 percent of the work force. Personal savings, down by $4 billion when they should have been up many billions. Wasted production capacity—running over $50 billion a year.

A Nixon economic adviser just a few weeks ago said that the Republicans are willing to accept a higher rate of unemployment than Democrats. Sen. Muskie and I categorically reject such a cruel and cynical Nixon Republican economic philosophy. Who is to be unemployed? What workers are to lose their jobs?

Humphrey-Muskie Democrats believe in solid pay checks, and we have a record to back up that belief—92 consecutive months of sustained economic growth, better wages, and much better profits, ten million new jobs created in eight years, and disposable income after taxes, up by 187 billion dollars. And unemployment is now down under 4 percent, the lowest unemployment rate in 15 years.

That's the record. And compare that, if you please, with the record of the Nixon Republicans. Let me add one other factor that's very personal. During those eight Nixon Republican years, family income for a family of four went up but 9 percent. During these recent Democratic years, since 1961, that same family's income after taxes, after the rise in the cost of living, has gone up over 30 percent.

Some of you are a little too young to remember when Republican presidents ran this country's economy into the ground. Some of you have never had to search, without hope or without help for a job that isn't there. And many of you may not even remember what it was to have a President of a government in Washington that was outright hostile to labor and labor unions and collective bargaining.

Nixon Republicans have been against federal aid to schools and colleges; aid that's been desperately needed, and aid by the way which today makes possible a better education for your children. But a Humphrey-Muskie Administration will stand for these good programs. In fact we've worked for them in Congress and in the government.

In the field of social security. I pledge that as the cost of living goes up, so will your benefits, so that you will not be victimized by any rise in the cost of living. We will fight for fair tax reform, and we're committed to help rebuild our cities to make them more livable, and we will provide programs of job training for the jobless and of hope for the despairing.

THESE ARE SOME of the things to which a Humphrey-Muskie administration is pledged. And may I say that the Democratic Party has a record of promises made and promises kept. A record of performance for you, for me, for every American.

Now let me just say a few words about the question of peace and war. We must, and we will find a prompt and honorable solution to the Viet Nam conflict. We hope and pray that that conflict may be over, or at least that there may be a cease-fire before Jan. 20, 1969. But if not, the highest priority of the Humphrey-Muskie administration will be to find a prompt and honorable solution to the Viet Nam war.

I have spoken out on Viet Nam. Mr. Nixon has not. It is an issue of vital importance to you. My record on slowing down the dangerous arms race is clear.

As President I would continue intensive efforts to cut back on military expenditures, and the missile race. I would take the dividends of peace and I would invest them in the works of peace and human renewal, right here in the United States where so much needs to be done. But the Republican nominee has never worked for peace in his public career. His name is not attached to the Food for Peace program, to the Peace Corps, the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty, the arms control agency. Those are not Nixon accomplishments. Those are Democratic accomplishments. And in each instance, it was my privilege to be the author of that legislation.

Praised for Efforts:

Humphrey's Plan for Schools Termed Best 'On All Scores'

LABOR'S TOP EDUCATOR praised Hubert Humphrey as a fighter for education—both its quality and open availability—who is sure to continue that fight from the White House.

"On all scores," Humphrey shows that he best "understands the problem and intends to do something about it," declared Walter G. Davis, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education. He made the statements on Labor News Conference; a public affairs interview broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

The union educator said that strengthening federal aid to education should be a key question to consider in the upcoming election, pointing out that local taxing bodies "have pretty much reached the saturation point." He said that without "greater federal investment in this field —to keep up with the population explosion . . . new methods, new techniques and the need for construction of new facilities . . . we are going to fall even further behind."

Charging that the Republican platform is "very vague" in the area of federal help for schools, he predicted that the issue would get little support from Richard Nixon. He recalled that as Vice President in 1960, Nixon cast the tie-breaking vote that killed federal aid to education in the 86th Congress. The measure became law three years later, during the Kennedy-Johnson Administration.

THIRD-PARTY candidate George Wallace, he said, "has stated no position" on education, other than to attack the ban on racial discrimination in the nation's public schools and pledge to "implement his 'standing-in-the-schoolhouse-door' position."

Davis also reported that the number of union members voting for Wallace would not "come anywhere near the projection indicated by the news reports." He said that informal polls taken during worker-education schools shows Wallace getting "what could be called a Goldwater vote in '64 . . . that would normally not have gone to the Democratic party anyway."

PROBLEMS OF AGRICULTURE and farm issues don't particularly fire up the urban, industrial worker.

Usually he wants good farm produce at reasonable prices and that's about it.

However, there is much more that concerns him about agriculture, directly affecting his pocketbook. The biggest of these is farm subsidies, the millions of dollars paid out to "farmers" to assure their fair rate of return.

What once was a good and necessary move to protect the small family farmer has become too often a grab on tax revenues by corporate, anti-labor empires in the South and Southwest.

It is now a loophole in the tax laws which provides bonanzas for hundreds of thousands of dollars.

In the 90th Congress, for example, it was proposed that a ceiling of $20,000 per farmer be paid under the farm subsidy program. It didn't get too far, but in the process, some interesting facts about subsidies came to light.

In 1967 a total of 9,952 individuals received more than $20,000 under the program. Their total bundle was $408,139,006.

What is of particular interest is that 8,778 farmers in 15 cotton states received $362,220,699 of the total paid out. The biggest payment went to farmers in Texas ($99,619,326), California ($67,633,575), Mississippi ($63,206,052), Arizona ($34,615,953) and Arkansas ($33,571,340).

These states and the other deep South states send to Washington some of the most ultra conservative members of Congress. They have consistently fought socially progressive legislation measures to aid the decaying urban centers and to strengthen organized labor.

When the farm subsidy program was set up in the late 1930's it was designed to assist the small family farmer. Also, many members of Congress from urban areas supported the subsidy program because it was socially desirable. Also, many Congressmen with rural constituents, in turn, backed social legislation.

Now the whole pattern has been radically altered.

This new pattern was dramatized during the second session of the 90th Congress when the House Labor Subcommittee was debating a proposal to give the farm worker the benefits and rights under the National Labor Relations Act.

Rep. W. R. Poage (D-Tex.), chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, dominated by the cotton states' congressmen, passed a hurried resolution asking the House Labor Committee not to enact such legislation.

The Labor Subcommittee was furious. Chairman Frank Thompson, Jr., (D-N.J.) asked Poage to appear before his committee. The resulting confrontation summed up the entire problem.

Poage, representing the big farmers of his state which had the largest sum under the farm subsidy program, condemned the whole concept of farm unionism.

Thompson and committee members such as O'Hara and Ford of Michigan, Brademas of Indiana and Scheuer of New York laid into Poage. They reviewed the record of the House Agriculture Committee on social and economic legislation. All negative. Then they read the record of the House Labor Committee on farm subsidies. All positive.

The warning which was given to Poage was that if conservatives with an interest in agriculture persist in their reactionary stands the urban, liberal Democrats would stop supporting plush farm subsidies.

This threat has been made before but rarely carried out. However, if liberal Democrats from urban areas line up with Republicans from the Middle-East, Northeast and Northwest—who usually oppose farm subsidies—they could place a low ceiling on payments.

The original concept of farm parity was designed for the small, family farmer. He still needs all of the support that our economy can afford. But in many states where a few empire-farmers receive more than the entire anti-poverty program some re-thinking is in order.

HUBERT HUMPHREY—a fighter for both the quality and open availability of education—is sure to continue that fight in the White House, AFL-CIO Education Dir. Walter G. Davis, center, said on Labor News Conference. Questioning him on the public service interview over Mutual radio were Harry Conn, left, of Press Associates, Inc., and Murray Seeger of the Los Angeles Times.

How to Buy:

Thanksgiving Dinner Cost Up, But Price Surge Is Slowing

By Sidney Margolius

YOUR THANKSGIVING dinner will cost a little more this year, due to higher prices of turkey and the fixings. Otherwise this year's sharp inflation during which consumer prices jumped 4½ percent in just 12 months, finally is slowing down.

One of the most important breaks for working families, especially younger ones seeking homes, is the Administration's current effort to force down mortgage rates. FHA and VA rates ran up all the way to 6¾ percent this year from 5½ percent early in 1966. Non-FHA mortgages in some areas have been as high as 6½-8 percent. Even the noble American Indians finally have become completely subdued by the white man, as Arizona Navajos signed for 25-year, 6½ percent mortgages on a new housing development.

Fortunately for the Navajos, FHA mortgages at least provide for prepayment (paying up ahead of time) without an excessive penalty. With rates beginning to crumble, we hope that anybody compelled to take out a mortgage at this time will insist on a reasonable right to prepay. This will enable you to negotiate a lower-rate mortgage when the rates drop.

FHA permits prepaying up to 15 percent at any time without penalty. If you prepay before 10 years you pay just a 1 percent penalty. One large private lender permits prepayment of up to 10 percent of the mortgage at one time without penalty. Otherwise, you may be charged a penalty of 3 percent of the original loan if you prepay the first year, 2 percent the second, 1 percent the third. This is reasonable enough.

Lower mortgage rates also will help restrain current rent boosts, which have hit older people living in cities especially hard.

You can see the real nature of the gouge by the fact that interest rates paid by banks and savings associations on your savings remained the same during the past two years even while mortgage rates have jumped almost 30 percent.

Here are tips on other November buying needs:

TIRES: The new official U.S. grades for tires were supposed to be ready this fall. But the experts are still working on them. When they are ready, tires will be labeled Grade 1, 2, 3, etc. This will finally give you a dependable way to choose the right grade for your needs, and also to compare prices of various brands of the same grade.

The new grades also will help expose the fact that some tires on new cars last only a few thousand miles. Some new-car buyers have wondered about the short life of some tires. We can confirm that early tests have shown that these complaints are valid.

Until the new grades are available, you at least will be able to use the information now molded on the sidewalls of new tires. As the result of recent legislation, the sidewalls must show the tire's load-carrying capacity, number of piles, composition (nylon or what), and other information. These facts will give you some guides to judging quality. But you will still also have to judge quality by the rough yardsticks of weight of the tire, and depth of tread.

In buying snow tires this winter watch out for the advertising tricks often used to confuse buyers. The main one is advertising in big type a low price for tires for smaller cars, with disproportionate price jumps for tires for standard-size cars.

CLOTHING SALES: Veterans' Day sales offer sizable reductions on women's and children's coats. Two outstanding values in kids' coats this year are pile-lined corduroy outer jackets at $12-$20, and deep-pile fur-like coats for girls at only $25. Better-made outer jackets have quilted sleeve liners as well as pile body liner, and resilient, reinforced knit cuffs.

FOOD BUYING CALENDAR: While turkeys cost more this Thanksgiving than last, because of a smaller crop, they are still good value. Beef and pork also are relatively reasonable now because of increased production. Smoked cali hams and pork butts are the buy of the month because of their very low prices this year and relatively little waste.

Soup to Nonsense:

Wrapping a Package Is Simple If You Allow Yourself All Day

By Jane Goodsell

WRAPPING A PACKAGE for mailing is one of those tasks that sounds deceptively easy—like making a million dollars or putting a two-year-old to bed. Actually—for me, anyway—it is a project so complex that I often think it might be simpler to deliver a package in person to Dayton, Ohio, than to send it through the mails.

In my daydreams, I envision a drawer containing wrapping paper, string, gummed tape, labels, scissors and a pen that writes. In my house, I have a drawer like that. That is, it's supposed to contain these things but it doesn't. (At the moment, it's stuffed with photographs that are supposed to be pasted in an album, but aren't.)

The first step is to find a box the right size for the article I wish to wrap. We have quite a few boxes kicking around our house, and I usually manage to turn up one or two. If I want to send off a charm bracelet, I find grocery cartons and shoe boxes. If the object to be wrapped is a bedroom slipper left behind by a houseguest, I find handkerchief boxes and grocery cartons.

It is, of course, possible to construct your own box out of corrugated paper, providing you have corrugated paper. If you do have it, you'll find that it bends slightly more easily than sheetrock.

The next step is to find the gummed tape. This is by no means easy but, since ours is in a rather large container, I usually do find it. After looking for it in all the likely places, like drawers and cupboards, I find it in the bathroom or under somebody's bed.

"Who last used the string?" I ask. Nobody, it seems, has ever used the string. On my second or third frenzied trip about the house, I don't ask questions. I simply scream at anybody who comes into sight. "Why don't you ever put things back where they belong? If I ever catch you using my things again. . . ." The child wisely melts out of sight.

EVENTUALLY, I find paper and string. I don't find the ball of string or the package of paper, but I do find a package wrapped in paper and tied with string.

It would be nice to find somebody to hold a finger on the string while I knot it, but I manage alone because I am not on speaking terms with anybody in the house. The string is loose and wobbly, which makes me furious at the children for being uncooperative.

When my husband comes home, he asks what I've been doing all day, and I tell him. He looks shocked. "All day?" he asks. "Just wrapping a package?"

Youth Opportunity Centers Aid 3.5 Million in 3 Years

Youth Opportunity Centers in little more than three years of operation have served almost 3.5 million young people.

From February 1965 through June 30 of this year, 3,495,100 persons between 16 through 21 years were served. More that 878,000 were placed in jobs, Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz reports.

In addition to those finding employment, 101,200 young persons were referred to on-the-job training opportunities; 30,800 to apprenticeship; 64,600 to the Job Corps, and 205,100 to the Neighborhood Youth Corps.

The Dept. of Labor, through the federal-state system of employment service offices, established 171 centers in three years to help combat unemployment among youth, particularly disadvantaged minorities.

Solutions in Sight:

Foster Care Crisis Spurred by Neglect

THE ANTAGONISM of many people toward homeless children and the unwillingness of many communities to spend the necessary funds for their care are perpetuating the crisis in foster care. And these attitudes persist despite documented examples of the "miracles" that can result from increased preventive and rehabilitative services.

The problems and suggested solutions are analyzed in Orphans of the Living: The Foster Care Crisis, by Richard Haitch, a new Public Affairs pamphlet.

Foster care, Haitch explains, was originally intended as temporary care "for children whose parents were enveloped by a sudden crisis." Today, in large measure, it has become a service for the neglected. Of the more than 300,000 children who are wards of public and private welfare agencies, "upward of 100,000 . . . are probably 'trapped' in foster care—have little or no hope of rejoining their parents—and are suffering severe personality damage as a result." But this damage can be repaired through the loving care of foster parents or the proper help of good group homes or homelike institutions.

Haitch summarizes the factors that hamper efforts to provide adequate care and rehabilitative services:

- A rising child population.
- A shifting population, in which minority-group families are flooding into major cities. When family breakdowns occur, the new migrants, still comparative strangers in town, turn in large numbers to welfare agencies for help.
- Serious shortages of professional social workers.
- A grave shortage of foster parents.
- Crowding in temporary shelters.
- Resistance in communities to accepting foster children.
- A universal lack of money to pay for essential services.

He discusses in some detail the critical shortage of both social workers and foster parents, and reminds the reader that even when qualified foster parents are available, some children are usually passed up. Among them are infants and handicapped children, because they need so much attention; teenagers, who are likely to be hard to manage; hostile youngsters, who require extraordinary patience; retarded youngsters; Negro, Puerto Rican, Indian, or Mexican children of any age, who tend to be shunned by whites and for whom there are never enough foster parents from the minority groups.

These "leftover" foster children are crowding temporary institutions, and the term "temporary" is often meaningless. "In New York," Haitch reports, "temporary care . . . is defined as up to three months. Many of the children in the shelters there have remained three years. In smaller cities and towns, the local jail is sometimes used to house foster children when there is no room in the shelter."

Experts consulted by Haitch recommended these solutions among others:

1. Prevention—which means the rehabilitation of the family—is high on the list. Through the use of a variety of health and social services, within and outside the home, the family does not have to be broken up.

For example, in one community that stressed professional preventive efforts, "in four years the total of children in foster care was cut from 551 to 248. The county spent $31,835 more in salaries [for nine trained, professional social workers to replace seven untrained workers], but it saved $93,466 in foster care costs."

2. Increase the supply of social workers by adding to the number of accredited schools of social work and raise salaries. This would make more effective preventative help available.

3. Use foster parents as "partners" of social agencies. Since traditional recruiting has brought a minimum of satisfactory foster parents, there is a growing feeling that the answer may lie in stressing a more professional role for foster parents.

4. Establish more group care facilities, which has often proved particularly helpful for some teen-agers. In some cases, psychiatric shelters may be necessary.

5. Encourage adoptions where children have been abandoned in foster care.

6. Increase federal aid to communities for child welfare services.

With Lesser Lead:

Democrats Expected To Hold Senate Edge

coattails could affect many races, as well as the make-up of the next Senate. Wallace votes also could have an impact on some contests. But ticket-splitting has become widespread in recent elections. Millions of voters ignore party lines in balloting for the presidency and other offices.

Democrats are expected to retain seats in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Hawaii and the Carolinas. Republicans appear "safe" in Colorado, Illinois, Kansas, New York, North Dakota and Utah. Sure-bet seekers might take Senators Russell B. Long (D-La.) and George D. Aiken (R-Vt.). Neither has opposition.

The Outlook

Based on a number of individual reports, this was the outlook on a variety of Senate battlegrounds just prior to the voting:

Highest Democratic hopes for Republican seats are in California, where former state controller Alan Cranston is shown ahead, and in Iowa, where Gov. Harold E. Hughes is running well.

Cranston's opponent is right-winger Max Rafferty, who beat Senate Minority Whip Thomas H. Kuchel in the primary. A number of GOP leaders have shied away from Rafferty.

Hughes, after an unprecedented three terms as a Democratic governor in a nominally Republican state, faces State Sen. David Stanley in a battle for the seat being given up by Republican Bourke B. Hickenlooper.

Democrats also are given a chance to win Republican seats in New Hampshire and Kentucky.

Popular, three-time Democratic Gov. John W. King takes on Sen. Norris Cotton in New Hampshire and Miss Katherine Peden, former state commerce commissioner, opposes Republican Marlow W. Cook in Kentucky.

Republicans, on the other hand, are likely to gain a Democratic seat in Arizona, where Barry M. Goldwater is seeking to return to the Senate. His opponent is Roy Elson, administrative aide to retiring Sen. Carl Hayden (D).

In Alaska, Democrat Mike Gravel, former speaker of the state legislature, is in a nip-and-tuck race with Anchorage banker Elmer Rasmuson. The outlook is clouded by a write-in campaign for Sen. Ernest Gruening, defeated by Gravel in the primary.

Both Democratic Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff, who is seeking a second term, and his Republican opponent, former Rep. Edwin H. May, Jr., have voiced confidence of victory in Connecticut and the race is regarded as extremely close.

In Florida, ultra-conservative Rep. Edward J. Gurney (R) reportedly has at least a $500,000 campaign "blitz" going in a effort to beat former Democratic Gov. LeRoy Collins, for a seat being vacated by Sen. George A. Smathers (D). It's close.

Battle in Idaho

Still another tight contest is going on in Idaho, where Sen. Frank Church is opposed in his bid for a third term by GOP Rep. George V. Hansen.

Sen. Birch Bayh (D) is considered slightly ahead of his Republican opponent, William D. Ruckelshaus, a state legislator. The result could hinge on Indiana's presidential vote.

Maryland has a three-way contest. Incumbent Sen. Daniel B Brewster (D) is challenged by Rep. Charles McC. Mathias, a moderate Republican, and independent George P. Mahoney, a frequent loser as a Democratic candidate for various offices in the past. Mahoney is likely to hurt Brewster more than Mathias.

Lt. Gov. Thomas F. Eagleton, who defeated Sen. Edward V. Long in the Democratic primary in Missouri, is locked in close battle with GOP Rep. Thomas B. Curtis.

Tight Races

In Nevada, Sen. Alan Bible (D) is seeking his third full term against the bid of Republican Lt. Gov. Edward Fike. This is another race in which both sides have predicted victory.

Ohio offers a tight race between former Rep. John J. Gilligan, who defeated Democratic Sen. Frank J. Lausche in the primary, and State Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe.

Two incumbents, Democratic Senators A. S. Mike Monroney of Oklahoma and Wayne Morse of Oregon, are gripped in races no one seems willing to call. Monroney's opponent is former Gov. Henry Bellmon and Morse faces state Rep. Robert W. Packwood.

Democrats Favored

Democratic Sen. Joseph S. Clark of Pennsylvania is believed to be leading Rep. Richard S. Schweiker, a moderate Republican, in seeking a third term.

In South Dakota, Democratic Sen. George McGovern, has clung to the lead over former Gov. Archie M. Gubbrud in a poll sponsored by three newspapers, despite the state's heavy Republican leanings.

In Washington, Democratic Sen. Warren G. Magnuson is favored for his fifth term over state Sen. Jack Metcalf, a conservative who appeals for support through a national right-wing network.

In Wisconsin, Democratic Sen. Gaylord Nelson has a lead, according to reports and polls, over Jerris Leonard, a GOP state senator with a heavily-financed campaign.

Price Fixing Charges Hit 15 Drug Firms

New York—A federal grand jury has charged 15 Dutch, German, American and British firms with violating U.S. antitrust laws through an international conspiracy to raise the prices and monopolize sales of two widely-used drugs.

The indictments, sought by the Justice Dept., also accused the combine of conspiring to defraud the U.S. government on purchases from federal stockpiles.

The drugs are quinine and quinidine, both products of the bark of South America's cinchona tree. Quinine is used to treat malaria and other diseases; quinidine is used in treating many heart ailments.

U.S. firms named in the indictment are the Rexall Drug & Chemical Co., Mead, Johnson & Co., and R. W. Greeff & Co., an importing firm.

One count of the indictment dealt with the sale by competitive bidding of more than 13.8 million ounces of cinchona products from U.S. stockpiles. The indictment said the companies agreed not to compete with the Netherlands firm of Nedchem in the bidding. After Nedchem made its purchases, the drugs allegedly were divided among the defendant companies.

WARM WELCOME from Pennsylvania steelworkers is given Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D) as he campaigns at plant gates in Beaver County. The labor-endorsed senator is running for a third term.

Gift Wrap Sales To Aid Refugees

The United States Committee for Refugees is now taking orders in its annual "Tree of Life" gift wrap program to help feed and shelter refugees. The program is endorsed by the AFL-CIO.

The committee sells, for $3 each, kits that contain 10 large sheets of colorful gift wrap, 10 matching gift cards, heavy brown wrapping paper for mailing, sealing tape and address labels.

Orders should be mailed to: United States Committee for Refugees, c/o Irving Trust Co., Box 1000—Grand Central Post Office, New York, N.Y. 10017.

Florida Labor Gives Support To Democrats

Orlando, Fla.—Delegates to the Florida AFL-CIO convention gave Democratic presidential candidate Hubert H. Humphrey an 87 percent edge in a poll during the four-day meeting here.

The convention also voted unanimous endorsement of former Gov. LeRoy Collins for the U.S. Senate over Republican Rep. Edward J. Gurney.

Collins, who is running on his long liberal record and a state administration friendly to labor, is seeking the Senate seat of Democrat George A. Smathers, who is retiring.

Collins Cheered

Collins was cheered by the delegates as he thanked the convention for its support.

Convention keynote speaker Sen. Robert C. Byrd (D-W.Va.) traced the accomplishment of the Democratic party and its efforts to gain progress through social legislation aligned with the aims of labor.

Resolutions adopted by the convention included a proposal to investigate the possibility of establishing a group auto insurance program in Florida in an effort to lower rates without affecting coverage.

The delegates also voted to work for legislation to improve state regulations for on-the-job safety and for improvements in workmen's compensation. They also supported the boycott now in effect by the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee and the embattled newspaper unions in the strike against the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner.

Senate Poverty Report Urges $2 Wage Floor

A $2-an-hour minimum wage and jobs for all who are able to work headed a Senate Labor subcommittee's recommendations for winning the nation's war on poverty.

Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), the subcommittee chairman, charged that the present welfare system merely "imprisons millions of recipients in our slums" and is "helping to keep people trapped in poverty as a way of life."

The elderly poor and others unable to work need a higher income the Clark subcommittee said whether through an expanded social security system or other means.

But "employment should be the principal means through which households headed by adults under 65 escape from poverty," the subcommittee concluded. It said every American able to work "should be guaranteed a job which pays a living wage."

Even if all current job openings were filled, the report said, there would be "a job gap of at least 2.4 million between the number of persons able and willing to work and the total number of jobs."

To close this gap, the subcommittee said, requires both a high level of economic growth and a "massive employment program" divided equally between public and private employers.

In the public sector, it suggested a start of 300,000 socially useful jobs the first year of the program, 600,000 the second year and 1.2 million the third and fourth year.

It urged that these efforts be matched in the private sector through incentives to employers to recruit, hire and train the unemployed poor—along the lines of the JOBS program being carried out by the National Alliance of Businessmen.

To make it possible for mothers who are heads of families to choose employment over welfare, the report said, there must be both adequate day care for their children and "jobs which pay living wages."

The report warned that full-time employment is no guarantee that a family will not be poor if wages remain inadequate.

At present price levels, it said, the minimum wage should be increased to $2 an hour—and to a higher level if inflation continues.

For the millions of children caught in the poverty cycle— an estimated 12.5 million—the subcommittee stressed that "high-quality education is the surest route out of poverty."

The report warned that the present level of anti-poverty programs is inadequate to make more than a dent in the number of poor. But the United States has the resources, the subcommittee said, to completely eliminate poverty over a 10-to-20 year period "if we choose to do so."

Teachers' Leader Backs Humphrey

Teachers Pres. David Selden has endorsed Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey for president because he is "firmly committed to all the things that AFT is for," including increased federal aid to education.

In his column in "The American Teacher," AFT's official monthly publication, Selden urged all of the union's members to vote for Humphrey and liberal candidates for Congress.

Musicians Win 4-Week Strike In Baltimore

Baltimore—Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro (D) stepped into stalemated contract negotiations here to help the Musicians achieve terms ending a four-week strike against the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra.

Orchestra members struck Sept. 27 and returned for their first rehearsal Oct. 28 with Brian Priestman, newly appointed resident conductor. They voted 60-18 to accept the compromise proposal worked out by the mayor.

The new three-year pact provides wage increases of $25 a week this season, another $25 next season and an additional $10 the third season. Management also agreed to contribute $17,000 a year to a pension plan whose terms will be worked out by AFM Local 40-543 members and the symphony association.

Salaries will climb from $150 a week to $175 for a 34-week playing season this year; to $200 next year and $210 the third year, both for a 38-week season.

Baltimore was one of the last major cities to win a pension plan for symphony musicians. Union Pres. Victor Fuentealba said the mayor intervened at the union's request shortly after helping settle a 23-day walkout of union bus drivers.

IN SEATTLE, as in cities and towns throughout the nation, eager hands welcome the Democratic vice presidential candidate, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie.

Accountants Hail Unions For Fiscal Reporting

Annual fiscal reports of unions have won the praise of the nation's leading accountants. Moreover, some reports have been termed model documents after which corporations could pattern their own reports.

Writing in the monthly Management Accounting magazine, Paul W. Demarest said "corporate accountants could take a lesson from the biennial report of the AFL-CIO."

Conversely, "inconsistencies and inadequacies of corporate annual reports" have been frequently mentioned in accounting circles, he notes. Demarest is an accountant with Fruehauf Corp.

The annual reports of unions Demarest noted, are filed with the secretary of labor within 90 days after the end of each fiscal year. Any union member may obtain copies of annual reports of his union or any other union on request.

The fiscal documents filed with the Labor Dept. include:

- Annual receipts listed by source, such as dues, fines, work permits.
- All disbursements—including salaries and other expenses listed by name and total amount for each officer and employe receiving $10,000 or more per year.
- Loans to officers over $250, listing name, security given and purpose of loan.
- Assets and liabilities detailed to current, fixed and separated categories as cash, land and other holdings.

Internal Reports

The government reports are supplemented by internal reports stipulated by each union's charter, Demarest points out.

Monthly, quarterly, semi-annual, annual and biennial financial statements are prepared at local and nationl headquarters of each union.

Audits also are made semi-annually by certified public accounting firms and these reports are available to members.

Demarest says that the union member can be confident that, with rare exception, the financial transactions of his union are handled in an ethical manner and to his advantage.

He also refers to a section of the report which corporation accountants often omit under similar circumstances:

"AFL-CIO auditors during the period July 1, 1963 through June 30, 1965 found that two local unions were guilty of financial irregularities . . . the bonding company was notified . . . the officers responsible were immediately removed from office . . . immediate recovery was obtained . . ."

"Such precise detail of action taken to protect interested parties is seldom part of the typical corporate statement, where similar unfortunate events do occur," Demarest observed.

Civil Liberties Group Pledged Labor Support

The AFL-CIO has pledged its continuing support of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House in a letter sent to Mary Alice Baldinger, its executive director.

The Clearing House is a 20-year-old coalition of leaders in labor, civil rights, religion and education created to stimulate public discussion and concern about civil rights and civil liberties.

It also collects and focuses attention on important articles, books and papers covering the two subjects.

The letter hailed the organization's monthly forums and annual conference for bringing together differing views for public scrutiny "in a manner which has strengthened the cause of freedom in our nation."

Mrs. Baldinger also was praised for her "personal dedication" to the organization—a dedication that "has won for you the deep respect of your colleagues both in and out of the trade union movement."

The letter which accompanied an AFL-CIO contribution to the Clearing House was jointly signed by Dir. of Education Walter G. Davis, Dir. of Civil Rights Donald Slaiman and Thomas E. Harris, AFL-CIO associate general counsel.

Party Shift Forecast:

21 Governorships at Stake In Closely-Fought Elections

publican Jack Williams. Both held 44 percent with 12 percent undecided in one major survey.

But Williams has two coattails to ride in his bid for re-election. Both Nixon and former presidential candidate Barry Goldwater have generated much Republican feeling in the state.

Arkansas—Democrat Marion H. Crank has shown more strength than was earlier anticipated, although Republican Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller continues to enjoy a wide popularity with voters despite problems in his first-term administration.

Delaware — Democratic incumbent Charles L. Terry, Jr., whose campaign has been keyed to the "law and order" issue, is given the lead over Republican Russell W. Peterson. And a heavy Wallace vote should favor Terry.

Illinois—Gov. Samuel H. Shapiro is bucking a GOP trend that is evident in the state, and Republican Richard B. Ogilvie appears to have overtaken Shapiro's early lead.

Shapiro's campaign also has been sapped by dropout liberals in the Democratic party. His main hope lies with a shift to normal Democratic patterns in the populous sections of the state.

Indiana — Democrat Robert L. Rock, the current lieutenant governor, and Republican Richard C. Bodine are running a close race. Rock was leading in a late poll, 42 to 41 percent. Although Indiana is expected to go into the Nixon column, the Democrats still can pull out the governorship as was the case in 1960.

Iowa—A return to normal Republican voting patterns appears to have hurt Democrat Paul Franzenburg. The race had been fairly close until a mid-October poll put Republican Robert Ray 10 points ahead.

Kansas — Incumbent Democrat Robert Docking was an underdog two years ago. He is in the same position this year as Republican Rick Harman has picked up momentum.

Harman has made an issue of taxes, the very campaign theme Docking used to unseat the Republican governor in 1966.

Missouri — Re-election appears certain for incumbent Democrat Warren E. Hearnes, who has won much Republican support in the past with his conservative image.

Missouri has not elected a GOP governor since 1940 and Republican Lawrence K. Roos, a liberal, is not expected to change the trend.

Montana—Democrat Forrest H. Anderson, now state attorney general, has overtaken incumbent Republican Tim H. Babcock by most indicators.

The main issue in the campaign was the 3 percent sales tax proposed by Babcock, which Anderson vowed to veto if passed by the state legislature.

New Hampshire—The governorship is expected to revert to Republican rule with incumbent Gov. John W. King retiring and running for the Senate.

Walter R. Peterson, Jr., (R), state house speaker, is favored over Emile R. Bussiere, who is not well-known throughout the state.

New Mexico—The campaign of incumbent Republican David F. Cargo has sputtered. Democratic challenger Fabian Chavez, Jr., apparently wiped away Cargo's early lead in his bid for a second term. Chavez was reported ahead by a Republican-sponsored poll.

Cargo and Chavez are look-alikes in political philosophy. They both oppose state "right-to-work" laws and favor school improvements funded by state income taxes, not sales taxes.

Cargo, a Republican maverick, also maintains rapport with many Spanish-Americans and trade unionists.

North Carolina—Lt. Gov. Robert W. Scott has gained remarkably after a slow start on Republican Congressman James C. Gardner. Some polls now have Scott ahead in his attempt to retain the governorship for the Democrats.

While Gardner courted the Wallace voters, Scott cultivated his strength among the rural regular Democrats.

North Dakota — Democrat William L. Guy has maintained a lead in his bid for a fourth term in the state house throughout the campaign over Republican Robert P. McCarney.

Despite Nixon's popularity in the state, McCarney has been unable to heal a state GOP party split since his surprise victory in the primary. It is unlikely that McCarney can overtake Guy even with a GOP landslide.

Rhode Island—The big issue in the gubernatorial race is over the state income tax proposed by incumbent Gov. John H. Chafee. Democrat Frank Licht, former superior court judge and strongest candidate Chafee has faced since first being elected in 1962, opposes it. Licht favors a tax on investments.

Chafee can be unseated if the Democratic drive to turn the gubernatorial race into a referendum on the income tax issue proves successful.

South Dakota—Republicans are expected to retain the state house with Frank Farrar, three-term attorney general, as Nixon feeling runs strong. Republican incumbent Nils A. Boe is ineligible for another term. Democrat Robert M. Chamberlin got 46 percent of the vote two years ago against Boe, but he is expected to do no better this year.

Factionalism in the Democratic party has hurt Chamberlin.

Texas—Lt. Gov. Preston Smith (D) has gained steadily in popularity since late September. The closing of ranks of conservative and liberal Democrats behind Humphrey further helped Smith widen his lead over Republican Paul Eggers.

Nixon's popularity has declined in Texas. This also has dragged down Eggers' chances of taking the governorship, now held by Democrat John B. Connally who did not seek re-election.

Utah—Democratic incumbent Calvin L. Rampton is tabbed as an easy winner for re-election, despite an expected heavy vote for Nixon.

Rampton built up a strong lead over Republican opponent Carl W. Buehner and has maintained it throughout the campaign. In his first four-year term, Rampton proved himself an able governor. His promotion of tourism and efforts to recruit new industry won him wide popularity.

Vermont—The strength of three-term Democratic Gov. Philip H. Hoff is considered not enough to keep the state from reverting to its normal Republicanism, although Lt. Gov. John J. Daley has run a strong campaign.

Hoff, a liberal, was the state's first Democratic governor since 1854.

Both Daley and his Republican opponent, Deane C. Davis, are more conservative than Hoff. Many liberal Democrats have been cool to Daley.

Washington—Atty. Gen. John J. O'Connell has gained remarkably on incumbent Gov. Daniel J. Evans. and the race is now classified as a tossup. Evans was plagued by a party split. He has lost popularity with conservative Republicans—many of whom are Wallace supporters.

West Virginia — Although Republicans have a strong candidate in Rep. Arch A. Moore, Jr., their chances of taking over the governorship after eight years of Democratic rule are doubtful.

Democrat James Sprouse has been running stronger than expected despite a divided state party. Sprouse also had been burdened by corruption charges against a former Democratic governor.

Wisconsin—Even with a well-organized and energetic campaign, Democrat Bronson C. LaFollette is still the underdog as Election Day nears.

Incumbent Republican Warren P. Knowles, who has been using a low-key campaign, is expected to benefit further by Nixon's strength in the state.

TALKING POLITICS at construction sites around the nation is no problem for Gene Muskie, a member of Ironworkers' Local 433 in Riverside, Calif. Here he urges three Washington, D.C., workers to help get out the vote for Vice Pres. Humphrey and Gene's brother, Sen. Edmund Muskie.

Air Line Pilots Move Office to Washington

The Air Line Pilots announced that ALPA executive offices have been moved from Chicago to the Munsey Bldg., 1329 E Street N.W., Washington, D.C. 20004. The new telephone number is 202-347-2211. Other offices remain in Chicago.

Some Gains Foreseen:

GOP Drive Falters In Bid to Win House

tip the balance and bring the Republicans close to a House majority.

Regardless of which party controls the House, conservatives of both parties will remain the largest single voting bloc.

This alliance, made up of most Republicans and most southern Democrats, is a shifting, changing coalition. Votes can be weaned away by a new President with a full basket of political capital and patronage. Other votes are influenced by a congressman's reading of voter attitudes—the elusive "mood" of the nation.

Coalition Guides

Party shifts will be only a rough guide to the potential strength of the conservative coalition in the 91st Congress.

Thus it would be a significant liberal gain if either James A. Mackay or Charles L. Weltner, both former congressmen, defeated Republican incumbents in Georgia. But it would be a ho-hum change if Wallace Democrats ousted several Goldwater Republicans in Alabama.

The defeat of liberal Democrat Dante B. Fascell in Florida would be a serious setback; the defeat of South Carolina Democrat John L. McMillan would be only a minor vote shift.

Redistricting and retirement of veteran incumbents will probably be responsible for more party shifts in the new House than the coattails of presidential standard-bearers. And more Democratic than Republican seats are endangered for these reasons.

The 12 eastern states, incorporating the populous mid-Atlantic region as well as New England, are most vulnerable to Republican gains because the Democrats held on to most marginal seats in the 1966 congressional elections. The area now has 74 Democratic, 48 Republican congressmen.

Eastern Gains

The GOP is likely to pick up seats in New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, with a good chance of gains in Pennsylvania and Maryland.

In return, the Democrats are favored to take over at least one Republican seat in New York and one in West Virginia, with possibilities elsewhere. But the overall shifts are almost certain to add up to a GOP plus. If the net Republican gain in the East is more than 8, Republican strength in the next House will probably be greater than most observers anticipate.

The 13 southern states now have 90 Democratic congressmen to 29 for the Republicans.

There will be shifts both ways, but little if any change in the overall party division.

A handful of individual races will be of much more significance in judging the impact of the election.

It would be a big liberal plus if the two former liberal Democratic congressmen from Georgia regained their seats, if a liberal Democrat won election from the Norfolk-Portsmouth area in Virginia and if the hard-campaigning Democratic candidate in Virginia suburbs of Washington, D.C., managed to upset conservative Republican Joel T. Broyhill.

If, instead, the Democratic assistant majority leader, Hale Boggs were upset in Louisiana, Fascell beaten in Florida and Democratic moderates unseated while conservatives were re-elected, the setback would be serious.

The 12 midwestern states now send 80 Republicans and only 45 Democrats to the House.

Republicans are aiming at several of the 1964 Democratic districts which held out against the 1966 GOP comeback. An Indiana redistricting makes political predictions there somewhat hazardous, but the GOP is making a strong bid to unseat several Democratic incumbents.

If they can be turned back without a gain in Indiana, the regional congressional breakdown will probably be about the same. While Republicans are threatening to pick up a couple of seats in other states, Democrats have some hopes of their own.

An Ohio redistricting resulted in the matching of two veteran incumbents, 55-year-old Democrat Charles A. Vanik and 83-year-old Republican Frances P. Bolton. Since Vanik's former district remains safely Democratic, this close race is a chance for a Democratic pickup.

Symington Leads

Likewise, reports from Missouri give a slight edge to James W. Symington, son of the popular Democratic senator, in his bid to take over the St. Louis area district long held by Republican Rep. Thomas B. Curtis, the GOP's senatorial candidate this year.

Moving westward, Republicans are making a strong bid to pick up seats in California, Hawaii, Montana and Washington to reduce the region's present 38-31 Democratic majority in the House.

In each case, however, the GOP candidate has to oust an incumbent congressman. And more money has been won than lost in political wagers by those who go by the rule, "in a close contest, bet the incumbent."

The chief GOP targets are Democrats Richard T. Hanna in California, Arnold Olsen in Montana, Lloyd Meeds in Washington and one of the two Hawaii seats. Secondary prospects include New Mexico's two Democratic congressmen.

Hawaii is unique in that it is the only state in which the two House seats are filled in an at-large election. Both incumbents, Spark M. Matsunaga and Patsy Mink are popular, proven vote-getters and the state is expected to give Humphrey its presidential votes and certain to re-elect Democratic Sen. Daniel Inouye.

Hawaii Outlook

The fly in the Democratic ointment is the fact that Honolulu's popular Republican mayor, Neal S. Blaisdell, is one of the GOP's two congressional candidates.

Under the best of circumstances, the election of 435 congressmen is hard to predict. Both the Democratic House gains in 1964 and the Republican comeback in 1966 exceeded the pre-election consenus of political observers.

This year, there is the added uncertainty of whether Wallace supporters will revert to normal voting patterns for other offices on the ballot.

But the strong impression is that the presidential candidates will have only a minimal impact on House elections.

Coattails this political season are shorter than ever.

GRAPE STRIKERS and their supporters picket Nixon-Agnew headquarters in Washington, D.C., to protest Richard M. Nixon's mistaken criticism of the California table grape boycott as unlawful. The pickets include Pres. J. C. Turner, center, of the Greater Washington AFL-CIO. Turner noted that the United Farm Workers turned to the boycott when California growers refused to recognize their union or bargain with it.

Randolph Rallies Humphrey Support In Network Appeal to Negro Voters

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph called on black Americans to turn out at the polls in support of Vice Pres. Humphrey—the presidential candidate "who is equal to the great challenges facing America."

Randolph, speaking on a 30-city radio network, termed this year's election the most critical test of American democracy since 1876, when "a white backlash swept the nation" and ushered in a period of suppression of Negroes.

Humphrey "was in the forefront of the civil rights fight when that fight was still a lonely, unpopular, isolated struggle," Randolph recalled.

He termed the Vice President "a candidate around whom working people can rally with enthusiasm, for he has been a friend of labor in its most difficult hours. . . . He has understood, certainly better than any other candidate, that economic justice, elimination of poverty and the welfare of the nation depend upon a free, fully open, strong and growing trade union movement."

Bayard Rustin, chief organizer of the 1963 civil rights march and himself a noted Negro leader, introduced Randolph on the special program.

It was Randolph, he noted, who induced Pres. Roosevelt to issue the historic wartime order barring discrimination in employment, who had an important role in Pres. Truman's order ending segregation in the armed forces, and who was the "father" of the 1963 march.

Randolph said he was endorsing a presidential candidate for only the second time in his life because a victory for reaction this year threatens "the social and economic progress that black and white workers had struggled for generations to win."

He warned against the "demagogic" counsel that black Americans "go fishing" on election day. "Political neutrality is not an option for men of good will in 1968," Randolph said.

"All Americans who yearn for a world of peace" can rally with enthusiasm around Humphrey, Randolph said, "for he was working for peace and disarmament long before these became popular slogans. And he has understood that real peace depends upon the strengthening of democratic institutions throughout the world and the development of international peace-keeping machinery."

Randolph spoke of Humphrey also as "a man I have known and admired for many years and with whom I have worked in many facets of the fight for human dignity. Of his dedication to this fight, I have an intimate appreciation and profound respect."

Randolph, the nation's pioneer civil rights leader, concluded his broadcast by declaring:

"I therefore, with great satisfaction, endorse and vigorously recommend the candidacy of Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey."

In his endorsement message, Randolph warned that a "victory for racism and reaction at the polls in 1968 would not bring peace and tranquility to our nation. It would bring frustration and chaos."

Wage Panel Named For Puerto Rico

Three union officials have been named by the Labor Dept. to committees that will review minimum wage rates for workers in Puerto Rico brought under the Fair Labor Standards Act by the law's 1966 amendments.

They are Clothing Workers' Vice Pres. Valentin J. T. Wertheimer; James E. Noe, director of research, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and Friedrick Thursch, assistant to the president of the Seafarers.

Indiana Labor Shapes Intensive Vote Drive

Indianapolis—The Indiana AFL-CIO set its sights on electing candidates friendly to workers in the Nov. 5 election and securing improvements in state labor legislation.

Nearly 800 delegates to the state body's sixth biennial convention heard speaker after speaker appeal for a record turnout of union members and their families at the polls.

Keynote speaker Joseph P. Molony, Steelworkers' vice president, said the election of the Humphrey-Muskie ticket and liberals to Congress "is the only hope of heading off an onslaught of anti-labor legislation next year."

Sen. Birch Bayh (D-Ind.), up for re-election, appealed for a "strong labor turnout" in every part of the state. Sen. Vance Hartke (D-Ind.) traced Bayh's "outstanding" voting record on behalf of labor's programs.

Philip Willkie, a Rushville, Ind. banker and son of the late Wendell Willkie, GOP presidential candidate in 1940, praised labor's contributions to the nation and warned against votes for "anti-labor" George Wallace.

Other speakers included Rep. Andrew Jacobs, Jr. (D-Ind.), Lt. Gov. Robert E. Roth, Democratic candidate for governor, and AFL-CIO COPE Dir. Al Barkan.

There were no endorsements since these were made in June by delegates to the Indiana COPE convention, representing 285,000 union members in all parts of the state.

Endorsed are Bayh, Roth, Democratic Representatives Ray J. Madden, John Brademas, J. Edward Roush, Lee H. Hamilton and Jacobs, plus Democratic candidates for six other House seats: Edward Kelly, Robert Ford, Phil Bayt, Eldon Tipton, William Norton and Wayne Kent.

The convention adopted a 15-point state legislative program that calls for increases in workmen's compensation and unemployment benefits, a state labor relations law and improvements in an existing prevailing wage law.

Membership Drive

Delegates also shaped an extensive drive to increase affiliation in the federation with Vice Pres. Jacob R. Roberts assigned to direct it.

Pres. Willis N. Zagrovich was elected without opposition to his first full term in office. He had been acting president since the resignation of Dallas W. Sells earlier this year. Sec.-Treas. Max F. Wright and Roberts were re-elected to their sixth terms.

Sixteen executive board members were elected after the convention adopted a constitutional change increasing the board from 12 to that number.

On Eve of Vote:

Surging Humphrey Drive Seen Key to 1968 Election

Alabama governor is regarded as a "spoiler," but the question remains whether he will draw most of his votes away from Humphrey or Nixon.

Also to be elected, besides the President and Vice President, are 34 U.S. senators, 21 of the 50 state governors and all 435 members of the House of Representatives. In addition, voters will choose members of state legislatures in 43 states and tens of thousands of local officials.

Unless a Republican tide develops to an extent far greater than expected, the outlook was for the Democrats to retain majority control of both houses of Congress. No matter who wins the presidency, however, the GOP may pick up 10 to 15 House seats, short of the 30 seats they need to capture control. The Democratic margin of 26 in the Senate also may be reduced with 23 of the party's seats up this year against only 11 for the Republicans. In addition, the GOP looked to add at least three more governorships to the 26 it now holds.

Caps Stunning Year

The Nov. 5 election will cap a year of stunning political developments that included Pres. Johnson's decision to remove himself from consideration for re-election as he sought a solution to the troubling war in Viet Nam.

The political year produced heart-rending tragedy, too, as one of the chief contenders for the Democratic nomination, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, fell to an assassin's bullet on the night of his victory in the California presidential primary.

The closeness of the presidential race and the presence of a strong third ticket raised the possibility that none of the candidates would win a clear victory on Nov. 5 and that the decision would be thrown into the House of Representatives.

The President and Vice President are chosen not by popular vote of the nation, but by electors apportioned among the states on the basis of population, with a majority of 270 electors needed for victory. Even if Wallace carries only four or five of the southern states generally conceded to him, this might be enough to prevent either Humphrey or Nixon from attaining the needed majority of 270 if the two were running close in other states.

The situation also created another possibility—that one of the candidates could trail the leader in the overall popular vote and yet put together enough close victories in the larger states to capture more than the required 270 electoral college votes.

For these reasons, both Humphrey and Nixon were concentrating the final stages of their campaigns in such populous states as New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Michigan and California.

These states, plus Texas, account for 227 Electoral College votes, and past performances alone dictate that a candidate must carry most of them to win.

It is in these key industrial states, particularly, that labor's all-out effort on behalf of Humphrey's candidacy has scored major gains for the Democratic candidate. In many of them, the get-out-the-vote efforts of COPE—the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education—could well spell the difference.

Other endorsements for Humphrey came from the widow of Dr. Martin Luther King and from the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, who succeeded to the presidency of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference following Dr. King's assassination last April, both of whom had hitherto refrained from backing any candidate. They exhorted Negro voters particularly to give their votes to the Democratic candidate.

Federation Pres. George Meany, the first public figure to urge Humphrey to seek the presidency, issued a final appeal to all workers to cast their votes for the Vice President, votes he said would be "as important to your future, the future of your family and the future of our country as any vote you have ever cast." (Story, Page 1.)

Organized labor's commitment to Humphrey, including the endorsement of nearly every international union president as well as the AFL-CIO itself, stems from the Vice President's life-long support and identification with the labor movement.

In contrast, Nixon throughout his public career has opposed basic labor goals and social progress measures, identifying himself with the big business interests that form the hard conservative core of the Republican party. And Wallace, while claiming to be a friend of the worker, actually has a record as governor of Alabama that identifies him not only as a die-hard segregationist, but also as an opponent of union organizing rights, workmen's compensation improvements, good schools, fair taxation, decent wages, etc.

In the final week of the campaign, Humphrey's drive for the presidency received a lift from the endorsement of Sen. Eugene McCarthy, a fellow Minnesotan who had opposed him for the Democratic nomination. McCarthy acknowledged, however, that the bulk of his supporters already had shifted their backing to Humphrey as the only candidate who offered a real hope of leading the nation to peace and continued social progress.

The surge in public support for the Vice President as the election drew near also was reflected in the shifting tactics of Nixon, his principal opponent, who began to engage in personal attacks on Humphrey. Earlier, the Republican candidate had maintained an aloof confidence, disdaining even to discuss the issues uppermost in the minds of the voters.

Nixon's Silence Hit

Humphrey has continued to set forth his program in his campaign speeches, assailing Nixon's silence on the issues and his refusal to engage in televised debate before the nation.

As election day approached, the Vice President was clearly gaining confidence in his own prospects for victory following a slow start after the late-August Democratic convention. And campaign contributions, which had been slow to arrive in the aftermath of the convention, were pouring into Democratic headquarters after every Humphrey broadcast and public appearance.

In the minds of every observer was the thought that Humphrey's candidacy seemed to be following the same pattern of a late shift in voter support that brought victory to Harry Truman in 1948 after the polls had predicted his defeat.

Meany Calls For Record Union Vote

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called on trade unions throughout the country to work vigorously for a record turnout of "crucial" labor votes on Election Day.

In a telegram addressed to all AFL-CIO affiliates, Meany described the AFL-CIO get-out-the-vote drive Tuesday as the factor "which can make 1968 a victory year."

"Never before has every vote been so crucial," the telegram said. "One day of hard work," Meany added, "means four years of continued progress."

CHEERS AND ENTHUSIASTIC CROWDS greet Vice Pres. Humphrey as he campaigns in Akron, O., to start the final week of his presidential campaign. Humphrey's hard-hitting stretch drive focused on the big industrial states whose electoral votes will be decisive on Nov. 5.

killing recessions" during the last Republican administration, when Nixon was in office. "Some of you have never had to search, without hope or without help, for a job that isn't there."

Ask your parents, Humphrey suggested, what it was like under a government hostile to unions and collective bargaining.

Reads the Record

"They will tell you," he said, "how the Democratic Party stood with the American worker, when no one else would stand by him."

Humphrey read the record of Nixon Republicans who fought federal aid to schools, who voted for anti-labor laws. He spoke of his and Muskie's program for improved social security.

"We will fight for fair tax reform, and we're committed to rebuild our cities to make them more livable," Humphrey pledged.

He spoke of the need for "a more equitable system of selective service—a draft system that is fair, the lottery system."

The Democratic candidate spoke with deep feeling of the quest for peace.

Again, he asked the voters to compare his record with that of Nixon.

"My record on slowing down the dangerous arms race is clear," Humphrey said.

Cites Arms Controls

"It is a record of public service. I helped establish the first United States arms control agency. I led the fight in the Senate for the nuclear test ban treaty, which protects you and your family from dangerous radioactive fallout in your food and your milk."

As President, Humphrey said, he would press for immediate ratification of the treaty to stop the further spread of nuclear weapons—which Nixon helped stall.

"I would take the dividends of peace and I would invest them in the works of peace and human renewal, right here in the United States where so much needs to be done."

The Republican candidate, Humphrey charged, "has never worked for peace in his public career."

The decision, Humphrey declared, rests with the American voters.

"You must decide what kind of President and Vice President you want."

progress and growth in jobs and payrolls and the drop in unemployment.

He added that "we have stemmed the tide of anti-democratic forces throughout the world. Because we had the courage to make hard choices and to stick with them, hundreds of millions of people in Asia can look forward to freedom and progress instead of slavery and despair."

There is still much to be done, Meany said, but the immediate job "is to do everything possible. . . . to secure the election of Humphrey and Muskie and the hundreds of candidates for Senate and House who support them."

And on Nov. 5, he concluded, the job is to vote for Humphrey and Muskie: "Your future, the future of our country is in your hands."

Razor-Thin Nixon Victory Produces Unclear Mandate

In 91st Congress:

House Unchanged As GOP Bid Fails

By David L. Perlman

America's voters, from Maine to Hawaii, smashed the hopes of the Republican Party for major gains in the House.

When the 91st Congress convenes in January, Democrats will have a 243-192 majority—only four less than their present margin.

They will elect the Speaker of the House, fill all committee chairmanships and name a majority of the members of each legislative committee.

Conservatives of both parties will continue to outnumber liberals in the House. But the conservative coalition will not be significantly stronger. The important House Education & Labor Committee remains firmly liberal. A Republican President will have to deal with Democratic congressional leaders to get action on his legislative programs.

That's not the way the GOP had planned it.

Republicans went into the election needing a pickup of 30 seats to control the House—and had confidently expected to at least come close to that figure.

Democrats did much better than any pre-election survey had indicated by winning most of the close ones—those House contests rated "toss-ups." They also held on to a few seats Republicans were strongly favored to pick up.

In all, Republicans won nine House districts previously held by Democrats, but lost five of their own congressional seats in return.

The GOP would have had to pick up at least nine seats in the East alone to come close to a House majority. They ended up with a net gain of only one.

They hoped to add a couple of seats in the Midwest to their already heavy congressional majority from that region. Instead, Democrats made a net gain of one.

In the West, GOP hopes of widespread pickups were again thwarted, except for the capture of New Mexico's two House seats.

The South proved safe for incumbents—including several liberal Democrats in hard re-election fights and four conservative Republicans facing strong opposition. The two GOP pickups—one each in North Carolina and Virginia—were in districts without an incumbent congressman on the ballot.

On a state-by-state basis, here is where party changes took place:

Connecticut—Republicans gained a seat that has swung back and forth between the parties by beating Donald J. Irwin in the 4th District. The GOP victor is Lowell P. Weicker, Jr., a state senator from Greenwich. New state lineup, 4 Democrats, 2 Republicans.

Indiana — Redistricting shoved two veteran congressmen of different parties into competition for a single seat. The district's past voting pattern was heavily Republican and Democrat J. Edward Roush lost as expected to Republican E. Ross Adair. The new 10th

Congress Stays With Democrats

By John M. Barry

Richard M. Nixon, the choice of the American voters to be their 37th President, emerged from the 1968 election with a leadership mandate clouded by the razor-thin margin of his victory and the failure of his party to achieve control of Congress.

Nixon won the election with the support of about 43 percent of the electorate, relying heavily on rural and suburban areas. He put together an Electoral College majority of 302, largely in the same southern, midwestern and western states that had formed the base of his strength in capturing the Republican nomination.

But the GOP fell far short of its goals in the legislative branch as it posted a net gain of only four House seats and four Senate seats —with one other still in doubt.

Thus Nixon, when he takes office next Jan. 20, will be the first man in 120 years to assume the presidency while confronted with a Congress firmly in the hands of the opposition party. He will take office with the lowest percentage of the popular vote since 1912 when Woodrow Wilson received 41.9 percent in winning a three-way race.

Despite GOP Gains:

Democrats Maintain Majority in Senate

By Duane Emme

The makeup of the Senate remained basically unchanged and liberal as a result of the election, despite some inroads by the Republicans.

The GOP scored a net gain of four seats, with one other seat still in doubt, to cut the Democratic margin from 63-37 to 58-42 or 59-41. Republicans needed to pick up 14 seats to win control.

With Democrats defending 23 of the 34 seats at stake, the Republicans had hoped to do better. Some party leaders looked for a pickup of at least 10 seats. On the other hand, the Democrats had hoped to lose not more than three.

The extent of the cut in the liberal margin, which has run about 10 votes less than the Democratic margin, is more difficult to determine.

Several of the newly-elected Republicans are clear-cut conservatives on the basis of past records. But several others are considered moderate-liberals.

The Republicans captured previously Democratic seats in Arizona, Florida, Maryland, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon and Pennsylvania. Democrats took GOP seats in California and Iowa.

These were some of the developments in Senate races:

In California, former state controller Alan Cranston defeated right-wing Republican Max Rafferty, who beat Senate Minority Whip Thomas H. Kuchel in the state's primary. Cranston is rated a lib-

Nation's Jobless Rate Holds Steady at 3.6%

By Robert B. Cooney

The national unemployment rate held steady at 3.6 percent in October, the Labor Dept. has reported.

An expected decline in unemployment was offset by a moderate rise in non-farm jobs, the report said.

The seasonally adjusted jobless rate of 3.6 percent was the same as in September and matches the average for the first 10 months of 1968. It is substantially below the 4.3 percent jobless rate of October 1967.

The number unemployed in October totaled 2.5 million, down seasonally by 100,000 from September.

On the employment side of the picture, the Labor Dept., reported an increase of 136,000 over the month to 68.5 million, seasonally adjusted. The rise would have been greater by some 40,000 but for the workers laid off payrolls due to a work stoppage in the coal industry, the report added.

The major job gains over the month came in these areas: 52,000 in manufacturing; 47,000 in wholesale and retail trade; 23,000 in services and 50,000 in state and local government.

The gain in the manufacturing sector was concentrated in the auto and steel industries, reflecting a

Meany Pledges Nixon Labor's Cooperation

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany assured Pres.-Elect Richard M. Nixon "of the cooperation of organized labor," in the "great American tradition" of backing the President.

To Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, Meany reaffirmed the trade union movement's great regard for him, wiring "you staged a magnificent fight and it has been our honor to have been among your supporters."

In a statement accompanying the wires, the AFL-CIO president pointed up labor's complete involvement in the campaign, declaring "we believe that our efforts contributed to the massive rejection of the George Wallace campaign of hate as well as to the election of liberal candidates of both parties to both houses of Congress."

The job facing the nation now, Meany said, is to "move forward" to solve the problems of the cities, poverty, education, health care and all the rest. "We intend to keep fighting for those goals," he said, and "we are awaiting the details of the programs to solve these problems that Pres.-Elect Nixon promised during his campaign."

To the "thousands of trade union volunteers," Meany sent his personal thanks, noting "they have contributed much to the great democratic process of this country . . . and have helped make America better."

eral, as was Kuchel.

In Iowa, three-term Democratic Gov. Harold E. Hughes won election in a nominally Republican state over state Sen. David Stanley, despite a strong margin for Richard Nixon.

This represents a distinct gain for liberals in the Senate since Hughes takes a seat being given up by Republican Bourke B. Hickenlooper, a conservative.

The seat still in doubt is that of veteran, liberal Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), who was locked in a deadheat with his challenger, State Rep. Robert W. Packwood. The race, to be decided by a count of absentee ballots, was still in doubt as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

In Pennsylvania, liberal Sen. Joseph S. Clark was edged out by Richard S. Schweiker, a 42-year-old four-term Republican congressman, who is rated as a moderate.

Thirty consecutive years of congressional service ended for Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D-Okla.) when he was defeated by former Gov. Henry Bellmon in a race that was as close as it was predicted to be.

Mathias Wins

In Maryland, Rep. Charles McC. Mathias, a moderate Republican, defeated incumbent Sen. Daniel B. Brewster, seeking a second term after previous service in the House. Mathias prevailed handily even though Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey narrowly carried the state. George P. Mahoney, an independent candidate, finished a poor third.

In Florida, ultra-conservative Rep. Edward J. Gurney (R) defeated former Democratic Gov. LeRoy Collins, for a seat being vacated by Sen. George A. Smathers (D).

Gurney benefitted from a large turnout for both Nixon and Wallace, who between them drew 70 percent of the presidential vote cast in the state.

As expected, Arizona swept conservative Barry Goldwater back into his old desk in the Senate. He defeated Roy Elson, administrative aide to retiring Sen. Carl Hayden (D).

In a race that was in doubt for some time, state Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe, a Republican, defeated former Rep. John J. Gilligan, who had ousted Sen. Frank J. Lausche in the primary. Lausche, however, had been a hard-line conservative.

Liberals Re-Elected

Republican hopes of defeating Democratic liberals in Idaho, Indiana and Wisconsin were punctured by voters even though Nixon carried all three states.

In Idaho, Sen. Frank Church handily turned back a challenge to his bid for a third term by GOP Rep. George V. Hansen, who had tried to win with a direct attack on Church's liberalism.

In Wisconsin, Sen. Gaylord Nelson won re-election by a better than 3-to-2 margin over Republican Jerris Leonard, a GOP state senator who put on a heavily-financed campaign.

Sen. Birch Bayh won a close decision in Indiana over his Republican opponent, William D. Ruckelshaus, a state legislator. GOP leaders had repeatedly claimed they would take the seat.

In Washington, Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D) easily won re-election to his fifth term over state Sen. Jack Metcalf, a conservative who appealed for support through a national right-wing network.

Democrats also handily retained seats in two states where races drew national attention:

Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.) won a second term by defeating former Rep. Edwin H. May, Jr., a conservative, in a race that had been considered "too close to call" by many predictors.

Sen. George C. McGovern (D-S.D.) won over former Gov. Archie M. Gubbrud despite a big Nixon victory. Republicans had combined throughout the state to make McGovern their "number one" target.

Lt. Gov. Thomas F. Eagleton is the new Democratic senator from Missouri, having defeated GOP Rep. Thomas B. Curtis. Eagleton topped incumbent Sen. Edward V. Long in the state's Democratic primary.

Democrat Mike Gravel, former speaker of the Alaska state legislature, is another new senator. He defeated Anchorage banker Elmer Rasmuson and also overcame a write-in campaign for Sen. Ernest Gruening, who had lost the primary.

In Nevada, Sen. Alan Bible (D) won his third full term, turning back the bid of Republican Lt. Gov. Edward Fike by a greater margin than had been expected.

Nation's Voters Approve Programs Worth Billions for Local Projects

Voters across the nation have authorized expenditures totaling more than $2.7 billion for programs ranging from pollution control, education and housing to transit systems and veterans' benefits.

The actions highlighted local referenda on the ballots of three-fourths of the states. Most of the balloting was on money matters.

The largest single financial proposal approved was an Illinois measure to allot $1 billion for air and water pollution control.

New Jersey voters okayed $990 million for education, low-cost housing and transportation.

Michigan, too, passed a bond issue to wage a battle against pollution. This one, also the largest in that state's history, provides $335 million for a 10-year program against water pollution.

Five jursidictions adjacent to Washington, D. C.,—one in Maryland and four in Virginia—voted to allow their governments to issue a total of $207.5 million in bonds for a mass transit system.

But Los Angeles voters rejected a $2.5 billion issue to build an 89-mile rapid transit railway system in an effort to curb automobile usage and smog.

In Virginia, voters overwhelmingly approved an $81 million bond issue for higher education and mental institutions.

Also in Virginia, at least 30 localities through the state approved liquor-by-the-drink in restaurants and hotel dining rooms.

However, Utah voters rejected a liquor-by-the-drink proposal that became one of the top issues in the state's political campaign.

Voters in Nevada, where gambling is a major industry, rejected a constitutional amendment to permit a private lottery, which would have given 30 percent of its profits to the state's treasury.

A plan to give Viet Nam war veterans cash bonuses of up to $750 won approval in Pennsylvania.

Nebraska rejected a proposed state constitutional amendment to lower the voting age from 21 to 19.

In other actions, Californians defeated a bond issue to aid their colleges, Oregonians refused to increase a gasoline tax to improve natural resources, and Texans refused to give benefits to industries that install anti-pollution equipment.

Alabama voters adopted a constitutional amendment to permit the governor and seven other elected officials to succeed themselves. The issue of succession drew attention when the wife of George C. Wallace succeeded him as governor in 1966.

Idaho approved a constitution change calling for annual instead of biennial sessions of the legislature but at the same time refused to change the constitutional limitation of legislators' pay to allow for an annual session.

Conservatives Lose Bid for House Gains

Liberals Hold Seats Upsetting Predictions

District was won by Republican David W. Dennis.

Maryland—After coming close two years ago, Republican Lawrence J. Hogan succeeded in defeating incumbent Hervey G. Machen. The district is normally Democratic, but Nixon carried it by a small margin with Wallace receiving a substantial vote. The shift is a conservative gain.

Missouri—An attractive Democrat, with a politically potent name, took over the St. Louis suburban district that Republican Thomas B. Curtis held for 18 years before giving it up for an unsuccessful Senate race. The new congressman is James W. Symington, son of Sen. Stuart Symington. A big liberal plus.

New Mexico—A two-seat pickup for the GOP was feared, but not expected. It happened. Running for the first time in districts, rather than at-large, Republican Manuel Lujan, Jr., unseated 5-term veteran Thomas G. Morris. Two-term incumbent E. S. Johnny Walker was beaten by a conservative Republican, Ed Foreman. Foreman was a one-term Texas congressman (1963-65) who moved to New Mexico.

New York—Four seats changed party but the lineup remains 26 Democrats and 15 Republicans.

Only one incumbent was defeated. Democrat John G. Dow lost out in a bid for a third term in a normally Republican district to Martin B. McKneally.

In districts where incumbents were not seeking re-election, Republican Hamilton Fish, Jr. (his father was the longtime congressman of FDR's "Martin, Barton and Fish" speech) took back a seat the Democrats had held for two terms; the Bronx seat Republican Paul Fino gave up to accept a judgeship went to Democrat Mario Biaggi, and Democrat Edwin I. Koch won the 17th District Manhattan seat held by Republicans about as long as anyone can remember. Although no longer quite the "silk stocking" district it once was, it had elected liberal Republicans, including Mayor Lindsay and Theodore Kupferman, who decided not to seek re-election.

North Carolina—A new district elected Republican Wilmer (Vinegar Bend) Mizell, a former major league pitcher who turned to conservative-style Republican politics. It reduces the state's Democratic congressional majority to 7-4.

Ohio — This time, redistricting added a Democratic seat. When the 21st District became predominantly Negro, veteran Democrat Charles A. Vanik decided to run in the neighboring district against a popular but elderly Republican, Frances P. Bolton. Vanik won his gamble and his former district was carried easily by Democrat Louis A. Stokes, brother of the mayor of Cleveland. The Democratic gain made the state's congressional lineup 18 Republicans, six Democrats.

Oklahoma—Redistricting brought a standoff. In a battle of two incumbents, veteran Democrat Tom Steed beat one-term Republican James V. Smith. But a Republican named John N. Happy Camp won the new 6th District in northwest Oklahoma.

Virginia — The retirement of Democrat Porter Hardy in the Norfolk-Portsmouth area of Virginia led to a Republican pickup with the election of G. William Whitehurst, dean of students at a local college. He beat Frederick T. Stant, Jr., a labor-backed liberal. The Old Dominion will now have five Democratic and five Republican congressmen.

West Virginia—As consolation for the gubernatorial victory of Republican Arch A. Moore, the Democrats picked up his congressional seat in the Wheeling area. The winner is Robert H. Mollohan, who represented the district for two terms in the 1950's.

But party shifts tell only part of the story of the 1968 congressional elections.

At least equally significant is what didn't happen.

Republicans had been favored to beat Democrats Henry Helstoski in New Jersey and Arnold Olsen in Montana. They didn't.

In a supposedly Republican district of Long Island, the retirement of Democrat Herbert Tenzer brought about a confrontation between an all-out McCarthy Democrat, Allard K. Lowenstein, who waited until late in the campaign before endorsing Humphrey, and a Conservative Party candidate, Mason L. Hampton, who had Republican Party endorsement. Hampton was considered the likely winner—but Lowenstein kept the seat Democratic.

One of the most effective liberals in Congress, Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr., of New Jersey was threatened—but kept his seat. Likewise two southern liberals—Florida's Dante Fascell and Louisiana's Hale Boggs—resisted strong Republican challenges.

The Republicans did not pick up threatened Democratic seats in California, Connecticut, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Maine, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Washington.

But on the other hand, Republican incumbents turned back Democratic challenges in Alabama and Georgia. The Alabama contests were between Wallace Democrats and Goldwater conservatives. But the Georgia races saw defeat of a comeback attempt by two liberal former congressmen, Democrats Charles L. Weltner and James A. Mackay.

There will be three more Negroes in the 91st Congress, for a total of nine—all Democrats. In the group is the first black woman in the House, Mrs. Shirley Chisholm of Brooklyn. She beat James Farmer, a civil rights leader who was given the GOP endorsement.

Basically, however, the House that will legislate during the first two years of the Nixon Administration is very much like the House that served during the last two years of Pres. Johnson's Administration.

Maritime Agency Legislation Vetoed

A bill passed in the final days of the 90th Congress to make the Maritime Administration an independent federal agency died when Pres. Johnson "pocket vetoed" it by withholding his signature.

The Administration's position has been that the agency, now under the Commerce Dept., should be in the Dept. of Transportation.

The independent agency bill was supported by the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. The department's executive secretary-treasurer, Peter M. McGavin, said the drive for an independent agency will be renewed in the 91st Congress and "we will again work actively for its passage."

SMILING Hubert H. Humphrey, Democratic presidential candidate, approaches his Minneapolis heaquarters on the last lap of campaign. He came from behind to a photo finish.

Nixon, Wallace Split South's Votes, Democrats Retain Grip in Congress

The South's traditionally solid allegiance to Democratic presidential candidates crumbled almost totally under the onslaught of Republican Richard M. Nixon and Independent Party candidate George C. Wallace.

Pres.-Elect Nixon picked up 75 of the 145 electoral votes in the 13 southern and border states and Wallace ran second with 45 electoral votes. Only the 25 Texas votes went to Democrat Hubert H. Humphrey.

Wallace, clearly, was the spoiler. He hurt Humphrey much more than Nixon.

Arkansas, which has voted Democratic in every presidential race since 1872, gave its six electoral votes to Wallace. And North Carolina—voting Republican only once in the last 96 years—went for Nixon.

Nixon also won in Florida, Kentucky, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia. Besides Arkansas, Wallace took Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana and Mississippi.

In the seven states that Nixon won in the region, Humphrey ran second in four and third in three. In the five Wallace states, Humphrey ran second in four states and third in one.

Little Change

The toll of seven-state Nixon sweep did not appreciably hurt the makeup of the Democratic southern delegation in the House. Democrats lost only two congressional seats—one each in North Carolina and Virginia. The party had hoped to win back three seats in Alabama which the Republicans took in 1964 with the Goldwater vote. But even the Wallace Democrats were unable to unseat the Republicans.

Nixon's strength was felt most in Florida and Oklahoma as the Republicans gained two Senate seats.

In Florida, arch-conservative Rep. Edward J. Gurney became the state's first Republican Senator since 1879. He defeated former Gov. LeRoy Collins, a liberal Democrat, for the seat held by retiring George A. Smathers.

Collins was unable to pick up the votes he needed in the state's more populous areas around Miami, Fort Lauderdale and St. Petersburg-Tampa to offset Gurney's gains in the rural sections.

In Oklahoma, Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney, who has a strong COPE voting record, was defeated by former Republican Gov. Henry Bellmon. Bellmon scored heavily in the larger cities.

Bellmon had close ties with Nixon and was not expected to unseat Monroney. But Nixon's 47 percent of the vote to Humphrey's 33 percent apparently was a big factor in the result.

Three other Democratic Senators in the South turned back Republican opposition to win new terms.

In North Carolina, Sen. Sam Ervin, Jr., defeated challenger Robert V. Somers by more than 100,000 votes. Ervin, 71, has served in the Senate since 1954 and heads the conservative southern bloc.

Georgia's Sen. Herman E. Talmadge won by more than a 3-to-2 margin over E. Earl Patton, Jr., the first GOP nominee for the Senate in more than 100 years.

Sen. J. William Fulbright of Arkansas pulled through his toughest election contest in 24 years of politics to defeat Republican Charles T. Bernard.

In Alabama, James B. Allen topped Republican Perry O. Hooper by almost 400,000 votes to win the seat of retiring Democratic Sen. Lister Hill.

The makeup of the Virginia House delegation was thrown into a deadlock as Republicans won the seat of retiring Democrat Porter Hardy, Jr., in the 2nd District. Republican G. William Whitehurst defeated Frederick T. Stant, Jr., a liberal, to split the party lineup 5-and-5.

Democrats Control

Although Republicans picked up an additional seat in North Carolina, the Democrats still hold the edge in the state's House delegation 7-to-4. Republican Wilmer D. Mizell, former big league baseball pitcher, defeated Smith Bagley in the new 5th District.

The GOP retained a House seat in Georgia won two years ago as Rep. Fletcher Thompson defeated former congressman Charles Weltner, who was attempting a comeback.

The strongest challenge by a Negro for a southern congressional seat was made in Alabama by William McKinley Branch of the National Democratic Party. He was defeated by Walter Flowers, a Wallace-backed Democrat.

Negroes turned out an estimated 3.1 million voters throughout the South, and although they were casting 90 percent of their ballots in favor of Humphrey it was not enough to affect the outcome of most state elections.

The coalition of Negro and Mexican-American voters, however, did pay off for the Democratic presidential candidate in Texas.

Retail Credit Ceiling Voted In Washington

Seattle — A consumers crusade led by the Washington state AFL-CIO to roll back the maximum retail credit interest rate from 18 percent to a new ceiling of 12 percent a year has been won, according to unofficial returns.

The ballot measure, titled "Reducing Maximum Retail Service Charges," received 523,738 votes to 467,763 votes against it, with more than 91 percent of all state precincts totaled. The new interest rate limit on credit cards and revolving charge accounts goes into effect in 30 days.

The victory came in the face of a high pressure advertising campaign carried out by department stores, banks and auto dealers.

Joe Davis, president, and Marvin L. Williams, secretary-treasurer, of the Washington AFL-CIO filed the consumer oriented initiative on April 4. The filing of the initiative was triggered by a 50 percent increase in interest rates on bank credit cards from 12 percent to a newly enacted 18 percent limit.

"We were determined that this deliberate credit gouging would not take place," Davis said.

In a whirlwind campaign the council, aided by all segments of organized labor in Washington state and other groups, collected more than 143,000 signatures to qualify the measure for the November ballot.

The Washington State Grange, the Washington Committee on Consumer Interests and the Catholic Northwest Progress, official spokesman for the Catholic archdiocese, supported the initiative.

5-Seat Net Gain:

GOP Widens Lead Over Democrats For 31-19 Majority in Governorships

By John R. Oravec

Republicans rolled up a net gain of five state houses to widen their majority to 31-19. The GOP took seven governorships from the Democrats who, in turn, wrested two seats away from the Republicans.

Democrats lost the governors' mansions in Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, New Hampshire, Vermont and West Virginia. But they won Republican-held governorships in Rhode Island and Montana.

Republicans went into the election holding a 26-to-24 edge. Of the 21 contests this year, they won 13. This gives the GOP a new high in the control of the state houses. They held 30 seats after the Eisenhower landslide of 1952.

The Nixon victory this year was discounted as having no major coattail effect on the Republican gains.

Ironically, the Nixon win will cost the GOP one seat. This is because his running mate, Maryland Gov. Spiro T. Agnew, will have to be repalced. The Democratic-controlled Maryland legislature undoubtedly will name a Democratic successor.

Four of the shifts were in traditionally Republican states where incumbent Democratic governors were not running for re-election—Indiana, Iowa, New Hampshire and Vermont.

The upset victories for the Democrats came in Rhode Island as Frank Licht defeated Gov. John H. Chafee and in Montana as Forrest H. Anderson ousted Republican Tim Babcock.

Chafee, who sought his fourth term, was caught between his unpopular stand for a state income tax and the Humphrey victory in Rhode Island. Licht, former state superior court judge, opposed the income tax which became the major issue in the campaign.

Babcock also lost on the tax issue in Montana. Anderson, the state attorney general, promised to veto a 3 percent sales tax if it were passed by the legislature.

Democrats came within a whisker of unseating Republicans in Arkansas and New Mexico. Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller won a second term by edging out Democrat Marion Crank, who apparently benefited from much of the Wallace vote in Arkansas. New Mexico's Gov. David F. Cargo also pulled out a victory after a tight race with Democrat Fabian Chavez, Jr.

Nixon's victory in Delaware was credited in part with helping to defeat incumbent Democrat Charles L. Terry. Republican Russell W. Peterson, a DuPont Co. executive, pulled slightly more than 7,000 votes ahead of Terry.

In Illinois, a heavy down-state turnout of Republicans helped Richard B. Ogilvie beat incumbent Gov. Samuel H. Shapiro, who was seeking his first full term. Shapiro succeeded former Gov. Otto Kerner earlier this year.

The Republican parade in Indiana was led with the gubernatorial election of Edgar D. Whitcomb over Democratic Lt. Gov. Robert L. Rock. The incumbent, Democrat Roger L. Branigin, was ineligible for another term.

Republican Robert Ray in Iowa easily defeated Paul Franzenburg, who was unable to keep the state house for the Democrats. In the meantime, incumbent Gov. Harold Hughes won his race for a Senate seat.

In New Hampshire the governor's mansion was returned to Republican control with Walter R. Peterson's defeat of Emile R. Bussiere. Incumbent Democrat John W. King lost in his bid to capture a Senate seat as the full effect of the state's old-line Republicanism was renewed.

Vermont also reverted to its old Republican pattern as Deane C. Davis was swept into state house over Lt. Gov. John J. Daley, who was bidding to hold the governorship in the Democratic column. Two-term Gov. Philip Hoff, the first Democrat to hold the state house in more than a century, is retiring.

Democrats retained control in North Carolina, Texas, Missouri, Kansas and Utah, while the GOP held on to state houses in Arizona, South Dakota and Washington.

In Texas, Lt. Gov. Preston Smith won easily over Republican Paul W. Eggers as Democrats patched up their differences. Incumbent Democratic Gov. John B. Connally did not seek re-election.

Despite a heavy Nixon vote in Utah, incumbent Democrat Calvin L. Rampton handily turned back Carl W. Buckner by about 2-to-1 majority.

Democratic incumbent Warren E. Hearnes, a first-term conservative governor, won a smashing victory in Missouri over Republican challenger Lawrence K. Roos.

North Dakota's Gov. William L. Guy again averted a Republican sweep as the Democrat won a fourth term. He easily defeated Robert P. McCarney, who could not capitalize on Nixon's heavy popular vote in the state.

Kansas re-elected Democrat Robert Docking, who at one point in the campaign appeared to be an underdog. He defeated Republican Rich Harman.

Democratic Lt. Gov. Robert W. Scott withstood Nixon's victory in North Carolina to defeat Republican James C. Gardner, a first-term congressman. Incumbent Democratic Gov. Dan K. Moore was not allowed to succeed himself.

Arizona's Republican incumbent Jack Williams turned back former Democratic Gov. Sam Goddard. In Washington, Republican Daniel. J. Evans won another term over Democratic challenger John J. O'Connell. Republican Frank Farrar defeated Democrat Robert M. Chamberlin for the state house of South Dakota.

Humphrey Runs Strong In New England States

The dramatic upswing in Vice Pres. Humphrey's support during the last two weeks of his presidential campaign was particularly evident in voting results in the six-state New England area.

Humphrey captured four of the states and 30 of the region's 37 electoral votes, whereas a survey in mid-October had found that only Rhode Island's four electoral votes could be safely listed in his column.

The results also showed the effect of labor's get-out-the-vote drives The Democrats swept industrial areas in Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. Humphrey's margin in the latter two states was better than 2 to 1.

The Democratic ticket won handily in Maine, the home state of Humphrey's running mate, Sen. Edmund Muskie, whose popularity apparently was a factor in the over-all New England tally. The GOP ticket carried only New Hampshire and Vermont.

Third-party candidate George C. Wallace ran poorly throughout New England, his vote ranging from only 2 percent in Maine to about 6 percent in Connecticut.

A state-by-state rundown:

Connecticut — Democratic Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff easily won re-election to a second term over a challenge from Republican Edwin H. May, Jr., a Wethersfield insurance executive.

Democratic Rep. Donald J. Irwin was edged out by Lowell P. Weicker, Jr., in a district that is basically Republican. The other four House Democrats and a lone Republican incumbent won comfortably.

Maine—The state's two Democratic House members—Peter N. Kyros and William D. Hathaway—were re-elected by strong margins.

Massachusetts—The Bay State's 12 incumbent members of the House—seven Democrats and five Republicans—were re-elected. Two of the Democrats and two of the Republicans had no opposition.

New Hampshire—Basically Republican, the state gave Nixon 52 percent of the vote. He also won here in 1960.

Sen. Norris Cotton (R) was re-elected to his third full term, turning back a bid for the seat by Democratic Gov. John W. King.

Republican Walter R. Peterson, speaker of the State House of Representatives, was elected governor, defeating Democrat Emile R. Bussiere, Manchester district attorney. Two incumbent Republican congressmen were re-elected.

Rhode Island — An upset occurred here, when Democrat Frank Licht, a Superior Court judge, defeated Republican Gov. John H. Chafee, who was seeking a fourth two-year term. Incumbent Representatives Fernand J. St. Germain and Robert O. Tiernan, both Democrats, won re-election by nearly 2 to 1 margins.

Vermont—The governorship reverted to the GOP when Deane C. Davis, a Montpelier businessman defeated Democratic Lt. Gov. John J. Daley. Incumbent Gov. Philip H. Hoff (D), is retiring after serving three two-year terms. Sen. George D. Aiken (R) and Rep. Robert T. Stafford (R) had no opposition.

Statehood Party Elects Puerto Rico Governor

San Juan—Puerto Rico voters broke a 28-year tradition by picking Luis A. Ferre, candidate of the New Progressive Party, as governor over Senate Majority Leader Luis Negron Lopez of the dominant Popular Democratic Party.

Based on nearly complete returns, Ferre, a 64-year-old millionaire businessman, emerged the winner of a five-cornered race with about 43 percent of the vote. Also elected was a running-mate, Jorge Luis Cordova Diaz, as resident commissioner in Washington, D.C.—a post his father had held for 14 years. He defeated incumbent commissioner Santiago Polanco Abreu. The commissioner has a seat in the U.S. Congress but no vote.

Ferre's party favors statehood for this island commonwealth but Ferre himself soft-pedaled that issue and stressed the need for a new approach to problems like crime, unemployment, drug addiction and the needs of the farmer.

The present governor, Roberto Sanchez Vilella, split with his Popular Democratic Party and lost a bid to Negron for renomination. He ran third as candidate of the People's Party.

The long-dominant Popular Democrats, while losing the governorship, retained a 16-11 margin in the Senate. Luis Munoz Marin, party founder and four-term governor, was among those re-elected to the Senate.

Ferre said in a victory statement that he would "govern with all humility" and retain all capable officeholders regardless of party. He promised not to press for statehood without voter approval.

McDonnell Douglas Runoff:

Aerospace Election Won by Machinists

St. Louis—The Machinists won the third in a series of National Labor Relations Board elections here to retain bargaining rights for 21,000 employes of the McDonnell Douglas Corp., a major aerospace firm.

The vote was IAM 9,262, Technical Employes of Aerospace Manufacturers, an unaffiliated group calling itself TEAM, 8,853. The latter group, which favors affiliation with the Teamsters, announced it will file exceptions within five days, and thus delay certification of the bargaining agent.

IAM District 837 won a first election in September over TEAM and the Auto Workers, unaffiliated, but was forced into a runoff with TEAM because neither received a majority of the votes cast. In the second election, held in October, IAM beat TEAM by one vote but the NLRB ruled that a challenged ballot should be counted for TEAM, leaving the result at 8,981 each.

More than 18,000 valid ballots were cast in the third election. Of the total, 129 ballots were challenged and not counted, 23 were declared void.

At a union membership meeting, IAM members voted by a 7-1 margin to extend their contract with McDonnell Douglas to midnight Dec. 8. Members were told that management has agreed to negotiate a new contract on a limited basis until District 837 has officially been certificated as the election winner.

The IAM has given the district official strike sanction, Business Rep. Louis Brock reported. That means a strike may be voted if the new terms are unacceptable, he said.

The final ballot was a victory for IAM leaders who spearheaded the fight against a dissident group backed by the expelled Teamsters.

During the heated campaign, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and three other top officers of his union issued a statement urging the Machinists' union members to vote for the Teamsters, who were ousted from the AFL-CIO in 1957 for domination by corrupt interests.

Unions affiliated with the St. Louis Labor Council, AFL-CIO, assured McDonnell Douglas workers in full-page advertisements in the daily and labor press that their best chance of continued growth was with the unified labor movement.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a final message in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and other papers before the vote:

"Unfortunately some unions outside our ranks — although there are not very many—have devoted their major attention to raiding and disruption. This is especially unfortunate because, in the years ahead, the labor movement will need all its strength to fend off the attacks of those who would like to destroy it."

The clear fact, Meany said, is that District 837 of the Machinists "is the only organization on the ballot that has the knowledge, experience and know-how to represent you adequately in collective bargaining with the company."

Another IAM district union is involved in a major election challenge—District 141 at Burlingame, Calif. The National Mediation Board mailed ballots to more than 11,000 United Air Lines employes in most sizable U.S. cities.

Ballots will be counted Nov. 14. The contest is between the IAM, representing mechanics and other air transport employes, and the Aircraft Mechanics Fraternal Association representing employes of Ozark Airlines and Airlift Intl. It is petitioning to represent UAL employes too.

NETWORK MUSICIANS on strike against three major television and radio chains are joined on the ABC picket line by AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin, second from right, in New York City. Kenin said the strike against the American, National and Columbia Broadcasting systems was voted Oct. 30 by 800 studio musicians "solely for the purpose of improving wages, hours and working conditions." The stations are in Los Angeles and New York.

'68 Union Wage Gains Average 7.5 Percent

First-year wage gains won by unions in the first nine months of 1968 averaged 7.5 percent of straight-time hourly earnings—a sharp increase from the 5.6 percent rate for all of 1967 and the 5 percent rate for the first nine months of last year, the Labor Dept. reported.

Preliminary estimates of the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics were that settlements concluded in the third quarter of this year bring the total number of workers under agreements reached by Sept. 30 to 3.4 million, or about a third of all workers covered by major contracts.

The 3.4 million is the largest number of workers covered by new contracts in the first three quarters of any year since 1960, BLS said.

It reported also:

- A median wage-benefit package increase over the full contract period of 6.6 percent a year, compared with 5.6 percent for 1967, when actual timing of wage and benefit changes is taken into account. The figures were 6 percent and 5.2 percent, respectively, assuming changes went into effect at equal intervals during the life of the contracts.
- Considering wage rates alone, increases during the entire life of the contracts studied averaged 5.6 percent of straight-time hourly earnings annually, compared with 5 percent for 1967.

BLS said that agreements in basic steel and aerospace highlighted bargaining during 1968's third quarter. Major settlements were concluded during the quarter for about 1.4 million workers.

Settlements in the telephone industry, BLS said, followed the pattern of agreements reached in earlier quarters. They affected about 175,000 workers, with agreements in the transportation industry affecting an additional 85,000. In both industries, first-year increases were "substantially higher" than those provided in subsequent contract years, the study showed.

In the construction industry, however, third quarter settlements covered 125,000 workers, with the larger increases usually becoming effective in the second and third contract years.

This report is for settlements involving workers in units of 1,000 or more in private non-farm industries. Except for "package" estimates, the figures omit changes in supplementary benefits, and cost-of-living escalator bonuses except those guaranteed by contract.

Defiant Firm Must Bargain With USWA

Bush Hog, Inc., has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board to stop refusing to bargain with the Steelworkers at the Selma, Ala., plant where it makes rotary cutters, riding tractors and other farm tools. Company Vice Pres. Earl Goodwin was co-chairman of fund-raising for George C. Wallace, third-party presidential candidate.

The board found the firm guilty of ignoring the results of an election won by the union Feb. 1. The USWA asked that the company be ordered to pay employes the equivalent of benefits they would have won in a new contract, but the board refused, as it has before in similar cases.

AFL-CIO unions have urged the board to use its powers to remedy pay losses in cases where employers deliberately delay bargaining by filing procedural motions. Some trial examiners have recommended such action but the NLRB has not yet agreed.

Three board members found that since June 14, 1968, the USWA has been the exclusive representative of company employes. They ordered Bush Hog management to bargain and, if an understanding is reached, to embody it in a signed agreement.

To make sure that the employes may have the services of their selected bargaining agent for a full year, as the law provides, the board said it will start counting the first year of certification on the date the management starts to bargain in good faith with the union.

Bush Hog argued that its refusal to bargain was lawful. It claimed that objections it filed to the election should have resulted in the board's setting aside that election and ordering a new one. The NLRB members said they found no merit in the firm's claim.

IAM Upheld by Board Against Raiding Charge

The National Labor Relations Board pulled the rug from under an Auto Workers "raiding" charge by ruling that the Machinists are the legally recognized bargaining agent for employes at a jet engine parts plant in Albuquerque, N.M., where the General Electric Co. has a contract with the Air Force.

The board in a 3-0 decision voted to dismiss UAW charges that GE unlawfully recognized the IAM. Also it dismissed a UAW petition for a new representation election, ruling that an existing two-year contract is a bar to an election.

IAM Lodge 794 has represented the Albuquerque plant employes since 1956. When the Defense Dept. "phased out" the work on a weapons contract at the plant, GE took over a new engine parts contract in a portion of the plant last Dec. 1 and kept some of the IAM members on the payroll.

UAW claimed the work had been transferred from GE's jet engine plant at Evendale, O., and accused GE of recognizing the IAM unfairly. The NLRB rejected its claims. It said:

"The board has held, with court approval, that a successor relationship obligating the successor to bargain with the representative of the predecessor's employes exists where the employing industry remains substantially the same." At Albuquerque the employes are the same as before, the work remains the same, and the new employer is a successor to the old, the NLRB held.

No employes in the bargaining unit were transferred from Evendale to Albuquerque, it said, adding "there is no other evidence in the record that the petitioner (UAW) had any representation among the Albuquerque employes at the time."

The Albuquerque incident was one of eight listed by the UAW earlier this year as instances of alleged violations by the IAM of a no-raid agreement between the two big unions. The auto union previously had been dropped from the AFL-CIO for non-payment of per capita dues.

The IAM called the UAW charges "absurd" and said it was the auto union that failed to live up to the agreement. Later the UAW attempted to "raid" an IAM unit at the big McDonnell Douglas aerospace plant in St. Louis. When the raid failed, UAW urged employes to support the Teamsters, who also failed. (Story this page.)

Potofsky Calls for Curbing Runaways

New York—The Clothing Workers have called upon Pres. Johnson to seek ways of restraining the increasing runaways of U.S. companies to low-wage areas just across the Mexican border.

ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, in a letter to Johnson, said that if the flight continues unabated it will "seriously undermine much of what this nation has so laboriously achieved in building the highest standard of living in the world."

Potofsky's letter was triggered by a recent report that Oxford Industries, Inc. is planning to start making boys shirts in Mexico. The move, Potofsky warned, could touch off a chain of runaways by other clothing manufacturers.

NLRB Cracks Down On Employer Group

A North Carolina employers' association has been ruled guilty of an unfair labor practice for helping a Magnavox Co. affiliate intimidate employes during a union organizing campaign late last year.

The National Labor Relations Board ordered Western Carolina Industries, Inc., of Asheville and Harry Clarke, its president, to stop spying on employes of Phillips Industries, Inc., a joint venture of Magnavox and Presque Isle Plastics at Arden, N.C.

Phillips was ordered to stop questioning employes unlawfully about their interest in the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; to stop interfering with union activities and to stop spying, or giving the appearance of spying on union meetings.

The NLRB ruled that Phillips and its president deliberately timed a wage increase of 20 cents an hour to counteract an IUE organizing campaign. It also ordered Phillips to rehire an illegally fired union supporter with full backpay, to return pay deductions taken from 13 employes who held a protest work stoppage last November, and to expunge written warnings from the records of all workers who left a spray line to protest that it was moving too fast.

"Concerted activity for mutual aid and protection includes the presentation of grievances," the NLRB said in upholding a trial examiner's findings. Therefore a temporary work stoppage to present grievances is protected activity under the National Labor Relations Act, Examiner Lowell Goerlich said.

Western Carolina Industries is a nonprofit association set up avowedly to promote industry in its region and to "foster understanding and cooperation between employer and employe for their mutual benefit."

NLRB witnesses testified that Phillips called in the association and Clarke, its president, when it got wind of union interest in the new plant. Clarke went to a restaurant at Skyland, N.C., where employes were meeting to discuss the union, and later toured the plant with company officials to drive home the idea that Phillips was aware of the union drive. A number of employes had been interviewed by Clarke before being hired, the evidence showed.

The IUE said other unions have experienced Western Carolina's antilabor animus but that its tactics have never before been "nailed" as illegal by NLRB.

Negro Newspaper Honors ILGWU

Philadelphia—A leading Negro newpaper has presented its first community service award to the Ladies' Garment Workers.

The ILGWU was honored by the Philadelphia Tribune for its dedication to human dignity and equal opportunity, both within the union and in the shops.

The award was presented at a luncheon attended by Sen. Joseph S. Clark, Philadelphia Mayor H. J. Tate and prominent civic leaders.

The Issues Remain

"SELDOM HAS SO qualified a candidate for President been placed before the American voters. Never has a presidential candidate been so totally committed in word and deed to the fulfillment of the American dream. Never has there been a presidential candidate more clearly identified with the aims and aspirations of America's workers."

That was the AFL-CIO's assessment of Hubert Humphrey when the federation's General Board formally endorsed his candidacy. It's just as true today and will remain true in the days and years to come. For Hubert Humphrey is a remarkable man, a man who will not be soon or easily forgotten, nor will his magnificently courageous campaign for the presidency in 1968.

A few more votes per precinct in a half dozen states would have made the difference between victory and defeat for Humphrey who ran almost a dead heat in the popular vote with Pres.-Elect Richard Nixon.

But this is not the time for what-might-have-been. The American people have chosen a new President who will take office on Jan. 20, 1969, as leader of all the people. And the nation will honor once again that hallmark of a democratic system—the peaceful passage of power from one man and one party to another, whatever their disagreements or reservations.

THE CLOSENESS of the presidential election and the very limited shifts in the makeup of the 91st Congress indicate clearly that the American people were not voting for drastic change in 1968.

Their clear and sharp rebuff to the candidacy of George C. Wallace and his campaign of racism and hate underscores the nation's basic decency despite his exploitation of the people's fears and frustrations.

Wallace emerges from the 1968 election as a limited sectional candidate, winning essentially the same states that Strom Thurmond carried 20 years ago as the States Rights candidate. In 1948 Thurmond received 1,169,000 votes while Wallace will get over 9 million votes, mostly by dint of having his name placed on the ballot in 50 states.

But in terms of the percentage of the popular vote, Wallace with 14 percent ran behind the last major third party bid of Robert LaFollette in 1924.

The trade union movement played a major role in containing and rolling back the Wallace bid to impose rule by a radical minority on the nation's electoral processes.

THE NATION is looking forward to the transitional period between the election and the inauguration when Nixon will begin to select the key men and fill in the necessary details of the programs he espoused during the campaign.

Historically this is a time for a nation that has taken sides on issues and candidates to congratulate the winner in the great tradition of respecting the decision at the ballot box.

But while the campaign is over the issues remain, stark reminders of the cold realities of our times. The 1968 election has demonstrated that the American people want these problems handled responsibly but forcefully and quickly. They have installed one party in the White House and another in Congress to share the responsibilities and the burdens.

They will pass judgment on how well the job is done two years from now.

The Winners

History of Peaceful Transition:

Acceptance of Election Results Reflects National Will for Unity

The following column by James Reston appeared in the New York Times, Nov. 6, 1968.

THIS HAS BEEN a hard election, and there are many who believe it has wounded and divided the nation, but the American people have short memories and instinctively accept the results of the vote, no matter how close. This, at least, is the consolation of our political history.

With the one ghastly exception of 1860, when the South chose to use the election of Abraham Lincoln as a pretext for secession, the American people have put aside all the provocative charges and threats of the campaign and promptly accepted the winner as President of all the people.

As soon as the vote is clear, as Sidney Hyman observed in "The American President," "the nation decrees an act of oblivion on the mischances and partisan claims of the recent past. A decision by a part of the nation is converted into a decision of the sovereign whole . . . Well, we'll go along with it, we say, in that most meaningful of Americanisms. . . ."

John F. Kennedy won the presidency over Richard Nixon in 1960 with less than a majority of the whole vote. In a few months Mr. Nixon was virtually forgotten, only to rise again in 1968. In other less mature democracies so close an election has often led to civil disorder and even to civil war, but the instinct to forget the past and accept the result of even the most vicious campaigns has been evident in this country almost from the beginning.

This will to come together and unite in spirit was first evident in the election of 1800, when Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr received the same number of votes in the Electoral College and Mr. Jefferson finally won by a single vote in the House of Representatives.

Much the same thing happened in 1824, when John Quincy Adams was chosen over Andrew Jackson in the House though Jackson had more electoral and apparently more popular votes.

In fifteen other elections men were elected to the presidency though they got less than 50 per cent of the total vote: William Henry Harrison, 1840; James K. Polk, 1844; Zachary Taylor, 1848; James Buchanan, 1856; James A. Garfield, 1880; Grover Cleveland, 1884 and 1892; Benjamin Harrison, 1888; William McKinley, 1896 and 1900; William Howard Taft, 1908; Woodrow Wilson, 1912 and 1916; Harry Truman, 1948, and John Kennedy, 1960.

Even in 1876, when Samuel Tilden led Rutherford B. Hayes in both the popular and electoral vote, Hayes was finally accepted despite considerable evidence of fraud, and Tilden retired from the battle satisfied that he had the best of all worlds: he had won the presidency, he said, and didn't have to suffer the cares and burdens of the office.

Actually, the charges and countercharges of the 1968 election were mild compared to the savage campaigns of many of these other past elections. Nevertheless, they were sharp enough to divide the nation if the voters really believed them. . . .

If the American people really believed that Richard Nixon was an untrustworthy man who was leading the nation inevitably to economic depression and international chaos, or that Mr. Humphrey was a weak and weary man determined to perpetuate the Johnson blunders of the past, then it might indeed be difficult for the tens of millions of losers to accept the result.

The vast majority of the people will "go along," however, for they do not really believe all the gloomy threats and predictions of candidates and columnists.

THIS DOES NOT MEAN that the system of American government is always right. "It has led," says James McGregor Burns, "to a government by fits and starts, to a statecraft that has not been able to supply the steady leadership and power necessary for the conduct of our affairs."

There has often been a serious lag, he adds, in the speed and effectiveness with which the national government has coped with emerging crises.

"The record is a disturbing one. The steady, moderate action on slavery that was so desperately needed in the 1840s and 1850s finally came, immoderately and at frightful cost, in the 1860s, and 1870s. American participation in the first real efforts at collective security came after World War II instead of World War I. The anti-depression measures so critically necessary in the 1930s, if not before, became governmental and political commitments only in the 1940s and 1950s.

The catalogue of failures and tardy remedies could be vastly extended, and the dangers of precisely this kind of slow and divided government are still the nightmare of yesterday's election. But the people accept it because that has been their way from the start.

No Alternative:

Collective Bargaining Seen Key To Labor-Management Peace

The following is excerpted from "Collective Bargaining Reaffirmed," by Matthew A. Kelly which appears in the November 1968 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

LABOR AND MANAGEMENT, the practitioner and scholar, the public official and citizenry alike are in agreement that, presently at least, traditional bargaining is on trial.

The criticism, if not attack, on the collective bargaining process is from many quarters. No doubt much of this is from the perennial few who want to "turn back the clock" and return to the "good old days" when a "boss ran his plant" and "made his own decisions" on what wages, hours and working conditions he would provide his employes. Undoubtedly, too, there are a goodly number of criticisms of collective bargaining which are certain to prove abortive and are a "product of the times" and "faddish" at best.

Notwithstanding this, few will deny that collective bargaining needs to be improved. To cite just a few of the major areas of needed revitalization in the collective bargaining process:

- New and creative approaches to problem-solving in labor-management relations generally, and in collective bargaining in particular, need to be found.
- Improvements in bargaining techniques and negotiating skills need to be developed to minimize crisis-eruption in labor-management relations and collective bargaining through misunderstanding, failure to communicate and lack of expertise among representatives at the bargaining table.
- Ways to provide greater participation on the part of the rank-and-file and the local plant employe in the collective bargaining process and in the determination of the "gains" of the bargain need be evolved and practiced if collective bargaining is to survive and continue to be preferred, supported and espoused by those for whom the process was developed.

It will not be my purpose to recount the many challenges which confront the bargainers today and threaten the very existence of the free collective bargaining process which has served as the heart of the American labor-management relationship over these many years.

The stakes are great, for failure can well lead to the complete abandonment of the collective bargaining process. At earlier stages in the labor-management relationship in this country, the threats of crisis and the costliness of strike or lockout were in large measure deterrents to the exercise of power in extremes and served to promote restraint in the use of power by either party.

These no longer can be relied upon to the same degree today. Labor and management in their own self-protection have learned to insulate themselves against the "costliness of crisis." Few unions today lack a defense fund and strike benefits, alternative job training and placement, family care and welfare are all well-organized for the employe's protection in crisis. Similarly, more managements today have entered into mutual assistance pacts or developed strike insurance programs.

MUCH SUPPORT for alternatives to collective bargaining is being gained through ignorance and misunderstanding of the collective bargaining process. Collective bargaining is being criticized for its "failures," those headline-catching breakdowns in contract negotiations which play on labor-management brinkmanship, strike and lockout. Moreover, it would appear that the inconvenience and crisis most vehemently being resented, currently at least, are the disruptions in the public sector and all collective bargaining, and all labor, are being criticized indiscriminately because of it.

It is obvious that there are many reasons for eruptions and crises occurring at the bargaining table at this time in greater number in the public sector than in the private sector. Yet it should be clear to all that one cannot "legislate industrial peace" and that prohibitive legislation per se is no panacea to conflict on the industrial relations scene and may perhaps even suggest that the denial of the freedom to exercise economic power may well compel a display of it.

Critics of the high level of current-day settlements often fail to recognize, too, the fundamentally acquisitive nature of the collective bargaining process which, with all its shortcomings, has overriding values in the freedoms it preserves and in the level of human dignity, productivity and labor-management wellbeing it generates over time.

For the present, little serious thought appears to be given by the citizenry generally to the consequences and impact of adopting alternatives to collective bargaining for the establishment of wages, hours and working conditions. Equally neglected are the considerations of the magnitude of the collective bargaining process and of the vast number of contract settlements which are reached through labor and management accommodation and compromise without conflict.

Still, the exaggeration of the failures, breakdowns and crises of the process persist, for even less is known about the real achievements and successes of collective bargaining.

The Institute of Collective Bargaining and Group Relations has been formed with the firm conviction that there is no alternative to collective bargaining which will preserve essential freedoms basic to our economic and political systems.

It represents labor and management acting in concert—firm in their belief in the collective bargaining process; dedicated in the endeavor to promote a more thorough understanding and appreciation of the process; and confident in the ability of labor and management to meet the challenges ahead through the encouragement and general adoption of innovation, creativity and improved problem-solving techniques in the labor-management relationship generally and at the collective bargaining table in particular.

Legislation Sought:

Fire Fighters Push Campaign For Better Protection in Riots

STEPPED-UP PROTECTION for firemen in ghetto disturbance areas will be the No. 1 goal of the Fire Fighters in the 91st Congress, the union's president reported.

Line-of-duty injuries to fire fighters jumped to nearly 60,000, more than twice the average for the 10 previous years, said Howard McClennan. He said that ghetto area riots are the major factor in the sharp rise. McClennan appeared on Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

The union president emphasized that the harassment and attacks on fire fighters stem from "the younger crowd . . . not only black youngsters—white youngsters do the same thing." And, he added, fire fighters very often get "tremendous assistance" from older residents of the areas.

McClennan said leaders from the ghetto areas blame these conditions on the feeling that fire fighters "represent authority—we are the establishment."

The union leader flatly rejected proposals to arm fire fighters. "That's not the answer to the problem," he declared. "Fire fighters fight fires, not people," and "protecting them in these areas during troubled times is the policeman's job."

He pointed out that last year, Congress did extend special protections to policemen, but excluded fire fighters from coverage under the law. He said the union will make a special drive for an amendment to provide his members with the same protections, and predicted "we will get it."

McCLENNAN SAID a sharp rise in false alarms—"a 75 to 80 percent increase in all the big cities"—is another major obstacle to fire departments throughout the country. He said many cities are combatting the problem by delaying a "full response of equipment" until the area has been checked by a radio-equipped battalion chief.

Reporters questioning McClennan on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program were Alan Adams, Washington correspondent for Business Week magazine, and Sam Sharkey, labor specialist for Newhouse Newspapers.

ONE OF THE CRUCIAL issues facing the new 91st Congress next year may well be conservative business efforts to weaken labor at the bargaining table. They will seek to do this by destroying industry-wide bargaining, or even "coordinated" bargaining which is now making its impact on the labor-management scene.

Yet, paradoxically, the attacks will come at the very moment that industry and business—through mergers and conglomerates—are making both industry-wide bargaining and coordinated bargaining more than ever necessary for organized labor.

The fight against industry-wide bargaining is of long standing. The 1968 Republican platform didn't come out flatly against it, but it opens the door to such legislation by criticism of lack of action against "crippling" economic strikes and the need to balance labor power.

"Coordinated" bargaining by unions is just beginning to make itself felt. General Electric resisted the presence of other union representatives on the bargaining committee of the Electrical Radio & Machine Workers in 1966. It agreed to bargain only after a court ordered it to do so. Minnesota Mining & Mfg. (3M) also resisted "coordination" when it opened its bargaining with the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers last year.

In both cases the National Labor Relations Board has upheld the right of unions to pick the membership of their own bargaining committees without giving the employer "veto" power. Obviously this right is limited. It does not permit negotiation for more than the individual union contract under discussion.

Yet, a recent study—made by management oriented Hill & Knowlton—designed to show "excessive union powers" resulting from NLRB decisions, illustrates how determined business and industry are to destroy this limited right.

In an attack on "composite" bargaining teams, Hill & Knowlton called them "a power play whereby a combination of unions attempt to force multi-plant and multi-union bargaining on a company-wide or industry-wide basis."

Quite aside from the inaccuracy of the statement, the Hill & Knowlton cry of alarm comes at a time when business and industry are busy building up whole empires that cross union lines at a thousand places. Not only do they cross these lines within an industry itself, but in a conglomeration of industries that may deal with everything from the production of eggs and perfumes to the manufacture of locomotives and washing machines.

One example is the Intl. Telephone & Telegraph Co., which at the end of 1967 had almost $3 billion in assets and ranked 17th among the nation's industrial companies.

IT&T started out, as its name indicates, as an international communications company. It ran the Spanish telephone system for years, and it still operates telephone systems and other enterprises in 123 countries. But look at it now. It started manufacturing telephone equipment as a side line. Then it branched out renting cars (Avis), operating hotels and motor inns (Sheraton), building homes (Levitt & Sons), baking bread (Continental), producing glass and sand, making consumer loans, managing mutual funds and processing data.

General Motors, Ford, General Electric and a score of other powerful corporations are growing bigger and bigger, more and more powerful, more and more diversified, year after year. Of course, they want to keep unions isolated from one another, to keep them, if possible, in competition with one another.

What is good for business, they say in effect, is anathema when it comes to organized labor.

The 91st Congress will hear a lot from business and industry next year about the "evils" of coordinated bargaining. It can't afford, when it hears those arguments, to shut its eyes to what is going on in the business community either.

LEGISLATIVE NEEDS of fire fighters were outlined by Fire Fighters Pres. Howard McClennan in a Labor News Conference interview on the Mutual Radio Network. Questioning him on the AFL-CIO produced program were Sam Sharkey, left, of the Newhouse Newspapers and Alan Adams of Business Week magazine.

How to Buy:

Overpricing of Aspirin Products Causes Consumer Headaches

By Sidney Margolius

PERHAPS THE MOST needless price increases this past year have been those on brand-name aspirin products and other household remedies. These products already were notoriously overpriced, with some costing 300 and 400 percent more than equivalent private brands.

But, we have seen such increases as Bayer aspirin going to a list price of 98 cents from an already-high of 89 cents, and Bufferin to $1.49 from a previously unnecessary $1.39. Some sellers even have marked up existing stocks; blocking out, for example, such former list prices as 73 cents for a box of 36 Excedrin tablets, and marking them up to 75 cents and more.

But apparently all that the manufacturers need to sell a household medicine at a price that has no relation to the real value, is a clever advertising slogan repeated until it becomes part of the language. It was Excedrin that hit the jackpot this year with its prize-winning "I've got an Excedrin headache" ads.

Excedrin really is nothing but aspirin with another pain-reliever plus caffeine, at one of the highest prices yet for a pain reliever. You can pay 75 cents for 36 tablets or up to $1.05 list price for 60. Or you can save a lot of money by saying instead, "I've got a Co-op Extra Strength Pain Reliever headache." This takes longer but you then pay only 65 cents for 60 tablets. (Bristol-Myers secretly doesn't care whether you buy Excedrin or Bufferin. They make both.)

The table with this article shows a number of comparisons of brand-name and private-brand prices for common household remedies and vitamin preparations. The differences are startling. While many retailers now offer the brand-name products at cut rates, even these reductions do not begin to match the prices of the private brands. These often are half or less the brand-name cost.

All you need do to assure yourself you are getting an equivalent product, no matter what the price, is to read the list of ingredients on the bottle or box. Thus, despite the big differences in price, the private-brand AAC or APC tablets (aspirin-phenacetin-caffeine) have the same or very similar ingredients as Anacin.

With the widely-sold antihistamine cough syrups too, you will see that a brand like Coricidin Cough Formula, at $1.39 for four ounces, has much the same ingredients as others at 49-98 cents. The main ingredients usually are chlorpheniramine maleate and/or phenylpropanolamine hydrochloride, plus various soothing syrups, a little chloroform, and 5-10 percent alcohol. (The alcohol is cheaper at a liquor store.)

Long-lasting decongestant tablets like Contac also have become big sellers. These usually have the same antihistamine ingredients as the antihistamine cough medicines, for the relief of cold and hay fever systems, plus decongestant antisecretory ingredients (not antisecretary.)

Just make sure of the number of capsules and strength. Similar-looking packages provide anywhere from ten to 24 capsules, and last from eight to 12 hours. Prices vary considerably too—from as little as 40 cents for the equivalent of ten capsules to as much as $1.

Soup to Nonsense:

Labels We Attach to People Often Don't Stick After All

By Jane Goodsell

WE ATTACH LABELS to each other. Bill is a regular fellow. Adam is tight-fisted. Susan is always so thoughtful. Jean is organized. Vivian is scatter-brained. Lucy is witty, Mary is gay, Will is an extrovert, Mike is bitter and sardonic.

We sum each other up in a word or two, knowing—if we stop to think about it—that nobody is all that simple but realizing, too, that we can never grasp all the complexities and contradictions that make up another human being. So we over-simplify. We analyze and dissect each other, drawing on hearsay gossip and confidences exchanged at cocktail parties and snippets of Freudian psychology to explain what Bill or Adam or Susan is really like.

"Oh, Bill isn't really the hail-fellow he seems to be," we say, feeling rather smug about our own perceptiveness. "Underneath, he's really very shy and unsure of himself."

"Mary throws herself into civic affairs," we explain glibly, "because her marriage is unhappy."

We fit people into niches, folding them up tidily like a pair of socks and filing them away to be forgotten until the next time they cross our paths or our minds.

What else can you do with other people?

How can we possibly "understand" the paradox that is somebody else?

PEOPLE CAN'T be solved like arithmetic problems or explained by theories. People are riddles without answers. But we aren't content to let it go at that. Having, as we do, a basic need to classify and systemize and tabulate, we assign characteristics to people and we expect them to behave accordingly—to stay in character.

It's not surprising that we so often surprise each other. What is surprising is the sense of betrayal we feel at the unexpected—when a "happy" marriage goes on the rocks, when a "well-adjusted" friend has a nervous breakdown, when a "stingy" person does something generous, when a "dumb" kid gets into Harvard, when a "sweet" girl makes a cruel remark.

What upsets us is the shocking realization that the labels we have attached to other people don't fit. We had them doped out all wrong. We become acutely conscious of the fact that people, like icebergs, keep a large part of themselves submerged and only a very little bit visible. We wonder uneasily how well we "know" anybody. It is a very uncomfortable feeling but it is, I think, the way we ought to feel about each other.

"I expect my secretary to ask for a raise. Nag at me so I'll be in a grouchy mood!"

Farm Laborers:

They Live and Die At 80 Cents an Hour

The following is excerpted from an address by Bertrand M. Harding, acting director of the Office of Economic Opportunity to the Texas GI Forum at Del Rio, Texas.

NOT LONG AGO, a white middle-class American took his vacation in the Southwest. One afternoon, he was driving along—enjoying the new scenery and breathing the fresh air. Going through one stretch, he saw a parked car beside the road. The sun beat down on it. The man pulled over and looked inside. He saw three little children.

They were Mexican-Americans. The youngest was a baby boy about 6 months old. He screamed and squirmed in pain. The flesh on his lower body was raw because he had diarrhea. He had been soiling himself all day without being changed or washed. Next to him on the front seat was a little girl—about 3 or 4. She burned with fever. In the back seat, a 6-year-old boy lay unconscious. He was hardly breathing.

After looking around frantically the man found the parents. They were in a nearby orchard picking fruit—for about 80 cents an hour. They started at 6 a.m. and would finish at 8 p.m.

That night the man went back to his motel. He was still shaking at the sight of those sick and dying Mexican-American children. He told a friend what he saw. The friend turned to him and said, "Don't bother with those people. That's the way they've always lived. They're used to it."

Those words were said in the Southwest about poor Mexican-Americans. But I have heard the same kind of words said in the Northeast about poor Negro Americans. They have been said about the poor white people of Appalachia, the Eskimos in Alaska, the Indians in Oklahoma. Those words have been said about every one of America's 26 million poor people.

Who has been saying them? The hard-core rich. Those Americans who have allowed their material wealth to harden and blind them to the needs and rights of poor America. Right now, nothing is more damaging to our country than this attitude of smugness. When a portion of affluent America says "Don't bother with the poor," it threatens to make a tragedy of our hopes and a travesty of our democracy. It could lead the affluent to become more haughty and the poor more hating. It could make communication less clear and community less certain.

WORSE THAN THIS, it can make the war on poverty not just harder to win, but even harder to explain. When enough people like the hard-core rich try to convince the rest of America that we shouldn't bother with the poor, then perhaps pretty soon we won't. The Congress can cut the budget of the poverty program—as it did by $307 million—and some misguided people will be glad.

In the Southwest, according to a special report by the University of Wisconsin based on the last census, Mexican-Americans average 7.1 years of schooling against 12.1 for Anglos. In Texas, it is 4.8 years. Economists say that a high school diploma is worth at least $60,000 over a lifetime. But what if you don't even have a grade school diploma? If you're lucky, you can pick fruit for 80¢ an hour. That's about $30,000 over a lifetime—or less than $2 000 a year.

Only 19 percent of Mexican-American men are in white-collar jobs. Most of the rest are employed as semi-skilled workers, if employed at all. The actual unemployment rate is roughly twice that of Anglos.

In the metropolitan areas of the Southwest, over 33 percent of Mexican-American families live in overcrowded houses.

Those are some of the things that happen when some affluent white Americans say, "Don't bother with those people."

Job Rise Moderate:

Unemployment Rate Holds at 3.6 Percent

strong demand for cars and other durable goods, the report said.

Job losses of 45,000 in mining and 15,000 in the federal government were recorded. This was the fourth straight monthly drop in federal jobs, the report noted.

The Labor Dept. report disclosed a slowdown in the growth of the labor force, contrasting with rapid gains in 1966 and 1967.

The labor force totaled 78.9 million in October, rising by only 750,000 from October a year ago. It was, the report pointed out, "the smallest increase for this time period since 1961."

The labor force growth trend reflects a leveling off among adult men and women, with the teenage increase continuing in line with demographic trends, the report said.

The nation's total employment was up 1.2 million from a year ago to 76.4 million in October. Nonfarm jobs rose by 1.5 million over this period, an increase partially offset by a 300,000 decline in agricultural jobs, the report added. Most of the over-the-year job gain occurred last winter, with a seasonally adjusted job growth of only 200,000 since February.

The key breadwinner groups fared well, according to the October job report. There were continuing low levels of 1.7 percent for married men and 3.2 percent for fulltime workers.

However, the jobless rate for Negroes rose to 7.4 percent from September's 6.7 percent while the rate for whites held at 3.2 percent. The Negro jobless rate averages 6.8 percent for the first 10 months of 1968, below the 7.4 percent rate of 1967.

The Labor Dept. also reported that the average hourly earnings of rank and file workers were up by 7.4 percent since October 1967, with weekly earnings up by 7.1 percent.

Average hourly earnings edged upward by 1 cent over the month to $2.92 in October. But since the seasonally adjusted workweek was down by two-tenths of 1 percent, average weekly pay declined by 20 cents to $110.67.

In manufacturing, the average workweek was 41.0 hours, seasonally adjusted. This was off by one-tenth of 1 percent from September but remained above the 40.7 hours average for the first 10 months of this year.

A companion report released by the Labor Dept. showed that the nation's 150 major job centers maintained record low unemployment levels for the third consecutive month.

The November classification listed only 6 major areas with "substantial" unemployment—that is, a jobless rate of 6 percent or more. A year ago there were 9 such areas.

The six areas are: Fresno and Stockton, Calif.; Muskegon-Muskegon Heights, Mich.; Mayaguez and Ponce, Puerto Rico and Wheeling, W. Va.

2 Shoe Unions Win Pacts At Brown Plants

St. Louis—Two shoe unions won contract benefits estimated at 50.5 cents an hour for 12,000 employes of the Brown Shoe Co. The contracts apply to 35 plants of the company in Missouri, Illinois, Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi.

Management signed new two-year pacts with the Boot & Shoe Workers and the United Shoe Workers a few hours before expiration of the old contracts. They give wage hikes of 17 cents an hour effective Dec. 1, 1968 and another 15 cents a year later for hourly workers. Piece workers get raises of 8 and 7.5 cents an hour on the same dates.

Minimum hourly rates for employes with three to 12 months' service will be raised to $1.75 in three steps.

A clause under which management will provide severance pay of $30 for each year of employment up to 30 years also was agreed to. A ninth paid holiday, increases in pension credits, and improvements in medical and hospital benefits are other features of the new pacts.

The unions said the company's practice of rebuilding or relocating outmoded factories in the same communities has helped stabilize employment in Brown Shoe Co. areas for many years. The severance pay provision is an added safeguard, they said.

NLRB Crackdown Hits Job Referral Favoritism

The secretary-treasurer of a San Francisco chauffeurs' union acted illegally when he helped two drivers get jobs but failed to help three others who voted against him in the union's election, the National Labor Relations Board ruled.

A three-member board panel ordered Local 923 of the unaffiliated Teamsters to stop discriminating in job referrals and to post notices to that effect in its meeting halls.

The discrimination came, the board said, when Yellow Cab bought the state certificates of an airport limousine company and notified the drivers to file new job applications with Yellow Cab if they wanted to retain the limousine jobs. Thereafter the union secretary-treasurer urged two limousine drivers to apply but "simply told" three other drivers about the hiring procedure.

The three others were men who had notified the official that they voted against him in the last election. The official did not actively work against the hiring of the three but nevertheless broke the law by helping the two drivers who were hired directly by Yellow, the board ruled.

"It it well established," the NLRB found, "that opposition to the re-election of an incumbent union official is protected activity." In this case, the union official "clearly demonstrated to employes that their job opportunities would be curtailed if they refused to support incumbent union officials," the board said.

The union argued that, in the absence of an exclusive hiring hall, drivers are not dependent on the union for jobs and discrimination by the union will not have a coercing effect. The board rejected the argument, saying "an employe who knows that he is reducing his chances for future employment by supporting a particular candidate is being restrained and coerced."

BACKPAY totaling $513,000 has been collected so far from J.P. Stevens & Co. by Textile Workers like some of those shown: Carl Richmond, with daughter; Garvis Powers; Burns Cox of TWUA staff, Tom Edens, and Albert Sanders, holding check for $27,029. Nation's second largest textile chain will pay about $1 million for firing 89 Carolina workers in an effort to smash their union. Other charges are pending against Stevens.

Jobless Benefit List Lowest Since 1945

The percentage of workers drawing unemployment benefits during the third quarter of this year matched the lowest figure since World War II, the Labor Dept. reported.

The figure of 1.9 percent of 49 million workers now covered by unemployment insurance equaled the low point set in the third quarter in 1966, when 45 million were covered.

The low percentage mark reflects continuing improvement in the economy, better conditions in the auto industry and favorable weather, the Labor Dept. said.

Job Training Set for 1,000 In Appalachia

Organized labor will develop job-training opportunities for 1,000 jobless and underemployed persons in Appalachia under a new contract with the Labor Dept.

Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz announced that the training program will be carried out by the AFL-CIO Appalachian Council, headed by Miles C. Stanley, who also is president of the West Virginia AFL-CIO.

The contract, federally funded for $1,168,341, calls for training in an 11-state area: Alabama, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia and West Virginia.

Many of the projects to be developed over 18 months to April 15, 1970, Wirtz said, will be directed to apprentice-entry training in the building and construction trades.

The on-the-job training, in a wide range of occupations, is to be provided by private firms, industrial associations, labor organizations, and others, with reimbursement for job instructor fees.

A number of projects in the program will require both classroom-type and on-the-job training.

Truesdale Appointed To Labor Board Post

John C. Truesdale was named deputy executive secretary of the National Labor Relations Board, succeeding Howard W. Kleeb, retired. Truesdale joined the NLRB staff in 1948 as a field examiner and has been associate executive secretary since 1963.

Union Leader, 6 Locals Cited for Safety Efforts

Chicago—The Labor Conference of the National Safety Council presented awards here to a local union leader and six unions for outstanding efforts toward accident prevention.

The conference also heard addresses by a number of speakers, including Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson, and elected officers for the coming year.

The conference's highest recognition to an individual—its Distinguished Service to Safety Award—was bestowed on Julius N. Jacobsen, safety chairman of the Oil Chemical & Atomic Workers Local 4-447, Destrehan, La.

The conference's highest recognition to an organization—the Harry Read Award of Honor—was presented to Jacobsen's local, as well as to Steelworkers Local 6500, Sudbury, Ont., and the Longshoremen's headquarters in New York.

The Harry Read Award of Commendation went to Steelworkers Local 1005, Hamilton, Ont., Cement, Lime & Gypsum Workers Local 366, Oakville, Ont., and Machinists Air Capital Lodge 1650, Riverside, Mo.

The Harry Read Award of Merit went to the Illinois Dept. of Labor's Division of Safety Inspection & Education.

The various Harry Read awards honor the late assistant to the AFL-CIO secretary-treasurer for his work in promoting labor safety. He was one of the founders of the conference and served on its board.

Presentations were made by Paul H. Connelley, safety director of the Carpenters and retiring chairman of the conference, during the NSC 56th National Safety Congress.

Mrs. Peterson chided the NSC for its soft position on the Occupational Safety & Health Act in Congress last year. The Labor Conference itself backed the legislation and assailed the council's position.

Recalling that a council labor-management committee had last March adopted a set of conclusions favorable to the legislation, Mrs. Peterson scored the NSC for not adopting the conclusions as its own.

Instead, she charged, the council failed to testify at hearings on the bill and finally came up with a "position" that amounted to "a compendium of weak and qualified phrases" on the legislation.

The council's final position, Mrs. Peterson said, was the result of its "domination" by the Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers, both of whom "bitterly opposed" the safety bill.

If the council and other state and safety bodies expect to be spokesmen for safety, she concluded, "then they must cease being what . . . many of them now are: spokesmen for corporate interests, and become more concerned with lives and well-being" of workers.

The conference elected Rex Lauck, assistant editor of the United Mine Workers Journal, as its new chairman, succeeding Connelley. Alan F. Burch, safety director for the Operating Engineers, was elected vice chairman, the position Lauck had previously held.

Sec.-Treas. Arthur P. Gildea of the Brewery Workers was re-elected NSC vice president for labor.

Craft Unions Stress Record On 'Prefabs'

Union craftsmen "will build and man any project that American industry can design," a representative of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. told the annual Building Products Executives Conference in Washington.

Speaking to more than 500 manufacturing executives in attendance, William J. McSorley, assistant to the president of the BCTD, also exploded "myths" that construction workers oppose progress in the building industry.

He cited a recent study, financed by the department, on prefabrication in the building industry, which found that in the long run prefabrication will open new opportunities to building trades unions.

"We have never resisted prefabrication per se," McSorley said, pointing to the fact that union members currently are building structures in Washington that are more than 70 percent comprised of prefabricated parts.

Elsewhere, McSorley told how union members handle the machinery that makes possible the movement of prefabrications, and how they use and welcome many other new techniques, tools and materials in construction.

FIRST NEGRO WOMAN elected to serve in Congress, Mrs. Shirley Chisholm salutes campaign workers in New York's Bedford-Stuyvesant district. A Democrat, she defeated James Farmer, former Congress of Racial Equality leader, after four-year term in state assembly.

Rocky Mountain States Stick Solidly with Nixon

The largely conservative Rocky Mountain region remained true to tradition and gave Richard Nixon a solid block of 25 electoral votes on Election Day.

There were few surprises in the six-state area of New Mexico, Utah, Colorado, Idaho, Montana and Wyoming as five out of six incumbent governors and senators won re-election.

The incumbent who lost was Goldwaterite Gov. Tim Babcock (R) of Montana, who went down clutching his sales tax proposal. Democratic Atty. Gen. Forrest Anderson, backed by COPE, ousted the GOP from the governor's chair for the first time in 16 years.

In conservative Idaho in a conservative year, liberal Sen. Frank Church (D) perhaps provided a surprise in soundly beating his rival while all other Republicans won big.

New Mexico kept one tradition and broke another. The state gave its four electoral votes to Nixon, continuing its habit of going with the winner in every presidential election since 1920.

But New Mexico's two House seats, both Democratic, were lost to the Republicans. This marked the first time in 38 years that the state had elected a Republican congressman.

These two turnovers increased the GOP edge in House seats in the region from 7-6 to 9-4.

Here is a state-by-state summary:

New Mexico—Gov. David F. Cargo (R) was re-elected in a close contest over former state Sen. Fabian Chavez. Both men were considered friendly to organized labor.

Republicans scored upsets in both of the new House districts; the voting formerly had been at-large. Manuel Lujan, Jr. (R) defeated five-term Rep. Thomas Morris handily. In the 2nd District, staunch conservative Ed Foreman (R), a former congressman from Texas, narrowly beat Rep. E. S. Johnny Walker (D).

Utah—Democratic Gov. Calvin Rampton defeated Carl Buehner (R) by a wide margin. Sen. Wallace Bennett (R) staved off a strong challenge from Milton Weilenmann (D) to win a fourth term. The state's two House seats were retained by the GOP.

Colorado—This liberal-moderate state voted unevenly, re-electing conservative Sen. Peter Dominick over former Gov. Steve McNichols and returning all four incumbent congressmen. Three House seats were retained by the Democrats and all had COPE support.

Idaho—Sen. Church won easily in a bitter campaign against militant conservative Rep. George Hansen. The GOP held both House seats, with Orval Hansen—no relation—taking the seat vacated by George Hansen.

Montana—While Nixon was carrying the state only narrowly, Gov. Babcock, one of the nation's leading conservatives, was being defeated decisively by COPE-backed Forrest Anderson. The state's two House seats remained divided, with Reps. James Battin (R) and Arnold Olsen (D) both winning fifth terms.

Wyoming—Republican John Wold (R), who defeated incumbent William Henry Harrison in the primary, beat Velma Linford (D) for the state's at-large House seat.

Negro Woman Wins Election To House Seat

Mrs. Shirley Chisholm, 43-year-old Democratic assemblyman in New York, won election Nov. 5 as the nation's first Negro woman member of Congress.

Hers was the only new feminine face to emerge with a victory in congressional contests. Nine incumbent women House members were returned to office, and one was defeated—Mrs. Frances Bolton (R-O.), who had thrown off all challengers since her election in 1940. She lost to Rep. Charles A. Vanik (D) after redistricting by the Ohio Legislature.

Mrs. Chisholm defeated James Farmer (R), former national director of the Congress of Racial Equality, in the newly apportioned 12th congressional district of Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant section.

Congresswomen re-elected were Democrats Patsy Mink, Hawaii; Martha Griffiths, Michigan; Leonor K. Sullivan, Missouri; Edith Green, Oregon; Julia Butler Hansen, Washington; and Republicans Margaret Heckler, Massachusetts; Charlotte Reid, Illinois; Florence P. Dwyer, New Jersey; Catherine May, Washington.

Sen. Margaret Chase Smith (R-Me.), not up for re-election this year, remains the only woman member of the Senate. Democrat Katherine Peden, Kentucky radio station owner, lost by more than 30,000 votes to M. W. Cook (R).

Bucks GOP Trend:

6-State Mid-Atlantic Area Goes Strongly for Humphrey

The populous mid-Atlantic region—six states and the District of Columbia—broke with a tradition of going with the winner in presidential elections to give Hubert H. Humphrey 92 of its 112 electoral votes.

The states—New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware—also frustrated Republican hopes for a major gain in the House.

Many more Democratic than Republican seats had been considered vulnerable. The GOP picked up three House seats held by Democrats—about five fewer than they had anticipated. But the Democrats captured three previously Republican seats and the region's House lineup remained 58 Democrats and 39 Republicans.

Republicans could take consolation, however, in a sweep of the three Senate seats and two governorships at stake in the region in this election. Both governorships and two of the Senate seats had been held by Democrats.

In the region's popular vote, nearly complete totals gave Humphrey 842,000 votes more than Nixon, with the Wallace vote far below early autumn predictions.

Here is how the election turned out in each state:

New York—In mid-September, the Democratic Party in New York appeared so shattered that it seemed all Nixon had to do was pick up the pieces—and the state's 43 electoral votes.

But the surge to Humphrey carried him to an easy victory, with 52 percent of the vote to 43 percent for Nixon and a mere 5 percent for Wallace.

Labor-backed Republican Sen. Jacob K. Javits won his expected victory over Democrat Paul O'Dwyer and the Conservative Party candidate, James Buckley.

Democrats kept their 26-15 margin in House seats by losing only two of the five seats the Republicans expected to pick up and taking two GOP House seats in exchange.

In normally Republican upstate areas, Democrat John G. Dow lost his seat to Martin B. McKneally, a past commander of the American Legion, and Republican Hamilton Fish, Jr., narrowly won a district in which the Democratic incumbent was not running for re-election. Fish's father represented the district from 1920 to 1945.

The Democrats won two New York City districts in which Republican incumbents did not seek re-election—the 24th in the Bronx and, in a mild upset, the traditionally "silk stocking" 17th in Manhattan. The Bronx victor, Mario Biaggi, had Conservative Party endorsement; the Manhattan winner, Edwin I. Koch, had Liberal Party backing.

Pennsylvania—Almost everyone except the union leaders working day and night on the campaign gave Nixon the edge in Pennsylvania. But the state's 29 electoral votes ended up firmly in the Humphrey column.

The Senate race was a different story. Sen. Joseph S. Clark, bidding for a third term, was upset by Republican Richard S. Schweiker. Clark, an outspoken liberal, had lost some support by a strong stand for gun registration and had often bucked the party organization. Schweiker, 25 years younger, is rated as a moderate. His COPE record as a congressman shows 25 Right, 22 Wrong votes during his four terms.

Pennsylvania's House delegation remains 14 Democrats, 13 Republicans. A Republican had hoped to win the 6th District, where Democrat George M. Rhodes is retiring. But labor-backed Gus Yatron came from behind to keep the seat Democratic.

New Jersey—Nixon barely won the state's 17 electoral votes he had been expected to take handily.

In the House, the big news was what didn't happen. The Republicans failed to win the redistricted seat of Rep. Henry Helstoski which had been virtually conceded them. They were unable to unseat Rep. James J. Howard, Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr., or any of the other Democratic congressmen who were running scared.

Maryland—It was close, but Gov. Spiro T. Agnew couldn't carry his own state's 10 electoral votes for the Nixon-Agnew ticket.

But Republican Charles Mathias defeated incumbent Sen. Daniel B. Brewster in a three-way race which failed to generate any sharp issues between the major party candidates. Brewster had a COPE record of 51 Right, 1 Wrong; Mathias, in the House, cast 28 Right, 18 Wrong votes.

The GOP gained an even split in the House lineup with the victory of Lawrence J. Hogan over incumbent Hervey G. Machen.

Democrats are certain to take over the governorship when Agnew resigns and the legislature elects a successor.

West Virginia — A solid Humphrey victory for the seven electoral votes.

A see-sawing gubernatorial contest finally toppled to Republican Arch A. Moore for a GOP pickup. But the Democrats retaliated by winning the House seat vacated by Moore. The new congressman is Robert H. Mollohan, who represented the district from 1953-1957.

Delaware—This state stayed as Republican as predicted by giving its 3 electoral votes to Nixon and re-electing its GOP congressman. The upset was the election of Republican Russell W. Peterson over Gov. Charles L. Terry, who ran a "law and order" campaign with considerable conservative support.

District of Columbia—Humphrey was expected to win the district's three electoral votes big—and he did. He won handily in predominantly white precincts and overwhelmingly among the city's Negro majority.

3 Democratic Incumbents Escape GOP Sweep in Great Plains States

Four Great Plains states—the Dakotas, Nebraska and Kansas—gave their 20 electoral votes to Richard Nixon and generally kept their traditional Republican complexion.

However, voters split their tickets to return three Democratic stalwarts to office: Governors William L. Guy of North Dakota and Robert B. Docking of Kansas and Sen. George S. McGovern of South Dakota.

The GOP maintained its 12-0 monopoly of House seats in this grain and cattle region and retained Senate seats in North Dakota and Kansas.

This is how some of the major contests turned out in each state:

North Dakota—Guy was elected to his fourth term, getting nearly 60 percent of the vote against Robert P. McCarney, a Bismarck car salesman, even though Nixon carried the state by a sizable margin.

Incumbent Sen. Milton R. Young (R), in the Senate since 1945, easily defeated his Democratic opponent, Fargo Mayor Herschel Lashkowitz.

Republicans Mark Andrews and Tom Kleppe, the state's two House members, won re-election over their opponents, Bruce Hagen, state public service commissioner, and former Democratic Rep. Rolland Redlin.

South Dakota—McGovern easily won a second Senate term over former GOP Gov. Archie M. Gubbrud in the face of a Nixon margin in the state.

McGovern's victory was achieved even though the Republicans, without strong opposition in other races, concentrated their entire attack upon him.

In the race for governor, Republican State Attorney General Frank L. Farrar defeated Robert M. Chamberlin, a farmer and former Democratic state chairman.

GOP Representatives Ben Reifel and E. Y. Berry were returned to office over Democratic challengers, Frank Denholm, a Brookings attorney, and David Garner, a Rapid City salesman.

Nebraska—In the state's first district, Rep. Robert V. Denney (R) won a close victory over former Rep. Clair Callan (D), who sought to get back the seat he lost in 1966.

Rep. Glenn Cunningham (R) won a seventh term in the state's second district, turning back a bid by Mrs. Frank B. Morrison, wife of a former Nebraska governor.

Rep. David T. Martin (R) was re-elected to a fifth term, defeating J. V. Dean, a Gothenburg implement dealer.

There were no contests for the Senate or the governorship this year.

Kansas—In a state that went strongly Republican in presidential, senatorial and five congressional races, the big news was Docking's re-election over Republican Rick Harman, a restaurant owner and party leader.

Docking became only the second Democratic governor in Kansas history to win re-election to a consecutive second term.

Rep. Bob Dole, a conservative Republican, defeated William I. Robinson, a Wichita attorney, for the Senate seat being vacated by Sen. Frank Carlson (R).

The only new face in the state's congressional makeup will be Keith G. Sebelius, a Republican, who will succeed Dole in the House. He defeated George W. Meeker, a state representative.

House Seats Unchanged:

Nixon Win in West Fails to Aid GOP

As the nation went Tuesday, so went the seven states of the Far West.

Republican strength in the presidential contest was usually matched by strong pockets of Democratic resistance in the battle for state and national legislative seats.

The Republican team of Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew captured 54—probably 57—of the area's 70 electoral votes. Alaska's returns were still incomplete and not certain but were leaning toward the GOP ticket.

Only Washington and Hawaii were counted in Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey's column with 13 electoral votes between them.

The Humphrey-Muskie team staged a valiant fight for California's 40 electoral votes.

San Francisco County piled up a 70,000-vote lead for the vice president; Alameda County across the bay added 66,000 votes. Other Bay Area counties and the two most populous areas in the Central Valley built Humphrey's total plurality to nearly 200,000 votes.

But it couldn't hold against the onslaught of votes from the conservative voting areas of Southern California.

Democrats made a battle of it in Los Angeles County, where the Nixon margin was held to 37,000 votes. But they were slaughtered in Orange County by a 163,000-vote gain and a 92,000-vote boost in San Diego County.

While Nixon won the state with a 221,000-vote margin, Democrat Alan Cranston was able to pile up a strong enough vote in the northern counties to stand off the southern push for conservative Republican Max Rafferty.

Cranston held a 430,000-vote edge in Northern California and trailed by only 92,000 in the South. He takes the seat now held by Republican Thomas H. Kuchel, who was defeated by Rafferty in the primary.

Democrats lost a Senate seat, though, when one-time GOP presidential candidate Barry Goldwater easily defeated Roy L. Elson for the seat vacated by 91-year-old Carl Hayden of Arizona.

Another Democratic seat was in danger in Oregon where, with 97 percent of the vote reported, the veteran Wayne Morse trailed his Republican opponent, Robert Packwood, by a narrow margin.

Morse headquarters in Portland were still hopeful that they could snatch a victory from the count as the final thousands of ballots were being counted.

Democrat Mike Gravel appeared to be successful in his quest for Alaska's second Senate seat after defeating veteran Ernest Gruening in the Democratic primary. With votes still coming in from the back country, Gravel had built a solid lead as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

Sen. Warren Magnuson of Washington coasted to victory—a sharp contrast to the close call he underwent six years ago. His margin this time was better than 2 to 1.

Senators Daniel K. Inouye of Hawaii and Alan Bible of Nevada, too, had no difficulty in winning re-election.

Party affiliations of house delegations from these seven states were substantially unchanged in the unofficial counts. Delegations were returned virtually intact in state after state — Alaska, Arizona, California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and Hawaii.

Former Lt. Gov. Glenn Anderson captured the California 17th District seat left vacant by the retirement of Rep. Cecil King.

Rep. James Corman turned back a challenge from former congressman Joe Holt, 102,000 to 74,000. Rep. John V. Tunney was re-elected in California's 38th District, though he had been reported in a close campaign.

Incumbents in other tough battles around the West managed to hold their ground.

On the state level, Republican Daniel Evans turned back the challenge of Atty. Gen. John J. O'Connell for Washington's gubernatorial chair.

In Arizona, another Republican governor, Jack Williams, held his place in the face of the challenge of Sam Goddard.

Republicans in California came a step closer to control of the state legislature. The Senate remains evenly split, but late returns indicate that they will win control of the assembly by a two-vote margin.

Republicans are holding control of Washington's lower house, and probably will shave Democratic control of the Senate.

Humphrey's Surge in Midwest Falls Short in Most Key States

Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey and his running mate, Edmund Muskie, did better than expected in the eight Midwest states but not quite well enough to prevent Republican Richard Nixon from winning the election.

The Democratic team won the states of Michigan and Minnesota for 31 of the region's 139 electoral votes. But Nixon took Illinois and Ohio with a combined electoral vote of 52 to block Humphrey's bid for a come-from-behind victory.

Nixon also won the traditional Republican states of Indiana, Iowa and Wisconsin and held a paper-thin margin in Missouri to account for about one-third of his electoral college total. The slim Nixon victories in Illinois and Ohio and Missouri—among the last states to report, insured that the Republican candidate would win the presidency without the need for the decision to go to the House of Representatives.

Humphrey was moving up in each of the eight states due largely to an all-out labor effort. The hard campaigning by labor was credited with reducing the vote for third party candidate George Wallace.

Republicans made gains in the area's gubernatorial races but Democrats held their own in the U.S. Senate contests and the 113 House seats appear to be split about the same as prior to the election—68 Republican and 45 Democratic.

The GOP overturned Democratic governors in Illinois, Indiana and Iowa while holding on to Wisconsin. Democrats held on to Missouri. In the Senate races, the Republicans took Ohio away from the Democrats while the Democrats won the Iowa seat vacated by the retirement of Republican Bourke Hickenlooper.

Here are the highlights of the various key races in the eight states:

Illinois—Humphrey was generally regarded as moving up in the Illinois race as the campaign neared decision day but the spurt was not enough to head off a Nixon victory of about 100,000 votes.

In the Senate contest, veteran Republican leader Everett Dirksen defeated challenger William G. Clark, the state's attorney general. The nationally known Dirksen was just too much of a vote-getter to be cut down by Clark.

The Republicans also won the governor's race with Richard Ogilvie, board president of Cook County. Ogilvie defeated Gov. Samuel H. Shapiro who had moved up from lieutenant governor when former Gov. Otto Kerner resigned to become a federal judge.

Indiana—Traditionally Republican Indiana went for Nixon and Republican Edgar Whitcomb for governor but returned Democratic Sen. Birch Bayh for another six-year term. Republicans increased their congressional delegation margin from 6-5 to 7-4 when E. Ross Adair (R) beat J. Edward Roush (D) in a battle of two incumbents thrown into the same district because of reapportionment.

Iowa—Democratic Gov. Harold E. Hughes won a close race for the Senate seat of Republican Hickenlooper, who did not run for re-election. Hughes defeated David M. Stanley. The Democrats were unable to hold the governor's chair when Republican Robert D. Ray outdistanced Democrat Paul Franzenburg.

Michigan—Michigan carried for Humphrey as labor mounted an all-out drive for the Democratic ticket. Labor-backed Democrats won all eight statewide education posts and a liberal Democrat was elected to the state supreme court.

The congressional delegation remained the same—12 Republicans and 5 Democrats. A graduated income tax proposal was defeated by a substantial margin.

Minnesota — Humphrey carried his home state of Minnesota by a comfortable margin. The congressional delegation remained at three Democrats and five Republicans as labor joined in beating back a well-financed Republican effort to defeat Joseph E. Karth in the 4th District and Donald M. Fraser in the 5th.

The liberals are in a position to pick up some seats in the state legislature.

Missouri — The state's 12 electoral votes apparently went to Nixon in a close race. Democrats retained the governorship and the U.S. Senate seat. Democratic Gov. Warren E. Hearnes was re-elected. Lt.-Gov. Thomas F. Eagleton defeated Republican Rep. Thomas B. Curtis for the Senate seat formerly held by Edward V. Long.

Missouri's first Negro congressman was elected in the 1st District when Democrat William Clay won over Republican R. Curtis Crawford.

Ohio—Nixon didn't do as well in Ohio this year as he did in 1960 but his 100,000 margin nailed down this key state. Here again Humphrey was moving up but time ran out on his chances to overtake Nixon.

The Democratic Senate seat formerly held by Frank Lausche went to Republican Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe who posted a narrow 120,000 margin over former Congressman John J. Gilligan.

Democrats picked up one congressional seat as Charles A. Vanik defeated Frances P. Bolton in the 22nd District. Louis A. Stokes, a Democrat, became the first Negro elected to Congress from Ohio.

Wisconsin—Humphrey lost Wisconsin but Democratic Sen. Gaylord Nelson was re-elected over an opponent who benefitted from a well-financed campaign. Republican Gov. Warren P. Knowles was also re-elected as he defeated State Atty. Gen. Bronson C. LaFollette.

Nelson was the target of drug companies who are unhappy with his campaign to cut the cost of prescription medicines.

Humphrey Carries Cities:

Rural, Suburban Vote Key To Nixon's Narrow Victory

his election, Nixon acknowledged the sharp divisions within the nation reflected in the results. He pledged that "the great objective" of his Administration will be "to bring the American people together."

"This will be an open Administration," Nixon said, "open to new ideas, open to men and women of both parties, open to critics as well as those who support us."

He also paid tribute to the "gallant and courageous fight" of Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey, the man who had nearly succeeded against overwhelming odds in retaining the presidency for the Democrats.

The popular vote count, as the AFL-CIO News went to press, showed virtually a dead heat between Humphrey and Nixon, each with about 43 percent of the vote. But Nixon had captured the electoral votes of 32 states for his total of 302, well over the 270 needed to assure election. Humphrey was the victor in 13 states and the District of Columbia for a total of 191 electoral votes and the third-party candidate, George C. Wallace, had taken five southern states for a total of 45.

Nixon held a lead of about 1,000 votes in Alaska with returns from some 75 "bush" precincts still to be counted, and the state's 3 electoral votes could finally wind up in Humphrey's column. Still uncounted absentee ballots could determine the final outcome in Missouri, now given to Nixon, and in Maryland, which so far has gone to Humphrey.

The presidential election was one of the closest in the nation's history and Nixon's majority was not established until mid-morning of the day after Election Day when the last remaining precincts in Illinois gave him the state and put him over the top in electoral votes.

Illinois, in fact, told the story of the election. Most observers had conceded it well in advance as firmly in Nixon's camp just as two months ago they had given Humphrey little chance of coming close to victory.

But support for the Vice President took a strong upward surge in the latter stages of the campaign, and became evident as returns were counted in such key states as Illinois, Ohio, New Jersey and California—all of which the Nixon forces had counted on. All four finally went to the Republican by narrow margins, but a swing of one or two to Humphrey could have produced an Electoral College stalemate.

Humphrey's main strength was produced in the industrial East, where he captured 122 of his electoral vote total, including such big states as New York and Pennsylvania. He also took Michigan and Texas among the top eight industrial states of the nation.

Even in states he lost, the Vice President scored heavy majorities in the urban industrial areas where organized labor and Negro civil rights groups turned out the vote.

The election also may have had a beneficial side effect in smashing the national political ambitions of Wallace, whose campaign appeal was directed to the basest instincts of the voters, to racial fears and hatreds, to a simplistic call for "law and order" via the nightstick and the bayonet.

In terms of electoral votes, Wallace and his running mate, retired Air Force Gen. Curtis LeMay, took three of the four states carried by

SPIRO T. AGNEW

Strom Thurmond and his States' Rights Party in 1948—Alabama, Louisiana, and Mississippi—plus two other southern states, Arkansas and Georgia.

The third-party contender thus emerged as no more than a sectional candidate, running well below what the early polls had indicated his strength to be in blue-collar and lower middle-class areas of the North and West.

The election also brought a new figure to the forefront of the national political scene—Maine Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, the Democratic vice presidential candidate, whose campaign style stressing calm reason evoked broad support among the voters and added considerable strength to the Humphrey ticket.

Humphrey, indeed, made a point throughout the campaign of contrasting his choice of Muskie as his running mate with Nixon's selection of Maryland Gov. Spiro T. Agnew as a candidate who would not offend such conservative southern Republicans as Thurmond.

For the Vice President, who came so close to the presidency, the defeat marked a disappointing setback in a public career dating back nearly 25 years, including 16 years as a leader of the liberal forces in the U.S. Senate.

But in defeat, Humphrey if anything added to his luster simply through the gameness of his come-from-behind struggle that fell just short of succeeding.

When the Vice President first announced his candidacy a month after Pres. Johnson's stunning declaration that he would not seek a new term, organized labor was the first major group in Humphrey's corner. In the months that followed, he methodically built support among disparate elements of the Democratic Party to win the nomination at a bitterly fought party convention.

The struggle, however, left the Democrats splintered over the conduct of the war in Viet Nam. In contrast, the Republicans had submerged their differences in a show of unity as they sensed the opportunity to recapture the White House.

Against these odds, Humphrey gradually moved upward, stressing the need for national unity in striving for peace abroad and in the turbulent ghettos of the inner cities. While he failed to win the election, the steady course of his campaign succeeded in reuniting the divided elements of his party.

For Nixon, his election was a personal triumph, a comeback of immense proportions. Once before, in 1960, after serving eight years as Vice President under Pres. Eisenhower, Nixon had been the Republican standard-bearer only to lose to John F. Kennedy in an election almost as close as this one.

Two years later, Nixon was dealt a staggering setback by the voters of his home state, California, when he lost by some 300,000 votes in his bid to take the governorship from Edmund G. (Pat) Brown. He vowed then that he was through with politics and moved to New York to return to law practice.

But the Republican Party was left in a shambles after the 1964 Goldwater debacle, and Nixon was recruited to help GOP congressional candidates in 1966. He stepped into the party leadership vacuum and began to build for a new presidential drive.

Nixon posted an unbroken string of victories in this year's Republican presidential primaries and moved on to capture the nomination, overcoming a late challenge from New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller.

He campaigned coolly and confidently, keying his appeal to a call for "new leadership" and promising to end the war in Viet Nam and crime and turmoil in the cities without spelling out how he proposed to do either.

The voters have now given him the chance—and the responsibility—to attack these and all the other problems confronting the nation.

COPE-Backed Candidates Win Majority of Races

Nearly six out of every 10 candidates endorsed by the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education for the 91st Congress were victorious, an analysis of the new Congress disclosed.

Of the 353 candidates endorsed by COPE for the House and Senate 201, or 57 percent, won their contests. In the 1966 congressional elections only about 53 percent of COPE-endorsed candidates won at the polls.

Including candidates for the governorships running with COPE endorsement, the winning percentage came to 56, a bit higher than the 55 percent victories scored in the comparable 1960 election.

In 1964 in the Johnson landslide, COPE-backed candidates set a record high victory margin of 67 percent, topping the previous high of 62 percent in the 1962 congressional elections.

COPE endorsements are made at the state and congressional district levels by state AFL-CIO groups. The endorsements are based primarily on the records or the espoused programs of the candidates in terms of a wide number of economic, welfare and labor issues.

In the 1968 campaign COPE endorsed 326 House candidates of whom 186 were recorded as winners. Fifteen of the 27 Senate candidates won election and six of the 17 endorsed gubernatorial candidates.

VICTORY SIGN is flashed by Alan Cranston, Democratic candidate for the Senate in California, to campaign workers in Los Angeles. Cranston's wife is at his left.

Wallace Bid Repudiated Outside Southern Base

George C. Wallace came out of this election as a sectional candidate rather than as the leader of a significant national political movement.

The third-party candidate appealed to the nation's fears, frustrations and prejudices. He posed as a friend of workers and the "little people" and voiced confidence that the rank-and-file of the trade union movement would rally to his Confederate banner.

But when the votes were tallied, Wallace was overwhelmingly repudiated in every big industrial state.

He emerged as a significant force only in the South and border states—and even there won a majority of the vote only in Alabama and Mississippi.

The states he carried, except for Arkansas, were those which had gone for the Goldwater brand of right-wing Republicanism four years ago.

Wallace's 9 million votes undoubtedly influenced the election—and political analysts will spend many an hour debating how the election would have turned out if he had not been on the ballot in 50 states.

Since the surge to Humphrey was accompanied by a dropoff from earlier poll estimates of the Wallace strength, it could be argued that Wallace cost the Democrats the presidency. But his hard-core strength certainly included radical right extremists who otherwise might have voted for Nixon as the more conservative of the major party candidates.

Almost any splinter candidate can affect a close election in a key state.

But the role of "spoiler" is hardly a base on which to build a political movement. Whatever the initial attraction to Wallace in this campaign, as it neared the moment of decision, most Americans were unwilling to throw away their vote. In Ohio, more voters signed petitions to place Wallace on the ballot than voted for him on Election Day.

In terms of a national following, Wallace received a smaller percentage of the total vote cast than either Wisconsin Sen. Robert M. LaFollette in 1924 or Theodore Roosevelt in 1912. He did better than J. Storm Thurmond and Henry Wallace in 1948.

Most post-election analyses of the vote credit an all-out drive by the labor movement to expose the fraudulence of Wallace's claim to be a friend of workers with cutting down his impact in industrial areas.

To those who have followed the campaign closely, the impact of this effort was clearly visible. A top Wallace alde told newsmen, "we think a lot of our labor support was taken away from us at the last minute."

Wallace's choice of retired Gen. Curtis LeMay as his running mate—after former Kentucky Gov. Happy Chandler was found "too liberal" to go on the ticket—was intended to portray the Dixie-based party as a national movement. But the blunt-spoken LeMay merely raised fears of rash nuclear war—the "Bombsey Twins," as Humphrey labeled the ticket.

It reminded Americans of the grim and sober world responsibilities of the President of the United States—and that a suggestion by Wallace that he would run over "anarchists" if they got in the way of a presidential limousine is hardly a substitute for a dismal ignorance of world affairs.

Candidate Rejects R-T-W Backing

Philadelphia — A congressman seeking re-election seldom turns down endorsements. But a Philadelphia Democrat, Robert Nix, didn't want any "right-to-work" supporters voting for him on the false assumption that he is against the union shop.

Somehow the Pennsylvania "right-to-work" organization included his name on a list of candidates opposed to repeal of Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b).

Nix, who voted for repeal of 14(b) when it was before the House, fired off a telegram demanding a correction.

He was re-elected handily—without "right-to-work" support.

No Clear Shifts Produced In State Legislature Votes

NATIONAL UNITY after the nation has made its choice at the polls is symbolized by this post-election meeting of the Democratic candidates, Vice Pres. Hubert Humphrey and Sen. Edmund Muskie, with Pres.-Elect Richard Nixon in Florida.

Nixon Picks White House Staff Chiefs

The shape and tone of the Administration that will take office Jan. 20, 1969 began to emerge within a week of Pres.-Elect Richard M. Nixon's razor-thin victory.

Back in New York after a brief vacation in Florida where he met with Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, the defeated Democratic candidates, Nixon named two key members of his White House staff:

- Bryce Harlow, 52, to be assistant to the President for legislative and congressional affairs, a post he held in the Eisenhower Administration. Harlow is on leave as chief Washington lobbyist for Proctor & Gamble Co., a leading soap products manufacturer.
- H. R. "Bob" Haldeman, 42, to be assistant to the President for overall White House management, administration and appointments. Haldeman was chief-of-staff of the Nixon-Agnew campaign and is on leave as manager of the Los Angeles office of J. Walter Thompson Co., a major advertising agency.

More Expected

Further appointments were expected as the President-elect set up offices in the Pierre Hotel in New York, a few blocks from his home, to plan for the new Administration. A group of Nixon aides were also at work in Washington with members of the Johnson Administration to effect a smooth transition of government affairs.

The appointments and meetings came as the counting of votes insured Nixon's election with 302 votes in the Electoral College and a margin of about 260,000 popular votes over Humphrey. With the unofficial counting drawing to a close, Nixon had about 31 million votes, Humphrey 30.7 million and Wallace 9.8 million. The total vote was expected to reach close to 72 million.

Unofficial vote counts in Missouri left Nixon ahead with less than a 10,000 vote margin. His lead in Alaska was about 1,000 votes. In Maryland Humphrey held on to a 17,000 vote margin. It appeared fairly certain that unless major errors cropped up in the official canvass of the vote the states' status would remain unchanged. The three states do not have enough electoral votes to upset the outcome.

Agencies Told To Stabilize Construction

Pres. Johnson has called on all government departments and agencies to help reduce seasonality in construction in a move to lower costs and provide stable employment and incomes for construction workers.

As a major purchaser of the work of the construction industry, the President said in a memorandum, the government "has an indirect effect on fluctuations in construction activity. We in the federal government have a unique opportunity to help reduce seasonality in construction."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany wired the President on behalf of the federation and the Building & Construction Trades Dept. and its president C. J. Haggerty "warm thanks for your thoughtful and meaningful action."

Stiffer Laws Urged To Help Consumers

The federal government has a duty "to ensure the equal partnership of the consumer in the economy," declared Betty Furness in urging the Federal Trade Commission to live up to its potential in protecting the consumer.

Miss Furness, Pres. Johnson's Special Assistant for Consumer Affairs, called for a series of programs and tougher laws as the FTC opened what promise to be controversial hearings on consumer problems.

The controversy is guaranteed since Pres.-Elect Richard Nixon promised during the campaign that there would be less government regulation of business activities. The FTC could be reshaped as vacancies occur.

At the outset, several FTC members took issue with a national newsletter's warning to businessmen to "get ready for the biggest anti-business show in many years." Chairman Paul Rand Dixon and member A. Everette MacIntyre denied they harbored any anti-business ideas.

But John Schulz, a law professor and spokesman for a group of young law students who have just completed a study of the FTC, criticized the agency for having "too long paid lip service to consumer protection while in practice engaging in business protection."

Schulz charged that the FTC failed to confront the "product fixing" practiced by large corporations when they design obsolescence into certain products. He said the FTC needs product experts rather than lawyers to catch up with such sophisticated practices.

Schulz also scored the FTC for relying chiefly on "sanctionless, informal and voluntary enforcement methods" which had "little deterrent value."

Betty Furness used the hearings to express a broad consumer philosophy, remind the government of its duty and propose a program and laws with teeth.

Miss Furness, taking advantage of what she said "may be my very last chance" as a new Administration prepares to take over, expressed the view that national think-

Brand Drugs Prove Costly For Elderly

The nation's elderly would save at least $41.5 million a year if doctors prescribed drugs by generic (scientific) names instead of by manufacturers' brand names, a government report concluded.

A 139-page report of a Task Force on Prescription Drugs also found that the health needs of those over 65, compounded by the high cost of drugs, are "a medical and economic problem of major importance."

The task force, which has been studying the drug industry since May 1967, was established under the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare through a directive from Pres. Johnson.

The report, titled The Drug Users, is devoted not only to the cost of

'68 Elections Give GOP Slight Gain

Elections for 44 state legislatures this year produced as muddied a picture as the nation's vote for President and Congress —with no clearcut victory for Democrats or Republicans, liberals or conservatives.

Democrats held on to a slim majority in the number of legislatures they control.

But Republicans gained a bit more than the Democrats in the switches that took place in eight—possibly nine—states.

Conservatives continue to outnumber liberals in most state legislatures. But in only a few states is there a serious threat of anti-labor, turn-back-the-clock legislation.

Liberals won a few and lost a few this year. However, in more states than not they can at least exercise a veto power—either in one-half of a divided legislature or through the governor.

A survey by the AFL-CIO News found only a few states where the trade union movement expects major legislative progress as a result of the elections.

The heavily liberal Democratic legislatures elected in 1964 were the exception. Most state central bodies operate on the basis that progress comes in spurts, with a good deal of labor's legislative effort at the state level devoted to heading off anti-union bills.

Here are the switches of party control that took place Nov. 5.

Switching from Democratic to Republican were the Senates of Delaware and Indiana, and the lower houses of New York, Nevada and California. Republicans gained an even split in the Tennessee House.

Arkansas Labor Wins at Polls In Workmen's Compensation Fight

Little Rock, Ark.—The biggest single round of improvements in the history of Arkansas' workmen's compensation law has apparently been approved by state voters in the Nov. 5 election.

The labor-sponsored initiative held a lead of several thousand votes in a cliff-hanger election with the ballot count nearly complete as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

The measure not only amends the law to provide substantial increases in benefits but it also removes some restrictions on claims and strengthens the law in several important areas.

Passage of the improvements in workmen's compensation represents a clear-cut victory for the Arkansas labor movement and a rebuff to employer tactics of obstruction.

Under the state's constitution, it would take a two-thirds vote in the legislature to amend the law. In effect, this means there has to be agreement on a bill between labor and employers. The last improvement via this route was a small benefits increase in 1963.

In 1967, the Arkansas AFL-CIO tried to get an agreement on a bill with Associated Industries of Arkansas and the state Chamber of Commerce. But the employers would only agree to a small increase—with strings attached. They demanded elimination of some existing protections, including the elimination of heart ailments from coverage.

The state federation wouldn't stand for that. Having improved the law by initiative once before, in 1956, it decided to go that route again. Labor-circulated petitions needed 45,000 signatures to put amendments on the ballot; some 65,000 signatures were obtained.

MDTA Training Programs Prove Path to Jobs for 80% of Graduates

Eight of every ten persons trained under the Manpower Development & Training Act (MDTA) during the past six years were placed in jobs, Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz reported.

In a review of the MDTA program, Wirtz said this record of placement combined with other achievements marks the law as an "unquestioned success and the cornerstone of the U.S. manpower policy."

Passed in August 1962, MDTA provides financial and technical aid to private industry and school systems for on-the-job training to help workers develop new skills.

It also funds and assists classroom-type training through vocational education schools and helps research, experimentation and demonstration projects designed to find answers to manpower problems.

These were key MDTA accomplishments as Wirtz noted them:

- More than 1.3 million training opportunities authorized—460,000 for on-the-job training, 746,000 for classroom training and 95,000 for pre-training courses.
- Nearly 1,034,400 persons enrolled in training programs—321,000 in on-the-job training, 713,400 in classroom training.
- More than 612,000 persons completed training—166,200 in on-the-job training programs, 446,000 in classroom training.
- Eighty-nine percent of those who completed on-the-job training and 76 percent of classroom training graduates were employed when last contacted.
- More than 6,300 workers were relocated since 1965, and 80 percent remained on new jobs at least six months. One-half of those aided had been unemployed at least 10 weeks or headed farm families earning under $1,200 a year.

Wirtz drew a picture of the type of workers who have been aided by the law. He points out that of every 10 persons enrolled in MDTA programs five were school dropouts, four were nonwhite, one was receiving public assistance, four were under 21, one was over 45, one was physically or mentally handicapped, five were heads of households, three were unemployed 15 weeks or longer and six were men.

Of more than $1.5 billion that has been allocated for training under MDTA, Wirtz said, 76 percent has gone for classroom-type training, 20 percent for on-the-job training and the remaining 4 percent for part-time and other training.

The cost per trainee has run at about $700 for on-the-job training where the employer pays wages and about $1,600 for the classroom projects where the government pays both the cost of training and living allowance, he announced.

Wirtz pointed out that various methods and combination of methods created to make the law a success are reflected in "fresh manpower ideas" being carried out by business, labor, civic, economic and minority groups.

Meets Needs

"It is now well established that the MDTA provides broad-gauge authority and flexibility to meet ever-changing manpower needs," Wirtz said.

Adoption of the law in 1962, he continued, marked an important step in establishing "an active manpower policy calling for direct, affirmative action to enable the jobless and underemployed to obtain suitable full-time employment."

He praised the cooperation the Labor Dept. has received in administering the law from the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare; the Office of Economic Opportunity; local state employment offices, and states' vocational education departments.

This cooperation "combined with leadership and support from the business community and organized labor" has helped the MDTA to set a record "the nation can be proud of," he concluded.

Johnson Names Board In Rail Crew Dispute

A three-member emergency board has been named by Pres. Johnson to investigate and make recommendations in Railroad Trainmen disputes involving train-crew sizes on three railroads.

Appointment of the presidential board ended a one-day strike by 3,000 BRT members on the Louisville & Nashville and a three-month walkout by 400 members on the Belt Railway of Chicago.

The board, appointed upon the recommendation of the National Mediation Board, also will cover the union's dispute on the Illinois Central even though there was no strike on that line.

The disputes go back to 1960 when the BRT first served notice on railroads calling for a minimum "safe" train crew of not less than two trainmen in addition to the conductor on all trains.

After a two-year compulsory arbitration award on train crews expired Jan. 31, 1966, the notices were upheld in litigation that went all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Since then the BRT has reached agreement on three-man crews with more than 70 railroads. But the L & N, IC and the Belt have joined with several other carriers in a refusal to settle the issue.

BRT Pres. Charles Luna emphasized that both the L & N and Belt strikes were legal under the Railway Labor Act and that the union also had exhausted all the law's peaceful procedures on the IC.

"These carriers," he said, "simply have refused to bargain in good faith despite the fact that we have long since resolved this issue on scores of other railroads."

The three men appointed to the board are: Msgr. George C. Higgins, chairman of the social action department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, Washington; Byron R. Abernethy, an arbitrator from Lubbock, Tex., and A. Langley Coffey, a Sand Springs, Okla. attorney.

Under the terms of the law, establishment of the emergency panel halts the two strikes for at least 60 days, and means that both sides must keep the "status quo" on the IC for at least that length of time.

Teachers Union Wins New Jersey Election

North Bergen, N.J.—The Teachers have won bargaining rights for North Bergen's public school teachers by winning, 200 to 126, over the National Education Association in a representation election.

"This is our first win under the new Public Employes Act in New Jersey—there will be more victories," Jim Mundy, AFT director of organization, declared in hailing the results.

Bids Nixon Action:

Cohen Urges Hikes In Social Security

Ann Arbor, Mich.—The new Nixon Administration will have some major decisions to make on social security. And the outgoing Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, Wilbur J. Cohen, is leaving behind some suggestions—and some policy questions to be resolved.

Cohen, speaking at a University of Michigan conference on social security, urged a general increase of 50 percent in benefits, including a $100-a-month minimum in social security payments.

"We may not be able to do this all at once," Cohen commented, "but the first step should be a 15 percent across-the-board benefit increase, with an increase in the minimum monthly benefit to $70 for a single retired worker or widow and to $105 for a couple."

Cohen, a professor of social welfare administration at the university, has been on leave since 1961 to serve in the Kennedy and Johnson administrations.

He told the 90 social security experts from government, labor, business and education that Nixon—despite entering office while the opposition party controls Congress—will have "a unique opportunity to continue the progress that has been made" in the past eight years.

Cohen anticipates disputes over social security improvements.

Same Tired Arguments

"There will always be some people," he noted, "who say: 'It costs too much.' 'It adds to inflation.' 'It will bankrupt the country.' 'It will destroy thrift and private initiative.' 'It will take us down the road to socialism.'

"We should know these arguments well by now. We have heard them for the past 30 years. But I don't think they'll stand up as well in the future, because we are gradually moving toward a society which wants greater economic and social justice."

Cohen suggested immediate action in three areas:

- Creation of a new mechanism to "keep the system up to date with rising wages and to make the benefits inflation-proof."
- Increase in the amount of earnings counted under social security, in stages up to $15,000 "to make the program more effective for those who earn somewhat above the average as well as for average and below-average earners."
- Expanded medicare protection "against the heavy cost of prescription drugs."

The outgoing HEW secretary also listed several dozen questions on social security facing the Nixon Administration. Among them:

- Should medicare protection be extended to the disabled?
- Should some kind of health insurance be provided for young children of poor families?
- What should be the balance between social adequacy and individual equity in social security protection?
- How far should the program go in preventing and reducing poverty?

On the poverty question, Cohen pointed out that social security is already keeping 10 million Americans above the poverty line and that a $100 monthly minimum would lift 4.4 million more above it.

Railway Clerks Win Taxi Vote In Jacksonville

Jacksonville, Fla.—The Railway Clerks have won bargaining rights for taxi drivers here, ousting a long-entrenched Teamsters local which had been under charges of racial discrimination.

The BRC beat Teamsters Local 512 by a vote of 201-49 in a National Labor Relations Board election involving employes of Safety-Yellow and New Deal-Checker Cabs.

Employes of New Deal, where all drivers are Negroes, petitioned NLRB for a decertification election in 1965, charging Local 512's contract discriminated against them in comparison to its pact at Safety, where all drivers are white.

Although NLRB did not grant the petition, it declared that there was a "bargaining pattern resulting from racial factors which cannot be accepted as appropriate." It also said the two firms should be jointly represented, since they were commonly owned by the same trust.

When the BRC petitioned for an election earlier this year, the NLRB noted that bargaining by the Teamsters had "continued on a racial basis" since its earlier proceedings. It granted the BRC petition on a single-unit basis.

A BRC spokesman said the election will result in a "brighter future" for drivers in both companies. "We are going to negotiate a single contract with improved benefits for all and with no discrimination," he added.

United Air Lines Lifts Ban(n)s on Marriages

United Air Lines grounded its old company ruling that barred marriage for stewardesses with the signing of an agreement with the Air Line Pilots.

The agreement also states that stewardesses who had been fired because of marriage will be offered an opportunity to return to work if they filed a formal grievance or complaint before Nov. 7.

The old company policy forced many stewardesses to keeping their marriages secret for fear of losing their jobs.

One Florida stewardess had complained to the state labor commission about her plight:

"I was married for four years and it was okay with my superiors so long as they thought I was just living with him," she said. "I was fired when they learned we were married."

She'll get her job back—and keep her husband.

Meany Hails Order:

LBJ Seeks to Ease Building Seasonality

yet taken, he said, "your memorandum can help solve the unnecessary and antiquated practice of construction seasonality that wastes literally millions of man-hours of productive work annually, forces trained workers to lose approximately 600 work hours a year, creates financial hardship for many of the 4 million workers in this industry, forcing them to draw unemployment compensation and, often, welfare payments."

America has the technical knowledge to end construction seasonality "and it now has a sound government program as well," Meany added. Today's modern society "need not be handcuffed either by the weather or by a tradition that is no longer meaningful."

The President called on agencies with responsibility for direct or indirect expenditure of construction funds to take seven specific steps toward achieving the goal of stable employment.

He noted that the construction industry has "long been plagued by unemployment of labor and other critical resources during off-season periods." This has hurt the contractor whose equipment is idled, the worker through greater unemployment and the consumer through higher prices, he said.

He underscored the fact that "seasonal unemployment represents a substantial proportion of all construction unemployment."

President's Recommendations

The steps outlined in the memorandum call for:

- Insuring that planning and programming of construction gives "due consideration" to reducing seasonal variation.
- Making contracts and scheduling projects with regard to local conditions.
- Encouraging completion dates and penalty clauses that facilitate the stretch-out of work into the off-season.
- Determining whether current appropriation and authorization procedures introduce a seasonal pattern into letting contracts and scheduling of construction.
- Encouraging the recipients of federal grants and loans for construction to reduce construction seasonality.
- Identifying and distributing information on techniques and procedures for facilitating year-round construction.
- Taking additional steps to promote scheduling of construction activity during off-season periods.

The President asked each department and agency to report to the director of the Bureau of the Budget for reports on steps taken to comply with the memorandum and directed the secretaries of Labor and Commerce to report to Congress by the end of 1969 on opportunities for lessening construction seasonality. The latter report stems from a provision in the Manpower Training & Development Act.

SymphonyPact Ends Strike At St. Louis

A five-week strike by St. Louis Symphony musicians ended with a three-step pay raise, plus added fringe benefits.

The settlement was negotiated by Local 2 of the Musicians with the St. Louis Symphony Society. Local 2 Pres. Ken J. Farmer said orchestra members will receive $195 a week for a 44-week season this year, $200 a week for a 47-week season next year, and $205 for 49 weeks the third year.

New benefits include a health and welfare plan for the 92 members of the orchestra.

Last season orchestra members received $181 a week for a 37 week season.

St. Louis Mayor Helps

Farmer said St. Louis Mayor A. J. Cervantes played a major role in bringing the parties together.

The symphony season was nine weeks old when the strike started. The Musicians extended the old contract for four weeks at the beginning of the season in an effort to reach an agreement without a strike. Farmer said negotiations began last April 2.

The vote to approve the new contract was 57 to 19.

A benefit concert was given recently to help the musicians who received their last pay check Oct. 12. Players were also offered no-interest loans from an emergency fund set up by the Intl. Conference of Symphony & Opera Musicians.

Negotiations broke off after the Musicians rejected the Symphony Society's offer on Oct. 24. They were resumed Nov. 9 and continued until the agreement was reached.

Stiffer Laws Proposed To Protect Consumers

ing had matured to where people think not only about economic growth but also quality and equality in the economy.

Despite all the consumer progress achieved by the Johnson Administration, she said, the consumer still is dissatisfied with product quality, inadequately informed and denied redress. The system also works a greater hardship on the poor, she added.

Implicit in the new consumer philosophy, she noted, "is wide acceptance of the government's role—indeed, duty—to ensure the equal partnership of the consumer in the economy."

On the FTC, Miss Furness said the law creating the agency did far more than prohibit unfair competition and deceptive and false advertising. The law also provided for investigation, reporting and law enforcement, she added.

She urged that everyone recognize "the great potential" of the FTC in the area of consumer reforms.

Miss Furness also called on the FTC to take several new steps.

First, she said, there is a need for "one-stop consumer centers" backed up by federal and state laws.

"Why should a housewife have to write to the federal government to find out how to get her toaster fixed?" Miss Furness asked the panel.

Second, she continued, legislation is needed to bring effective redress for consumer grievances, along with "stronger deterrents and penalties" to include indemnity for losses.

"The consumer really needs doorstep justice," she declared.

Miss Furness then turned to three pieces of legislation which she said she hoped would be reintroduced in the 91st Congress.

On is the Deceptive Sales Act which would equip the FTC to deal with sales rackets through injunctions and restraining orders. She said she doubted that the present stick of the FTC, the cease and desist order, "is big enough to deter the unscrupulous." She would make law violations a misdemeanor.

The other legislation included the Home Improvement Industry Investigation Act and the Consumer Sales Protection Act. The latter would give the buyer a "cooling-off" period in which to reconsider a purchase which may have been made under the polished persuasion of a salesman, she explained.

Other consumer problems would still remain, Miss Furness remarked in listing further proposed solutions.

Extending the treble damage principle of anti-trust laws into the consumer field would be a better deterrent than the present fines which can be passed on in higher prices, she said.

Abolition of the holder-in-due-course doctrine would aid the consumer who is now helpless in the hands of finance companies that buy up notes, often from fly-by-night companies, she added. The doctrine has been abolished in Massachusetts and Vermont, she noted.

Other problems could be met, Miss Furness continued, if Congress provided funds for the newly-created National Commission on Consumer Finance.

She said she joined with the FTC in urging the states to adopt the FTC's proposed Uniform Unfair Trade Practice and Consumer Protection law. She would add a requirement that states be guided by holdings of the FTC and federal courts.

Fosco Named New President Of Laborers

Peter Fosco, secretary-treasurer of the Laborers Intl. Union since 1950, has been elected president of the LIU succeeding Joseph V. Moreschi who has retired.

The union's executive board named Moreschi president-emeritus and elected Vice Pres. Terence J. O'Sullivan of San Francisco secretary-treasurer to succeed Fosco.

Moreschi has served as president since 1926 when the union had a scant 20,000 members. The union today has 550,000 members and is one of the largest affiliates of the AFL-CIO.

Looking back over a half century, Moreschi noted that "in the face of unending adversity we built and maintained a strong international union dedicated to elevating the lot of the laboring man."

Fosco joined the Laborers in 1915 in Chicago and later was elected president and business representative of Local 2. In 1936 he was named a regional manager of the Chicago regional office of the union and established a record of organizing the pipeline industry both regionally and nationally.

Served on BCTD

As secretary-treasurer he served on the executive council of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. and on the department's Administrative Committee.

O'Sullivan, vice president since 1965, started with Laborers Local 261 in San Francisco and rose to the presidency of the local. He was appointed an international representative in 1960 and assistant regional manager of the San Francisco office in 1963.

He has been active in job training programs for construction laborers and has been a leader in promoting union political activity.

Moreschi joined Local 1 in Chicago in 1912, rose to the leadership of the local and the Chicago District Council. In 1918 he was elected a vice president and in 1926 president.

The LIU Executive Board also elected Angelo Fosco, assistant regional manager in Chicago, to the post of vice president.

Unions Lauded For Work in Mental Health

The National Association for Retarded Children has named locals of two AFL-CIO unions as winners of annual Merit Awards to Labor.

Local 1464, State, County & Municipal Employes in Grand Junction, Colo., was chosen for its work for the Colorado State Home & Training School for the Retarded.

Local 24, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Baltimore, received the award for its efforts on behalf of the Baltimore Occupational Training Center & Sheltered Workshop.

David H. McGinnis, a member of Local 40 of the Steelworkers in Huntington, W. Va., was named winner of the NARC's Merit Award to Labor for individual accomplishment. McGinnis was selected for his work in spearheading an effort to turn a barren piece of land into a comprehensive center for the retarded of four counties in West Virginia.

NARC and the AFL-CIO Dept. of Community Services established the Merit Awards to Labor last year to give national recognition to union members and locals who have helped transform the mentally retarded into useful citizens.

100,000 Rail Shopcraft Workers Seek 10 Percent Wage Increase

Four shopcraft unions—representing some 100,000 workers—have served notices on the nation's railroads calling for a sizable general wage increase plus skill adjustments.

The unions—Boilermakers, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Machinists and Sheet Metal Workers—seek negotiations first on an individual-road basis and then national bargaining if it is needed.

Two other shopcrafts, the Carmen and Firemen & Oilers, have announced they are preparing notices and plan to serve them soon. The six unions form the AFL-CIO Railway Employes Dept.

The four unions have asked for across-the-board increases of 10 percent, effective Jan. 1, 1969, plus two 10-cent an hour skill differential increases for journeymen, mechanics and supervisors. One increment would be effective next April 1 and the other Oct. 1, 1969.

In the event of any delay in bargaining, the unions have asked for 6 percent interest on deferred payment of pay increases.

The shopmen also seek a cost-of-living escalator clause; shift differential pay; premium pay for all Saturday and Sunday work; and new minimum hourly rates for apprentices and each of the crafts.

The six shopcrafts have no written agreement now. They are living under terms of a 1967 compulsory arbitration agreement, with which the railroads complied but never signed into a contract.

The arbitration panel granted a 6 percent general increase running from Jan. 1, 1967, to June 30, 1968, and an additional 5 percent for the succeeding six months, plus four 5-cent hourly wage increases for skilled workers over two years.

Meanwhile, all six shopcraft unions—representing seven crafts—are continuing negotiations with railroads on notices calling for new benefits that were served last May.

These notices seek paid vacations of four weeks after 15 years of instead of 20, as now, and five weeks after 20 years; improvements in the qualifying conditions for vacations; pay for jury duty, and three days paid bereavement when a death occurs in the immediate family.

Cruikshank Named Again to Health Unit

Nelson Cruikshank, former director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, has been reappointed by Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen to another three-year term on the Health Insurance Benefits Advisory Council.

The council, first established in November 1965, advises the HEW secretary on matters of policy in administering the medicare program. It includes representatives of labor, business, medicine and the general public.

No Time To Waste

A POINT HAS BEEN REACHED at which the American system is working better than ever for the majority and is working very poorly, or not at all, for the minority. That is the essence of the crisis, clear enough for anyone to see. And just as clear, to us, is the solution—making the American system work just as well for the minority as for everyone else.

This is the thrust of our proposals. This is what we believe they would achieve—not in a day or a year, not completely, perhaps, in a decade, but in time to preserve the American system from the dangerous divisions and disorders which now exist.

But there is no time to waste. The history of this country is replete with evidence that continued disregard for deep and justified grievances leads to the violence of despair.

There is no implacable enemy intent on preventing America from doing what is necessary and right to meet the urban crisis—none, that is, but the lack of the will to do it.

If this lack of will prevails, there will be a further deterioration—and the way will be open to the extremists of both the left and the right.

The extremists on the right arouse hate and fear with simplistic slogans, wild accusations and baseless rumors. They appeal to the worst instincts of man. Their effect is to substitute hysteria for reason, making national discussion impossible.

Their counterparts on the left follow a collision course from the opposite direction. They infiltrate the ghettos and segments of the civil rights movement, transforming the rightful quest for the redress of grievances into mindless violence. Their goal is not justice but anarchy, which is historically the forerunner of dictatorship.

We in the AFL-CIO have no doubt where the overwhelming majority of Americans stand. We know that despite the noisy minority of extremists, the people of this country are dedicated to the principles of equality and justice. But the will of the majority can be expressed only through a President and a Congress that not only share this dedication but are determined to act on it with the boldness and imagination the times demand.

THERE WILL BE MANY who will raise the question of cost. They will look at our proposals and ask, "Can we afford it?"

This is a question which we in the AFL-CIO have been hearing for many years. We have responded, time after time, in economic terms, citing the practical, dollars-and-cents benefits that flow to both business and government from measures that help the disadvantaged and promote the general welfare—from measures that are truly investments in this nation.

Everything that is done to help the disadvantaged, to improve the general standard of life, to enrich the American environment, pays for itself in the end. That is why we have an $800 billion economy today. We cannot abandon this concept of investing in America's future; we must, indeed, expand it.

But beyond the matter of dollars and cents, it is the obligation of the federal government to promote the general welfare—not passively but actively.

In so urging, we feel we are partisans only of a better America—the kind of America we know this country can and should be. In the endless effort to create that kind of America, the AFL-CIO will always be in the forefront.

A Two-Party Job

Minority President:

Winning Confidence of People Seen as Nixon's First Chore

The following editorial appeared in the Nov. 7, 1968 edition of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch entitled "Mr. Nixon and the Road Ahead."

IF RICHARD M. NIXON is to govern effectively and constructively in the coming four years he must overcome formidable political and personal obstacles. He has no discernible electoral mandate. He will be a minority President, some 57 percent of the people having voted for his opponents. He failed conspicuously to influence congressional races, and will have to work with a Democratic Congress.

When Mr. Nixon takes office in January he will find the country still rent by the disaffection of those denied a share in the national affluence, and very probably still mired in the quicksands of Viet Nam, though we hope that by then the United States will be on the way to extricating itself from the Asian disaster. What is needed in Washington is a conciliator, a man who can bind up wounds, put the nation back together and set it once more on a hopeful course.

Can Mr. Nixon do this? He has the experience and technical equipment, but his career has been based on contention, not conciliation. He will need to win the confidence and trust of the people, and to advocate programs to meet the nation's mood and need.

In a way Mr. Nixon will be the first partisan Republican president since the days of Harding, Coolidge and Hoover—two generations back. Gen. Eisenhower, once considered for the Democratic presidential nomination, was Republican in outlook but was swept into office on a great popular tide of affection and respect. He was held in such esteem throughout eight years in the White House that Democratic Congresses found it expedient to work with him.

MR. NIXON will not enjoy that advantage; indeed, Gen. Eisenhower, the world-renowned war hero, was unique in our time. Congress knows Mr. Nixon well, since he has served as representative, senator and Vice President. It is likely to accord him the deference that is due every man chosen to occupy the White House, but it will treat him as a professional politician.

The indicated lineup in the new Senate will be 58 Democrats and 42 Republicans, and in the House 243 Democrats and 192 Republicans, but if Mr. Nixon plays his cards well there will not necessarily be a stalemate between a Democratic Congress and a Republican President. Off and on over the years Congress has been dominated by a conservative Republican-Southern Democratic coalition, and Mr. Nixon might fit comfortably into such a picture.

But if he did, would the legislation likely to emerge be progressive, and extensive enough to make a genuine beginning on solving the problems of the slums and ameliorating racial unrest?

We can hope that Mr. Nixon finds the right formula. It is possible that the very fact he is a Republican conservative could help him in obtaining sound legislation, as well as in the conduct of foreign affairs, particularly in Asia. But this will require extraordinary statesmanship.

There are certain known qualities about Mr. Nixon, and some of them suggest that he may rise to the occasion, as have presidents before him. Good intentions aside, his ambition and industry will prompt him to govern as best he can if only for the sake of winning a second term in 1972. We would expect his appointees to be, in general, non-controversial moderates; there might even be holdovers from the Johnson Administration.

Mr. Nixon's first task will be to win the people's confidence; then he must restore the nation's confidence in itself and in its destiny. He will need help, and he should have it so long as he works for the country's betterment. Vice Pres. Humphrey, whom Mr. Nixon narrowly defeated, pledged his support to the President-elect "in unifying and leading the nation." That is the only spirit possible if the American people expect to surmount the desperate challenges ahead.

The 'Open Door' Approach:

Nixon Labor Policies Outlined In 7-Point Campaign Speech

The following is excerpted from an address by Pres.-Elect Richard M. Nixon during the 1968 campaign. Broadcast over the CBS radio network, on Oct. 21, 1968, it was entitled "An Open Door for American Labor."

IN THE NEXT four years, we must help create 15 million new jobs. And I mean jobs with futures, jobs that give a man's work meaning, not government make-work jobs. More than 8 million of those jobs will be needed for those displaced by automation; nearly 7 million more will be needed to provide opportunity for those who do not have it now and for the young people entering the work force.

Economic growth is the answer to job security. Economic growth is the best assurance for a workingman that his job will be secure, his real earnings on the rise, his route to advancement open.

Who can best provide that business growth without inflation? The old leadership, with its treadmill economics, has failed; if it adds wage and price controls, it will only fail again. The American workingman need not turn to this extreme for his answer. The new leadership we offer will provide the best job protection; an expanded economy will give the present work force a chance to move up, all Americans a chance to move in and up—and nobody need move over.

As we remove that fear of job competition, we will see those who are fearful today not only permitting, but demanding, the training of the disadvantaged.

Under this Administration something has gone terribly wrong with relations between government and public employes in far too many of our states and cities.

How do we avert these strikes? How do we plan ahead to avoid crisis before it is upon us?

Early in the next Administration, the new Secretary of Labor—someone in the tradition of the late James Mitchell—will assemble a conference of labor leadership, individuals in all these fields, and public officials on every level of government. Their objective will be to draw up and seek legislative approvals for an Economic Bill of Rights for public employes.

Any man who chooses his career working for the public must do so under the clear understanding that public service must not and will not be disrupted.

But the public that rightly demands this has the responsibility to provide acceptable alternatives for these 12 million public employes.

THE PUBLIC INTEREST, of course, is affected by strikes outside the public sector. In this past year, alone, there have been more strikes than during any year in the past decade. In many cases, the public suffered most.

Here is how I feel about the proper role of government in the bargaining process. I believe the federal government ought not to intervene with the give-and-take of collective bargaining unless there are compelling reasons.

To be effective in actually resolving disputes, government must have the confidence of both sides; it cannot be under the control of one or the other; it cannot be a captive of either.

I do not agree with those who say that government should sit at every bargaining table; that would destroy collective bargaining and undermine free enterprise. In the next Administration, hard bargaining will be the order of the day; the federal government will step in only when the failure of that process endangers the health or safety of our nation, or when other legislation such as the Railway Labor Act requires it.

WHAT CAN LABOR expect from a Nixon Administration?

First, income security: the confidence that the dollar earned and saved today will be worth a dollar tomorrow.

Second, job security: the greatest protection of all is in an expanding economy—in the next four years, 15 million new jobs to replace those lost to automation and to provide opportunity for all.

Third, impartial, even-handed fairness and justice to labor and management.

Next, an open door for labor's spokesman. The Dept. of Labor will be strengthened, with national labor programs administered in the department, where they belong. This is where the voice of every workingman will be heard and his rights will be protected.

Fifth, leadership by example. I believe better occupational safety laws are needed on both federal and state levels. A good place to begin would be with proper and uniform safety standards on all federal construction.

Sixth, an understanding that the workingman in America is not set apart from other citizens in the all-American demand for an end to crime and violence in this nation, and for peace without surrender abroad.

Finally, an identification with the great social goals of the labor movement. In its analysis of the 1968 party platforms, the AFL-CIO wrote: "The difference between the platforms is less one of ends than of means." I agree. And I believe a great many Americans, weary of failure, are turning to new means to achieve those ends.

There are new needs to be met, new goals to be set. I believe labor will insist on new techniques to make social security truly secure; new incentives to improve the quality of medical care available to the next generation of Americans; new bridges to human dignity that will break the cycle of dependency and despondency.

In the American system, labor is not a class apart, and organized labor is not a separate party; labor is a movement, a progressive force, and now more than ever we need that movement and that progress.

In America's solidarity of purpose; in the new alignment of forces that has come into being; in the exciting new coalition of ideas where labor's voice is heard and heeded, lies hope for a new and creative American unity.

WHAT WILL HAPPEN to the worker, his personality, his sense of achievement in an automated society?

This question has concerned and perplexed sociologists, psychologists, union leaders, employers and, of course, workers, as our computerized world expands.

It was most recently tackled by Dr. Aaron Levenstein, professor of management, Baruch School of Business, City College of New York, in the October issue of the American Journal of Orthopsychiatry. His article is titled, "Work Incentives in the Age of Automation."

"The real problem in the foreseeable future," he says, "is how man will adjust his attitudes toward working in an automated society."

His stress is on work incentives, noting that "when man believed that work was essential for physical survival, he had all the incentive he needed. When he believed that work was linked with the basic purpose of his existence—namely, service to a God he feared—he needed no other motivations."

But now, Dr. Levenstein says, work has become impersonal for most workers, particularly those on assembly lines.

"Industrialization," he says, "culminating in the production of goods and services through automatized and computerized techniques, now challenges him to find new incentives, that is, reshape his attitude toward work."

Although for these workers the time of "individual achievement in the production of goods and services is over," Dr. Levenstein observes that "great things have been done."

"The standard of living has been raised, hours of work have been reduced, the brutalizing tasks that once consumed the flesh and blood and bone of slaves are now being eliminated."

However, he says "the advent of automation, the ultimate in machine control, makes (industrial) organization more awesome in its power."

Labor has been so divided into specialties, he continues, "work becomes fragmented. Man is further removed from the end product toward which his individual effort is only a partial contribution, and his identification with the product grows dimmer and dimmer."

Dr. Levenstein believes that mass production is essential today to maintain our standard of living and that this requires a "certain type of organization aimed at suppressing individual uniqueness in the performance of work tasks."

Everything today, he believes, is taken out of the hands of the worker, saying:

"The 'one best method' must be determined by the methods man, the one best design must be determined by the design department, the one best machine must be determined by the engineer, the one best material must be made available by the purchasing agent—and the worker must then work in accordance with all of these predetermined conditions."

"THE WORKER," he says, "cannot change his personality, his lack of self esteem . . . as easily as he changes his overalls. Work, our link with reality, will make us what we are in our leisure hours."

Dr. Levenstein does not believe the problem is unsolvable. He thinks that man can develop a new kind of "self-perception" just as he did when he advanced from pastoral to agricultural, to commercial and to industrial societies.

"Now," he says, "man has to make a new adjustment in his picture of himself: he must recognize that the fullness of his life will not be found in the independence of his life that once gave satisfaction to a race of pioneers, cut off in the wilderness; that there can be equal joys in interdependence, in relationships, in the the involvement of community, in taking part in a team effort to produce goods for all."

"He must realize that even if you can't go home again, you need not be an alien in this new world. If 'no man is an island, entire of itself,' there are nevertheless security and opportunities for growth in the awareness that 'every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main'."

Improve Care Too:

Alternate Health Plans Urged To Curb Rising Medical Costs

ILL AMERICANS are not getting a full "dollar's worth" in health and hospital care, an assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security charged.

Patients are "captive consumers" in the noncompetitive, uncontrolled "medical marketplace," declared Richard Shoemaker, on the network radio interview, Labor News Conference.

The only choice a patient has is that of his physician, who then determines the treatment and where it is given, the services needed and who renders them, Shoemaker said. "In effect, the physician determines the cost of treatment," he asserted. The program is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

Shoemaker urged wider organization of groups that can offer "alternate methods of providing health services." He pointed out that successful health care delivery systems have been formed by labor unions, consumer groups and "employers, as in the case of the Kaiser Plan on the West Coast." Such systems, he said, have boosted the quality of medical care and put doctors "on a budget" that holds down costs.

The union spokesman insisted that organization of medical and health care systems in no way "interferes with the clinical practice of medicine," as professional organizations such as the American Medical Association claim.

WHAT THEY really mean by such "slogans," he charged, is that they want to control not only the clinical practice of medicine, but also the "delivery of health services and the prices they get for providing those services."

Reporters questioning Shoemaker on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program were Theodor Schuchat of the North American Newspaper Alliance and Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press.

WIDER USE of alternate health plans are urged by Richard Shoemaker, center, to improve quality of medical care and to keep costs in check. Shoemaker, an assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, was interviewed on Labor News Conference by Theodor Schuchat, left, of North American Newspaper Alliance and Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press.

Generic Usage Urged:

Elderly Lose Millions In Drug Name Game

drugs used by the elderly but also to their ability to pay for them and their patterns of drug use.

The task force analyzed some 175 million prescriptions written for elderly persons in 1966, the last year for which pertinent data were available. From these data it compiled a master list of 409 most frequently-used drugs.

Of the 409 drugs, the study found that 67 could have been obtained from more than one manufacturer —the rest being subject to patents or to other arrangements which in effect fixed their prices.

"If these 67 had been dispensed as low-cost generic name products," the report said, "the savings at the retail level—providing the same mark-ups were set by the pharmacists—would be about $41.5 million, or 27.7 percent."

Still further savings could be achieved, the report indicated, if lists of drugs used by government and other health programs regularly included generic name products.

The study found that 10 drugs accounted for 20 percent of all the prescriptions surveyed and that eight of these were still protected by patents so that no generic equivalent was available.

Most Frequently Used

The 10 included tolbutamide, for treatment of diabetes; chlordiazepoxide, a tranquilizer; chlorothiazide, a diuretic used in treating kidney and heart diseases; indomethacin, used in the treatment of heart disease; four types of pain killers; and phenobarbital, a sedative.

All of these medicines are used by the elderly on a day-in-day-out basis causing them to have "extraordinary expenses for drugs," the report said.

The problem is intensified, it added, because the needs for drugs among the elderly increases at the very time of life when their income declines.

Four Times Greater

The study reported that per capita expenditure for prescription drugs in fiscal 1965 for the elderly was $41.40, almost four times greater than the $12.77 figure for those under 65.

It also cited statistics which showed that among the elderly, women paid more for drugs than men and, whites expended far more on drugs than non-whites —"reflecting the greater affluence" of whites.

The report challenged the accuracy of the Labor Dept.'s consumer price index, which has found that drug prices have been falling since 1959. By contrast, it said, all other "measuring devices" show drug prices are increasing.

CPI, the study pointed out, includes only 14 drug products in its "market basket" of consumer products measured for prices and does not reflect the impact of new and costly products which may replace older and less expensive drugs.

Other indices, it explained, contain a much wider list of drugs and they show that "the average prescription price has been increasing at the rate of about 2 percent per year during the past decade."

Transit Union Settles Strike In Baltimore

Baltimore—A 23-day strike of bus drivers was not quite enough to win a settlement from reluctant Baltimore Transit Co. management. It took an unfair labor practice charge, the intervention of the mayor and a transit authority hearing to get the buses back on the street after Transit Union Div. 1300 approved a new one-year contract.

The strikers voted 758-523 to accept terms formulated by management after Mayor Thomas J. D'Alesandro brought the parties together. But the company declined to put the buses back on the street unless fares were raised at once.

Management changed its mind when Div. 1300 filed charges of refusal to bargain with the National Labor Relations Board. The charges then were withdrawn.

The new contract provides immediate wage hikes of 12 cents an hour for 1,600 drivers and mechanics, to be followed next Apr. 1 by another 4-cent boost. Also agreed to is an improved cost-of-living escalator clause, three weeks' vacation after eight years instead of 10, and a raise in minimum pension benefits from $100 a month to $125.

The strike was the first for the union here in 12 years. After it ended, the company won permission to raise adult fares from 25 cents a ride to 30 cents. A raise in student fares was dropped when the mayor objected.

Firms, Farms Employ 14,000 Underage Youth

Labor Dept. investigators found nearly 14,000 youngsters employed in violation of child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act during fiscal year 1968.

Violations in business and industry totaled 12,434 and 1,555 in agriculture, the Labor Dept.'s Wage & Hour and Public Contracts Divisions reported.

Children under 16 employed illegally in nonagricultural industry totaled 6,059 during the year from July 1, 1967, to June 30, 1968. Overall, illegally employed minors in nonagricultural fields totaled 7,719 as working at hazardous occupations in which a minimum age of 18 applies.

The 1,555 violations in agriculture accounted for children under 16 working during school hours. Of these, 240 were 9 years old or younger; 738 were ages 10-13, and 573 were 14-15.

Most of the illegally employed children in agriculture were enrolled in classes below normal for their age.

The child labor provisions affecting agriculture set 16-year age minimum where minors are allowed to work during school hours. In industry, the minimums are 18 years for hazardous occupations; 16 years for general employment and 14 for limited work outside school hours.

SUBSCRIPTIONS for the AFL-CIO News for the 157 members of the recently organized Office & Professional Employes Local 437 at Ponca City, Okla., are covered with a check from local Pres. Sam Vanderpool, Jr., left, to AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Woodrow Pendergrass. OPEIU Vice Pres. Frank E. Morton, who recommended the subscriptions for the entire membership to the local's membership meeting, is at right. The local also voted to affiliate with the city and state AFL-CIO central bodies.

Transport Conference Elects Section Chiefs

The Conference of Transportation Trades, composed of 29 AFL-CIO unions representing some 2.5 million workers in the transportation industry, has elected heads of its six sections.

The conference, which was organized last May, also adopted a constitution and heard reports from its top officers at a meeting held in Washington.

Conference chairman C. L. Dennis, who is president of the Railway & Airline Clerks, described the organization's purpose as being twofold:

First, to serve as a clearing house of ideas in transportation so that member unions may "effectively deal with issues and problems which affect workers throughout the transportation industry."

Second, to develop programs to deal with issues and problems such as mergers, protective conditions for workers who lose jobs through mergers, safety, legislation and the advancement of labor's views to government regulatory agencies.

The proposed constitution, adopted by representatives of the affiliated unions, was read by conference Sec.-Treas. O. William Moody, Jr., administrator of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.

Bruce Pike, who has been named executive director of the conference, emphasized that its success "depends entirely upon how much cooperation and effort each affiliate puts into it."

Half of the one-day meeting was devoted to individual section meetings at which the following section leaders were named:

Marine Section—Chairman, Paul Hall, president of the Seafarers; vice chairman, Andrew A. Pettis, president, Marine & Shipbuilding Workers.

General (Inter-modal) Section—Chairman, Jerry Wurf, president, State, County & Municipal Employes; vice chairman, Hunter Wharton, president, Operating Engineers.

Air Section—Chairman, Frank Heisler, airlines coordinator, Machinists; vice chairman, James F. Horst, Transport Workers vice president.

Highway and Transit Section—Chairman, John M. Elliott, president, Transit Union; vice chairman, Maurice Sullivan of the Machinists.

Non-Operating Rail Section—Chairman, A. R. Lowry, president, Transportation-Communication Employes; vice chairman, Harold C. Crotty, president, Maintenance of Way Employes.

Operating Rail Section—Chairman, Charles Luna, president, Railroad Trainmen; vice chairman, Al Chesser, national legislative representative of the Trainmen.

808 New Airports, STOL Fields Urged

The Federal Aviation Agency has urged construction of 808 new airports, including 25 STOL facilities, by 1973 to handle the aviation traffic jam.

The STOL airports are designed to accommodate short take off and landing aircraft which are expected to operate outside normal airport traffic patterns.

Aviation experts feel the STOL planes will provide a partial answer to congestion at major airports.

Court Upholds Full Crew Law In New York

Albany, N.Y.—The constitutionality of New York's "full crew" law requiring a fireman helper on every diesel locomotive in freight service has been upheld by the New York Court of Appeals.

The court, the highest in the state, reaffirmed a ruling handed down in 1965 by a Special Court of the New York Supreme Court, which rejected a challenge brought by 10 railroads operating in New York.

They contended they did not want to dispense with a "second man" on the freight engine but claimed they wanted him to be a brakeman not a fireman. Passenger trains, which carry firemen helpers, were not involved.

The appeals court found that it was legislative intent that the second man should be an engine crew man and that a brakeman's duties frequently prevent him from being in the cab.

It agreed with the lower court's decision that "the fireman is the only crew member in position to take and pass signals and act as lookout on the left-hand side of the cab."

191 Unions Listed In New Directory

The Labor Dept. announced that the latest issue of its biennial directory of U.S. unions is now available. The 1967 directory—Bulletin No. 1596—is on sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402, at 60 cents.

The directory shows that, as of Dec. 31, 1967, there were 191 national and international unions in the U.S., an increase of three since the 1965 publication. It lists 128 AFL-CIO unions (later reduced to 125) and 63 unaffiliated unions.

Using a table based on 1966 totals, the directory credited 14.8 million members to AFL-CIO unions, 2.8 million in the others.

California Court Backs Farm Wage Minimum

Sacramento—State appeals court judges voted unanimously to approve new and higher minimum wages for 100,000 women and children on California farms, and ordered the state Industrial Welfare Commission to enforce the new wage floors immediately.

The ruling, by three judges of the 3rd California district, reinforced the minimums, established last September by the Industrial Commission.

The new minimums will be raised from $1.30 an hour to $1.65 for women workers, and from $1.10 to $1.35 for minors.

The ruling came on an appeal on behalf of the farm workers by California Rural Legal Assistance, an arm of the U.S. Office of Economic Opportunity. The appeal had the strong support of the California AFL-CIO, consumer groups and State Atty. Gen. Thomas C. Lynch.

The judges also upheld payment of overtime at time and a half rates for all work in excess of eight hours a day and 40 hours a week by women and minors hired to pack and process crops on and off the farm.

The new rates were set after supporting testimony by labor and consumer witnesses. Agriculture and business groups delayed their effectiveness by filing lawsuits.

The growers argued in their suits that the minimums were illegal and that the commission had no authority to order them into effect under existing federal laws, including the 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act.

Judge Leonard M. Friedman, acting for the court, wrote a 42-page decision upholding the right of the state commission to establish and enforce the minimums. Judges Edwin J. Regan and Fred R. Pierce concurred.

Farm workers are not protected by the National Labor Relations Act. They are among the lowest-paid and least-protected of all workers.

Three years ago the AFL-CIO chartered the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee to represent migrant workers. The union has made steady progress in some areas and now represents field workers who have won contracts with more than a dozen firms.

Table grape growers have refused, however, to bargain with the union, which is conducting a nationwide boycott of California table grapes on behalf of the field workers.

Republicans Gain Slightly:

44 State Legislature Elections Produce No Clear Political Shift

Democratic control were the lower houses of Alaska, Michigan and Pennsylvania.

Over the past four years, the reapportionment resulting from the Supreme Court's one-man, one-vote rulings appears to have shifted the balance of legislative power from the farms and small towns to the suburbs. Except for 1964, Republican candidates have fared somewhat better than Democrats—but the Republicans elected have been more concerned with schools, health and state services than the rural Republicans they replaced.

While black legislators are still a rarity in the South, more were elected this year than ever before.

Florida and North Carolina elected Negroes for the first time. Black candidates won three additional seats in the Georgia House and two in the Tennessee Senate—a total of 30 seats in southern legislatures. Only Alabama, Arkansas and South Carolina will be without Negro representation. In addition, southern Negroes were elected to school boards, city councils and county governments.

In most states, a few seats shifted from one party to another but the political complexion of the legislature did not change. Alabama, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, New Jersey and Virginia did not elect legislators this year. Several other states elected only the lower house.

A few cliff-hangers may change the numerical totals in some of the legislatures. But these are the states where AFL-CIO central bodies reported significant shifts in the makeup of one or both houses of legislatures:

Alaska—Democrats won control of the House, 22-18. Previously, Republicans held a 25-15 majority. There were only 10 Senate seats at stake this year—and Democrats won six of them, reducing GOP control to an 11-8 margin. The changes, the Alaska AFL-CIO says, will add "considerable liberal muscle."

California—A three-seat GOP gain gave the Republicans 41-39 control of the lower house, while the Senate remained unchanged with a 20-20 split. Jesse Unruh is expected to be replaced as Assembly Speaker by Robert Monagan, a moderate Republican. The Senate's president pro tem will probably continue to be a right-wing Democrat, Hugh Burns, who endorsed Nixon in the election. Conservatives are expected to renew drive for anti-worker legislation.

Voters rejected a labor-opposed property tax relief initiative, approved a labor-supported alternative.

Delaware—A statewide Republican sweep took control of the Delaware Senate away from the Democrats and left the GOP with both houses of the legislature and the governorship.

Florida—Democratic gains make it likely that there will be the two-thirds majority needed to override vetoes by conservative Republican Gov. Claude Kirk—possibly with the help of some moderate Republicans. Kirk's vetoes last year included appropriations of $150 million for education needs.

Indiana—The previously Democratic Senate is now Republican, 35-19, with the GOP in control of the statehouse as well as the legislature.

Iowa—The same here, with the GOP taking the Senate, 45-16, for full state control.

Maine — Still Republican, but less so with Democratic gains of five in the 32-member Senate and nine in the 151-member House.

Michigan—A major Democratic gain, capturing control of the House, 57-53. There was no Senate election. It will be difficult to pass progressive legislation, but House change should prevent harmful legislation.

Montana — GOP control of House narrowed and labor's position on taxation and longer legislative sessions upheld in referenda votes.

Nebraska—Labor made 13 endorsements for 49-member single-house legislature; 10 of its candidates won. State income tax, supported by AFL-CIO, was retained in referendum.

New York — Republicans regained control of lower house for sweep of state machinery, despite big vote for Humphrey and Democratic congressional candidates.

Oregon—Legislature remains divided on party lines, but new faces weaken conservative two-party coalition. Labor helped defeat limitation on property tax.

Pennsylvania — A major liberal gain as Democrats won control of the House. A new Democratic senator is Robert R. Gerhart, Jr., managing editor of the Reading and Berks County AFL-CIO newspaper.

Texas—In this heavily Democratic legislature, liberals in effect won a veto power by increasing their strength in the Senate. That's because Senate rules require a two-thirds vote on most issues.

Washington—Little change in the legislature but labor won a big victory with the election of a new Democratic state insurance commissioner pledged to major consumer-oriented reforms. Insurance firms had actively campaigned for his opponent.

Arkansas Labor Wins Injury Benefits Vote

The campaign drew strong support from the Negro community, and the initiative was endorsed by the candidates for governor of both parties.

But employers mounted a lavishly financed campaign against the initiative spending an estimated several hundred thousand dollars to attack it through newspaper, radio and television ads.

Arkansas AFL-CIO Pres. J. Bill Becker remarked that "the money they spent trying to defeat workmen's compensation improvements would have paid their increased insurance premiums for the next 15 years."

At one point, the employers' propaganda barrage became so heavy that the state AFL-CIO invoked the Federal Communications Commission "fairness doctrine" to get free TV time to answer false charges," Becker reported.

These are some key improvements obtained in the successful initiative:

- Maximum weekly compensation is increased from $39.50 to $49.00 a week; maximum total and death benefits are upped from $14,500 to $19,500; disfigurement benefits are increased for all workers from $2,000 to $3,500; rehabilitation benefits are improved.
- Benefits under the law will be raised by 15 percent in cases where an employer has been found in violation of a safety law; benefits will be doubled for children found to have been working in violation of the law.
- Widows receive weekly benefits until they remarry or die and children will receive death benefits until they become 18 or are married—both new provisions.
- A worker can file a claim anytime within two years after he discovers a job-related injury, where previously he was required to file within two years of the date of the accident.

Becker emphasized the scope of the changes, effective 30 days after certification, by noting that "they represent a compilation of bills we have tried unsuccessfully to pass in the legislature over a number of years."

Nixon Names White House Aides, Other Key Appointments Due

decided when the AFL-CIO News went to press last week, apparently went to GOP State Rep. Robert W. Packwood by a margin of 3,700 votes. Democratic Sen. Wayne Morse indicated he would ask for a recount of the vote.

Nixon announced at a press conference with Vice Pres.-Elect Spiro T. Agnew in Florida that Agnew would have his office located in the White House and would use the same staff personnel as the President.

Humphrey and Muskie told reporters after their meeting with Nixon that they would do whatever they could to help bring national unity and achieve peace abroad. Humphrey said:

"We need to have our country stand together as never before, and we need the cooperation of people of all walks of life, all races, all groups and creeds in this country."

On his way back to New York Nixon stopped off in Washington for a meeting with Pres. Johnson. At a joint press conference afterwards Nixon said the Johnson Administration would be acting for him also in foreign policy matters until Jan. 20, 1969 with regard to Viet Nam, the Middle East and relations with the Soviet Union.

In Maryland, Agnew's forthcoming resignation as governor, expected in early December, set off a contest among various Democratic leaders of the state legislature for the governor's chair. Maryland has no lieutenant governor and the power to name the governor upon his resignation lies with the state legislature. The Democrats firmly control both houses of the legislature.

LABOR ORGANIZING drives are producing steady results but unions must intensify efforts to reach the poor, women workers and youth, AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher told a luncheon meeting of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.

Kircher Optimistic On Organizing Goal

The labor movement "is in a better position to step up its organizing than at any time in history," even though there are tough challenges to "making the union grow."

That was the report given by AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization William L. Kircher to a luncheon meeting sponsored by the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept.

The success of recent organizing drives, Kircher said, is there for everyone to see—in rising membership figures.

As for the future, he continued, it is bright because unions are leading from strength and are "increasingly emphasizing organizing and training organizers in the skills they need."

Kircher spoke also of the problems that must be overcome if the labor movement is to continue to increase its numbers.

He posed difficulties that may result from the election of Richard Nixon "if he becomes dominated by business groups" who have previously announced plans to seek new repressive measures against unions.

He recalled that the Eisenhower Administration reshaped the National Labor Relations Board until the percent of unfair labor practice cases brought against unions increased from 17 to 57 percent.

However, he pointed out that "I only emphasize this to show the possibility" of an obstacle to unionizing. "What's ahead of us? No one really knows," Kircher declared.

"While we are disturbed about what happened Nov. 5," he added, "it still wouldn't be any milk and honey for organizing even if the election had turned out the other way."

This is so, he stressed, because some of the most difficult problems to be overcome are outside the political and legislative area. He cited:

- The mounting opposition to unions coming from employers who are constantly developing new techniques "to get around the law" in denying workers their rights to have unions.
- A prosperous economy that finds many unorganized workers without "motivation" toward unions. This contrasts with early-day organizing when nearly all workers needed a union's help.
- The need for increasing liaison between the labor movement and minority groups, the poorest workers who are not organized, and women and youth who are steadily increasing in the labor force.

On the subject of youth, Kircher said, "We must understand young people a lot better than we do, even when their actions seem disagreeable." He added, "I try to remember how uncomfortable I made people when I was 20 years old."

Despite the obstacles, Kircher concluded, "I look at the gains we've made in organizing and the plans we have under way, and I know that labor's numbers will continue upward."

Hillman Center Cited for Aid of Handicapped

New York—The Sidney Hillman Health Center has been honored by the President's Committee on Employment of the Handicapped for enabling men and women suffering physical or mental handicaps to stay on the job, or to be trained for new jobs.

Harold Russell, chairman of the President's Committee, presented the Distinguished Service Award to Dr. Morris Brand, Sidney Hillman medical director.

For seven years, the Sidney Hillman Health Center has had a program aimed at reaching and servicing blue-collar workers with physical and mental health problems. The program operates with the New York Joint Board of the Clothing Workers. An estimated 30,000 workers can benefit.

The program is partially supported by grants from the National Institute of Mental Health and the Rehabilitation Services Administration of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare.

Profits Set Record As '68 Rate Climbs

New York Teachers Get Job Protection

New York—The city's 50,000 school teachers were back in the classroom here under a new agreement securing their job rights and assuring them of protection from harassment and intimidation.

The agreement, ratified by the teachers by a 6 to 1 margin ended a five-week strike, the third this fall in the city's school system stemming from the dismissal without cause of 19 teachers by a local governing board of an experimental, decentralized school unit.

The local group's absolute refusal to reinstate the teachers and its insistence on the right to hire and fire teachers in the district was a direct challenge to the job security provisions of the United Federation of Teachers contract with the city Board of Education.

The settlement, worked out at a 27-hour negotiating session by Mayor John Lindsay and UFT Pres. Albert Shanker along with members of the Board of Education and the state education commissioner provides:

- The temporary removal of three principals in the Ocean Hill-Brownsville Demonstration District in Brooklyn.
- The appointment of Herbert F. Johnson, associate state commissioner of education, as trustee to oversee the local district and to assure the return to classrooms there of a group of union teachers.
- The establishment by the state of a special committee with extraordinary powers to protect the rights of teachers and principals throughout the city school system.

Vows UFT Cooperation

Shanker, in a statement issued by the UFT, said the panel established under the agreement "represents a strong hope that the schools and their teachers will be safe from harassment and intimidation. The city, its parents, teachers and children have paid a high price to achieve these important objectives. The UFT will now turn its efforts to work with parents and community groups."

The agreement was accepted by UFT members by a vote of 17,658 to 2,783, opening the way for resumption of classes for 1.1 million pupils in the city who have been out for 36 of the first 48 school days of the fall term.

The first of the three work stoppages began on Sept. 9 and lasted two days. On Sept. 13 the settlement ending the dispute fell apart and the union struck again, ending the walkout on Sept. 20. Two weeks later, as the settlement came unstuck again, the union called the third strike.

The basic dispute goes back to

Farm Union Rights Urged by Bishops

Catholic bishops of the United States have issued a call for better minimum wage guarantees, unemployment benefits and the right to union recognition for farm workers.

The bishops included the California grape dispute in their church policy statement without mentioning it specifically.

The National Conference of Catholic Bishops said farm workers long have been burdened by low wages, poor housing, inadequate education and increasing health problems. The bishops called their plight tragic.

They urged protection for farm employes under the National Labor Relations Act and other federal laws on minimum wages and unemployment insurance.

Rail Unions Backed 7-1:

Top Court Upholds 'Safe Crew' Laws

The constitutionality of state-enacted "full crew" laws, which regulate the minimum size of freight train crews, has been upheld by a 7-to-1 decision of the Supreme Court.

The majority opinion, written by Justice Hugo L. Black in a case involving two Arkansas laws, amounts to a clear defeat for railroad managements who have been trying to knock out the laws through legal action.

Four other states have union-backed safe crew laws—New York, Wisconsin, Ohio and Indiana. Unable to convince legislatures to repeal the laws, railroads have turned to the courts.

The Arkansas laws, requiring six-men crews on over-the-road and switching trains, were attacked by six railroads and defended by the State of Arkansas and four unions: Firemen & Enginemen, Trainmen, Switchmen and Conductors & Brakemen.

The railroads complained that the laws violated their rights under the "due process" and "equal protection" clauses of the constitution, as well as a clause protecting commerce.

The railroads also contended that a 1963 compulsory arbitration award on train and engine crews pre-empted the Arkansas laws, and it was on this basis that a federal district court threw out the state laws in 1964.

However, the unions appealed and the Supreme Court reversed the lower court on this grounds, sending the case back for further hearings on the constitutional issue.

The lower court then threw out the laws on the constitutional grounds and also found that the laws had "no substantial effect on safety of operations."

In again reversing the lower court, Black noted that the Supreme Court had in 1911, 1916 and 1931 upheld the Arkansas law on a constitutional challenge and the proceedings offered "nothing new" in this area.

As to the court's findings that safety was not involved, he noted that the unions and the state presented evidence that the six-men crews were needed because of the increasing size and speed of trains, and congested switching areas.

But his main thrust was that the decision on "full crew" laws should be left to legislatures or collective bargaining. The lower court, he said, "indulged in a legislative judgment wholly beyond its limited authority . . ."

Justice William O. Douglas, dissenting, agreed that the lower court was wrong on the constitutional issues but maintained that the arbitration award superseded state "full crew" laws.

In other decisions, the Supreme Court:

- Upheld a $305,000 damage award to a Long Island Railroad

$51 Billion Mark Hit After Taxes

Corporate profits hit a record-shattering annual rate of $92.2 billion before taxes for the third quarter of 1968 in face of predictions that the continuing climb in earnings would flatten out or decline.

After federal, state and local taxes the Commerce Dept. reported that profits were running at an annual rate of $51 billion for the July-September period. A year ago for the same period the profits rate was $47.6 billion.

The Wall Street Journal, reporting on the profits picture, commented that "the continued rise in profits surprised" government officials who had been expecting a slowdown in the rise in overall economic activity.

The new profits record came during a period when the Labor Dept. reported that for the first nine months of 1968 union-won wage gains averaged 7.5 percent of straight-time hourly earnings compared to 5 percent for the same period a year earlier.

Profits in the third quarter would have been even higher except for a falloff in the earnings of steel companies as steel consumers cut back orders after stockpiling earlier in the year as a hedge against a strike.

The government's report on profits was accompanied by another report showing that the gross national product—the total value of all goods and services produced—rose $18.1 billion in the third quar-

New California Wine Grape Contract Includes Retroactive 40-Cent Raise

Stockton, Calif.—The AFL-CIO's United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, after nearly a year of tough negotiations, has signed up another employer of vineyard workers in the rich San Joaquin Valley.

UFWOC's newest contract, running for 20 months, brings important wage gains and new benefits to field workers employed by Franzia Bros. Winery of Ripon, Calif. It hires about 350 such employes at the peak of the harvest season.

The pact, signed by UFWOC Dir. Cesar Chavez, is the latest in a series of agreements won by the union since its initial breakthrough at Schenley Distillers in April 1966.

The Franzia contract provides pay ranges of $1.90 to $2.55 an hour, amounting to an average 40-cent increase for workers covered. In addition, each classification receives a 10-cent increase in the second year of the pact.

Although the employer delayed its signing of the pact until only recently, the wage increases are retroactive to Aug. 28, 1968, when the union first agreed to terms. The agreement continues until April 18, 1970.

In other farm union developments, citizens groups in major cities have stepped up activities to support the boycott of California grapes—and aid the union recognition drive.

A committee of prominent New Yorkers planned a two-day pre-Thanksgiving "demonstration of concern for exploited agricultural workers who put food on America's tables but are not paid enough to feed their own families."

A day of picketing stores carrying California grapes was scheduled for Nov. 23; the following day was designated as a period of fasting and silent protest."

In the nation's capital, a women's "boycott support" luncheon was held to hear Delores Huerta, with a number of well-known Washington leaders among the sponsors.

Future activities include a Carnegie Hall benefit performance in New York City on the night of Dec. 4, with well-known entertainers donating their talents. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) is honorary chairman of the benefit committee. The New York telephone for ticket information is 355-4748.

The Franzia contract provides for a full union shop and dues checkoff, a union hiring hall, paid holidays and vacations, grievance and arbitration procedures and many other benefits.

Workers will be covered by a Special Benefits Fund the union has negotiated with other employers. The company will pay 10 cents an

A TRACTOR-CULTIVATOR is presented to a farm cooperative group in South Viet Nam. It is one of 10 such tractors provided so far by the Asian-American Free Labor Institute through the Vietnamese Confederation of Labor (CVT).

Labor Institute Delivers First Viet Tractors

Saigon — The Asian-American Free Labor Institute has initiated a program of helping establish farm cooperatives in South Viet Nam as a means of encouraging rice production.

The project of AAFLI, established by the AFL-CIO Executive Council last February, centers on providing tractors for use in rice cultivation. It works like this:

Each group of 10 farmers is given a tractor, to be paid for over a period of time.

Payments Multiply Plan

Payments go into a revolving account, which is used to purchase more tractors as a basis for additional cooperatives.

The project is operated by AAFLI representatives working closely with and through the Vietnamese Confederation of Labor (CVT). To date, their teams have presented 10 tractors to farmer groups.

AAFLI also plans to aid the cooperatives in developing new types of rice plants, fertilizers and planting techniques. Meantime, it continues to assist CVT in setting up seminars on trade union organization and education.

Record Load of Cases Swamps Labor Board

New cases continued to flood National Labor Relations Board offices at a record-breaking rate as fiscal year 1969 opened and an increasingly heavy backlog of business awaited disposition as the first quarter closed on Sept. 30.

The NLRB reported in its quarterly summary that 7,700 new cases were received from individuals, unions and employers, compared with 7,518 for the same three months a year earlier—a rise of nearly 3 percent.

Most of the increase was reported due to unfair labor practice charges, which increased more than 6 percent from the year-ago quarter to a total of 4,581—2,919 or 63.7 percent against employers, 1,662 against unions.

Petitions for elections totaled 3,165, down slightly from the 3,198 of fiscal 1968's first quarter.

At the end of September 1968, 605 cases awaited rulings by the five NLRB members, compared with 496 cases still on the books at the end of the preceding quarter, and 637 for the same quarter of last year—a modest decrease.

Of the 605 pending cases, 424 involved unfair labor practices and 181 were election petitions.

Cases of all types awaiting disposition at the end of the quarter totaled 10,546 at various procedural levels, compared with 10,297 pending at the end of the preceding quarter and 10,225 at quarter's end last year.

Other highlights of the report:

The NLRB conducted 1,879 representation elections in which 87 percent of the eligible employes voted. Employes chose unions to represent them in 56 percent of the elections. AFL-CIO unions won nearly 54 percent of the 1,144 elections and unaffiliated unions about 51 percent.

During the quarter, the NLRB conducted 63 elections to decertify a bargaining agent. Of these, 43 resulted in decertification of unions with some 3,400 members.

Of 19 elections involving the union shop, 10 were for continued authorization and 9 were for deauthorization.

The NLRB general counsel's office filed 47 injunction petitions against unions under the law, and only two against employers under another section.

The general counsel investigated charges under the law and issued 534 formal complaints setting the cases for trial, down 29 from the year-earlier quarter. A substantial number of charges were processed without resort to litigation.

During the quarter the five-member board issued formal written decisions in 135 unfair practice cases, while trial examiners conducted 227 hearings during the same three months.

worker who suffered a severely crushed right foot when a railroad tie fell on him. This 7-to-2 decision reversed a lower court decision, which had tried to reduce the amount of an award under the Federal Employers Liability Act.

- Held, by 6 to 3, that under the Federal Arbitration Act an arbitration award must be reversed if it is subsequently discovered that arbitrator had dealings with one of the parties involved. This, too, was a reversal of a lower court decision.
- Announced that it would consider whether the House of Representatives acted unconstitutionally when it barred Adam Clayton Powell from his seat in the 90th Congress for "gross misconduct."

Confrontation Possible

The action raised the possibility of a further confrontation between the legislative and judicial branches of government, since the House has insisted the courts have no jurisdiction in the matter.

The same position was taken by lower courts in rejecting Powell's suit against the House, in which he seeks back pay and an order to reseat him.

Powell was re-elected to the 91st Congress in the Nov. 5 elections.

Dr. Morris Brand Dies in New York

New York—Dr. Morris Brand, 61, medical director of the Sidney Hillman Health Center of the New York Joint Board of the Clothing Workers, died in a hospital here following a heart attack.

He was stricken while attending a medical conference dealing with community health services. The meeting was held in connection with the program of the New York Consumer Assembly.

Dr. Brand was a recognized authority on union medical care programs and the author of many articles and papers in professional journals. At one time he wrote a column for the AFL-CIO News.

Nashua Teachers Vote for AFT Unit

Nashua, N. H. — The Nashua Teachers Union won bargaining rights from the Nashua Education Association in an election here among 408 public school teachers. The vote was 220 for the union, 163 for the association, which had represented teachers for two years.

The victory over the National Education Association affiliate was the third for the Teachers in a month. On Long Island, the Farmingdale, N.Y., Classroom Teachers Association, representing more than 600 teachers, voted to affiliate with the AFT and was chartered as Local 1889. Recently a 950-teacher unit at Warwick, R.I., voted 415-358 for union affiliation.

For Flouting Union Rights:

ILO Holds Up Aid To Greek Regime

Geneva, Switzerland—The Intl. Labor Organization is refusing to provide technical aid to the Greek government until it clears itself of charges of flouting trade union rights.

All 48 worker, government and employer members of the United Nations specialized agency's Governing Body approved this stand at a session just concluded here.

It would "not be appropriate," the executive group said, to supply the aid requested by Athens while the complaints filed against it are under investigation by the ILO.

Formal complaints were made according to ILO procedure by the worker delegates of West Germany, Canada, Denmark and Norway to last summer's full-dress conference of the 117-nation agency.

They charged that the military regime that seized power in 1967 had dissolved trade unions and imprisoned their leaders in "flagrant violation" of Greece's obligations to the ILO to guarantee freedom of association and trade union rights.

The Governing Body requested the Greek government to reply by Jan. 15th to these charges in order that it might decide at its next session in February whether to appoint a special committee to investigate them.

In related action the executive group expressed grave concern over the arrest and sentencing to a one-year jail term of Abdelkader Awab, Moroccan worker delegate to the last ILO conference, or general assembly.

Reprisal Action

The suspicion that the Moroccan government had acted against Awab because he had accused it of "bloodthirsty repression" against trade unions in a speech at the conference appeared "to jeopardize the freedom of speech" all delegates were guaranteed, the Governing Body said.

Jean Moeri, veteran Swiss leader of the worker representatives, bluntly termed the Moroccan government's action a "blatant violation of trade union rights."

The executive unit called on the Moroccan authorities to explain the circumstances surrounding the jailing of the labor leader.

While worker, employer and government spokesmen were unanimous in defense of human and trade union rights, they split over the issue of the agenda of the 1970 ILO conference.

The workers lost by one vote, 24-23, their demand that the problem of the health hazards arising from the industrial use of benzine be added to the agenda.

Because workers run the risk of leukemia and other blood diseases when exposed to it for any time, Moeri eloquently appealed for a second vote.

He was strongly supported by Rudolph Faupl, Machinists international representative, who speaks for the AFL-CIO as U.S. worker delegate to the ILO.

But the employer representatives staged a walkout rather than permit the second vote that George L.-P. Weaver, U.S. Assistant Secretary of Labor and Governing Body chairman, was prepared to hold.

The employers asserted that adding another item as technical as that of benzine hazards would overload the conference. Nevertheless, they subsequently gave assurances that they would support putting the problem before the 1971 conference.

On the agenda of the 1970 conference the Governing Body added the questions of the relationship between trade union rights and civil liberties and the protection and facilities to be assured trade union spokesmen inside plants.

Both items were strongly urged by the worker delegates.

New World Standards Proposed for Boatmen

Geneva, Switzerland—Eighteen specialists who met here under the auspices of the Intl. Labor Organization have called for the upgrading of working conditions in the inland water transport industry.

The representatives of trade unions, governments and employers from 15 countries adopted a report setting out the minimum standards that should be guaranteed the industry's workers.

The "urgent need" for better standards in order to meet such technological developments as the introduction of pusher-type cargo movers on many rivers, lakes, canals and estuaries was stressed by the conference.

It called on the ILO Governing Body, or executive council, to take "urgent steps" to have the proposed standards put into the form of an international code for adoption by governments.

Peter Bocker, national representative of the Maritime Union, was the AFL-CIO member of the six-man worker team that sparked the meeting's successful efforts.

Under Bocker's urgings the session included in its recommended standards a provision for the licensing of all categories of inland boatmen.

This is necessary, he said, because of the great responsibilities carried by all the industry's workers under modern operating conditions.

The minimum age, the meeting decided, for employment as an inland boatman should be 18 years. But it was agreed that this age could be lowered by one year for youths who have completed a vocational training program.

The government and employer representatives accepted the definition offered by the workers of the objectives of vocational training.

One of these aims is "to enable inland waterway workers to develop their skills and experience to the full." An improvement of the "general cultural level" is another goal to be sought through the provision of broader education either during or before the vocational training period.

The need to provide for medical examinations in the projected minimum standards was also emphasized. Such examinations to determine a worker's fitness for the job he is to fill must be free of charge to him, the meeting said.

In their report, delegates said that it was their aim to take into account the higher standards already existing in the advanced countries in order to provide "realistic" guidelines for the developing nations.

U.S. Report Finds:

Construction Season Cause of Joblessness

Seasonal unemployment in construction "looms large among the remaining problems of unemployment that confront the nation," a government report emphasizes.

How large? Such joblessness, it points out, "accounts for over one-fifth of the nation's total remaining unemployment, and represents one-third of all unemployment in construction."

The report, based on studies by the Labor and Commerce departments, was released by Pres. Johnson as a basis for his memorandum calling on all government departments and agencies to take steps to achieve stable employment in construction.

The government is a major purchaser of the work of the building industry and it "should and can embark on a positive program to diminish seasonality," the President said.

Unemployment rates among construction workers over recent years, the report said, have ranged from 4 to 9 percent during summer months, while soaring to a high of from 11 to 22 percent in February.

Seasonal layoffs have their harshest impact on carpenters, painters, plasterers, masons, operating engineers and laborers—groups which represent the largest proportion of the nation's 3.2 million construction workers.

Seasonality has less effect on plumbers, electricians and sheet metal workers because they have "very large proportions of inside work," the report indicates.

Although the major excuse for seasonality in work has been the weather, the report notes that "even in the South there are summer-winter employment differences that cannot be explained by weather alone."

Further, it cited developments in strengthening building materials, plastics, protective clothing for workers and construction techniques which "open up possibilities for greater regularization" of construction employment.

The studies, which also dealt with the need for planning of construction work, were based upon records of employment in pension plans and information furnished by both labor and management groups.

Meanwhile, these studies and the President's memorandum represent only a beginning in the attack on the age-old curse of seasonal fluctuations in construction employment.

The 90th Congress passed legislation, backed by the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., calling for a more detailed study of all aspects of the problem and toward solving it.

This study—to be carried out by Secretary of Labor, Secretary of Commerce, and representatives of several federal agencies—will focus particularly on the problem's "implications for a national manpower policy."

A report and recommendations will be submitted to the President and Congress by Dec. 31, 1969.

Profits Soar To New Mark In '68 Climb

ter to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $871 billion.

The current GNP is $60 billion, or 7.4 percent higher, than for the same period a year ago.

The $18.1 billion increase exceeded government economists' earlier predictions of a rise of about $10 billion. The growth in the third quarter represented a 5 percent increase in real terms, after allowance for higher prices.

The Federal Reserve Board, meanwhile, reported that its index of industrial production moved upward to 164.4 percent of the 1957-59 average, putting output at a level 5 percent higher than a year ago.

In a separate report the Commerce Dept. said that its latest survey showed "no evidence" of any slackening in plans by consumers to buy automobiles, appliances, furniture and other durable goods.

Consumer buying plans, resulting from an October survey of 11,500 households, remained unchanged from July for new cars and were just slightly below July buying plans for furniture and appliances.

TV Spots Boost '67 Income for Screen Actors

Hollywood—Television commercials helped boost the earnings of screen actors last year and accounted for almost 42 percent of their $109 million income in 1967.

Executive Sec. John L. Dales disclosed at the annual meeting of the Screen Actors Guild here that the TV commercials, plus industrial films, brought members $43.3 million to actors, an increase of $5.5 million over the year before.

He told the more than 1,000 members at the Hollywood Palladium that TV entertainment films accounted for $35.9 million, down $4.5 million from 1966. Feature pictures compensated the actors with $26.6 million, a gain of $3 million.

The Guild and other unions in the industry are combining efforts to bring an increase in the domestic production of films, Dales reported.

Despite the odds and the reality of the national political scene, "we will continue our efforts to secure remedial legislation to boost film production in the United States," he added.

He also reported that the Guild's pension and health and welfare plans are financially sound, noting that the union paid about $869,000 in hospitalization and over $800,000 in surgical and medical fees this year.

The Guild also is paying 235 pensioners a total of $43,000 monthly.

Veteran actor James Stewart was presented the annual Guild award "for outstanding achievement in fostering the finest ideals of the acting profession." Previous recipients include Bob Hope, Barbara Stanwyck and William Gargan.

Charlton Heston, who was reelected president of the guild, was installed along with First Vice Pres. Gene Barry and other officers of the union.

Picket-Crossing Fines No Bar to Contract

Tampa, Fla.—An employer cannot legally hinge signing of a contract to a condition that the union drop fines it has assessed against members for crossing picket lines, a National Labor Relations Board examiner ruled.

The finding came from examiner David S. Davidson in a case involving Gulf Refrigeration, Inc., a Bradenton, Fla. air conditioner, and Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Local 583.

During a strike that began in January 1968 over an unresolved contract, the local fined several of its members for crossing picket lines.

In a negotiating session on March 14, 1968, the firm and the local resolved all unsettled issues but then the employer said it would settle only if the local withdrew the fines which hadn't yet been collected.

A complaint filed by NLRB's general counsel on behalf of the local contended that the matter of fines was not a mandatory subject of bargaining and that Gulf had no right to make dropping the fines a condition for settlement.

The counsel further charged that since the employer unlawfully conditioned signing upon dropping the fines, it also violated the National Labor Relations Act by not signing after it had agreed to terms.

At the hearings here, the employer argued that fines are a mandatory subject of bargaining, but even if the examiner found that they weren't, they were a "permissible subject" of bargaining.

Further, Gulf contended it did not insist on dropping the fines to a "point of impasse," so that there was in fact no agreement which the employer was compelled to sign.

Davidson said the record showed that the local never agreed to bargain on the fines—to the contrary, its position at all times was that they were an internal union affair and none of the employer's business.

He cited several court decisions that have clearly limited bargaining subjects to those defined in the NLRA—"wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment."

He found that the company "had agreed to the terms of a complete agreement subject only to a condition which it could not lawfully impose."

Davidson recommended that the full NLRB order the employer to remove its unlawful condition from the agreement and sign it, giving retroactive effect to its terms and conditions.

The employes of the company should be fully recompensed for any losses they may have suffered as a result of Gulf's refusal to sign the contract in accord with past board precedents, the examiner declared.

Job Protection Pledged To New York Teachers

May 1968 when the local district governing board ousted 19 teachers and supervisors on charges that they were undermining the decentralization plan or doing unsatisfactory work. The ousted teachers were later cleared of the charge by a trial examiner.

At the time of school opening in September the governing board refused to reinstate the dismissed teachers and the union warned it would strike unless the teachers were returned to their jobs.

A settlement was reached with the Board of Education to return the teachers to the jobs from which they had been ousted plus other provisions for appeals, etc. The following day neighborhood residents of the largely Negro and Puerto Rican area attempted to prevent the teachers from entering the building.

This led to the second walkout keyed to the union's demand for protection of teachers from harassment and violence. A settlement of this walkout was followed by more violence as residents clashed with police assigned to protect the UFT members.

The third walkout lasting 35 days brought a series of mediation and settlement efforts involving the city, the Board of Education and the state culminating in the settlement worked out on Nov. 17.

Virgin Islands Vote Sweep for Democrats

Charlotte Amalie, V. I.—Democrats swept all 15 legislative seats in the Virgin Islands election. Voters also returned a Democratic commissioner, Ronald Delugo, to represent the territory in Washington.

However, the governor is appointed by the President and a Republican will probably be named by Pres.-Elect Nixon to succeed Democratic Gov. Ralph M. Paiewonsky.

U.S. Population Rises Two Million in Year

The resident population of the United States rose by about 2 million during the last year to reach an estimated total of 201,750,000 as of Oct. 1, 1968, the Census Bureau reported. The figure represents an increase of more than 21 million in this decade.

GE Workers Upheld On Control of Fund

General Electric's attempt to operate an employe mutual fund plan without the employe-investors having any voice in its administration has been blocked by a Securities & Exchange Commission hearing examiner.

GE's sole control of the fund was opposed by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and three other unions.

The company had asked to be exempt from the Investment Company Act so it could appoint all five trustees of the fund and bypass requirements which would assure the participants periodic information about the fund's operations.

The fund is part of GE's savings and security program for its employes.

If the ruling by SEC hearing examiner Sidney L. Feiler stands through a review by the full commission, it will be the first time the SEC has denied an exemption sought by a company to requirements governing investment-savings funds for employes.

Feiler said that all hourly employes who participate in the fund pay a premium and run the financial risk of losing company contributions if they withdraw from the program within three years after enrollment.

Since the employe-investors run this risk, Feiler said the exemption for GE on the election of fund directors was not consistent with the protection of investors under a section of the act.

The annual election of directors places the control of the fund with the participants and makes it responsive to their wishes and judgments, Feiler noted.

The effort of GE to assure careful and successful operation of the fund is no substitute for the right of "employe-investors to have an effective voice in determining those matters themselves," he said.

But since the company makes a substantial contribution to the fund, Feiler said that it would be appropriate for GE to select two of the five trustees, with the other three elected annually by employe-investors.

Feiler also recommended denial of GE's application to exempt the company from filing annual and quarterly reports with the government on the operation of the fund, which the act requires.

The IUE's objection to the GE application for exemption from the investment act regulations was joined by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, the Glass Workers and the Auto Workers.

Pass Up the Grapes

AMERICANS CAN GIVE an extra lift to Thanksgiving this year by a simple act: don't buy grapes.

The absence of grapes on the "groaning boards" of Thanksgiving dinners is the most direct and meaningful way of expressing support for the thousands of courageous farm workers struggling for human dignity.

The "don't buy grapes" campaign is the nationwide extension of the battle in the Central Valley of California by farm workers seeking to bring modern industrial relations to the feudal baronies of the grape growers.

The campaign has drawn support from every segment of the community—including the churches, civil rights groups, students, social workers—and is solidly supported by the entire trade union movement. It has brought to national consciousness the exploitation and poverty of the nation's farm workers; it has become a rallying point for all liberals and progressives.

The "don't buy grapes" campaign has the potential to crack the growers' determination to destroy the farm workers union. It has made deep inroads in the California table grape market and it is picking up momentum.

A final victory for the farm workers will come when Americans pass up the grapes tended and picked by strikebreakers and along with their thanks for the plenty of the fields give their support to those who help make it possible.

Apathy at the Polls

ABOUT 72 MILLION Americans of voting age cast ballots in the 1968 presidential election; another 48 million sat it out either voluntarily or because of the difficulties of meeting registration and residency requirements.

That means that only 60 percent of those of voting age participated in the critical choice of a President, a lower percentage than in either 1964 or 1960.

Voting participation in America is not one of the nation's proudest accomplishments. Nearly every other democratic country in the world has a higher rate of citizens participating in elections.

But in the last few years specific efforts and campaigns have been launched to get citizens registered and to get them to the polls on election day. In addition, registration procedures have been eased in some areas—although much remains to be done—the poll tax has been eliminated and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 has helped crack down on discrimination in registering and voting.

NEVERTHELESS, the Election Day turnout has dropped from the 63.8 percent of 1960 and the 62 percent in 1964. And it might have dropped even further this year except for a large increase in voter participation in the South as a result of the Voting Act and the candidacy of George C. Wallace.

The Associated Press estimates that more than 90 million voters were registered for the 1968 elections and slightly less than 80 percent of that figure turned out to vote on Election Day. That means 18 million voters who were completely eligible failed to exercise their democratic right to choose the next President.

A democratic system of government cannot function effectively in a representative sense if 18 million voters who could have voted didn't and 48 million others who were eligible to register and vote passed up the opportunity.

Maturing of Thinking:

Equal Rights in Marketplace Goal of New Consumer Thrust

The following is excerpted from testimony by Betty Furness, special assistant to the President for Consumer Affairs, before the Federal Trade Commission hearings on national consumer protection.

HISTORIANS WHO PROBE this period will find one of its significant characteristics to have been this increased emphasis on the consumer. We have come a long way from the day—and it was not so long ago—when anybody who spoke out for the consumer was eyed suspiciously as a "bleeding heart," dubbed a "professional consumer," or dismissed as a finicky housewife fretting over fractional ounces or "cents off."

Analysts will find that this new emphasis is not a "class war" nor an attempt by power-hungry bureaucrats to undermine business or the free enterprise system. It's really a maturing of our national thinking. It's the growing realization that we must concern ourselves not only with the growth of our economy, but with its quality and its equality in serving all segments of our society.

The consumer deserves to be satisfied in products and services. The consumer deserves to be served by the producer—and not vice versa. The consumer deserves equal rights in the marketplace. The consumer, as a consumer, deserves an effective voice in government.

The textbook concept of the free enterprise system assumes an open, competitive marketplace of informed buyers and sellers. But we know today that in our fast changing, complex and impersonal marketplace, the consumer is not the equal of the seller. He does not enjoy a genuine bargaining position.

Too often he is dissatisfied with the quality. Too often he is misinformed, or not fully informed about product characteristics. In other words, these marketplace malfunctions prevent the consumer from fulfilling his proper role in the free enterprise system.

And to add insult to injury the consumer is too often denied redress. We have yet to provide adequate means for the voicing and arbitration of grievances. Needless to add, the system which poses such problems for the more affluent, works much greater hardship on the poor.

PERHAPS MOST significant in all that we've done is the historic shift in economic philosophy which now clearly recognizes the importance of consumer concerns in the total fabric of the marketplace.

Such a basic change provides the necessary climate for specific consumer action. Where we once felt consumer problems were personal, we now recognize them as public issues.

I think what we need is comprehensive one-stop consumer service where the consumer can get answers to his questions and remedies for his problems and can also be informed on how to avoid problems in the marketplace.

As it stands now, we've got the consumer on a merry-go-round of referrals. And why should a housewife have to write the federal government to find out how to get her toaster fixed?

She buys what she buys and rents what she rents in her own neighborhood and she should be able to find out all she needs to know and have the problems worked out in her own neighborhood, too.

If that can't be done through the businesses involved, then it should be done through expanded state and local consumer protection programs.

What's lacking is legislation to fulfill two broad and unsatisfied needs: First, a system that will provide effective and economical redress for consumer grievances; and second, stronger deterrents and penalties to include financial reimbursement for losses sustained.

We simply must make it unprofitable for business to engage in unfair practices. The consumer really needs doorstep justice, and we hope these hearings will stimulate its development. We should make better provisions for redress through the courts, including small claims courts and a system of arbitration. And added facility for getting economic justice, of course, would be use of class suits.

An extremely consumer-conscious Administration is about to go out of office. As a member of that Administration naturally I'm sorry to see it go. But I don't think any Administration can now afford to turn its back on the American consumer.

The consumer has a voice now and is using it. No Administration can or should ignore that voice.

Still, it's obvious that the consumer challenge is the greatest it has ever been in our history.

I have every reason to believe—we all have every reason to believe—that the challenge will be met.

Mediation Director Reports:

Collective Bargaining Meets Challenges of Changing Times

The following is excerpted from an address by William E. Simkin, director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service to a seminar on collective bargaining at St. Bonaventure University.

A FIRST ILLUSION to shatter is the notion that all aspects of bargaining are characterized by conflict. There are vast areas of mutual interest. Sometimes, mutual interest as respects a particular issue is quickly evident to all participants. More often, it has to be discovered—sometimes painfully. The process of discovery—by exchange of ideas and points of view—can be and often is the essence of good bargaining. On many issues—including some that may have looked difficult—both parties walk away from the bargaining table with a sense of inward satisfaction.

For those issues where there is a real absence of mutual interest, bargaining is an art of compromise or capitulation. Compromise is not necessarily a dirty word. It is an essential part of our democratic legislative process. In the labor relations area, the spectrum of compromise varies all the way from a viable solution—at least for a time—to an answer accepted by one side or the other with great bitterness. Nor is outright capitulation on a particular issue an act of dishonor. It may well be only a sensible exercise of "consent to lose," sometimes within the range of the discovery process noted earlier, or a wise decision to "live to fight another day."

In short, most bargains are a mixture of recognized mutual interest, evident or discovered, along with compromise and capitulation. I like to emphasize the discovery aspects of the process—a pragmatic form of education at its best.

A second myth about collective bargaining that ought to be punctured is the "equal bargaining power" concept. Who can define equality? The will, strength, intelligence and staying power of an organized group of workers cannot be measured by the same yardsticks as the same words applied to a company. Both the tangible and psychological factors are different. To the extent that comparisons can be made, both parties are constantly striving to enlarge their relative power factor. Intelligent parties with tremendous power may decide very wisely and consciously not to exercise the power that is available.

Other considerations are more important. Events and economic factors completely outside the domain of the bargainers may change the power factors—drastically and quickly. A union that may be very strong vis-a-vis management today may be quite weak three years hence. We can instinctively recognize significant inequality of power at a given moment of time. It is a disquieting thing to witness total capitulation. But I defy anybody who believes he can create lasting equality artificially or that he can quantify it precisely.

Relative power factors are not by any means the only ingredients of bargaining. About the most that can be said is that an agreement reached at a particular moment of time does reflect, in some measure, a temporary equation of powers that are exercised or threatened.

A third characteristic of collective bargaining is what I have sometimes called the "yo-yo theory." In a very general way, basically sound relationships can be distinguished from seriously troubled ones. But if almost any single union-management relationship is examined over a long period of time, "ups and downs" are discernable.

SOONER OR LATER, a good picture will get very blurred; a poor picture will get better. Labor peace tends to slacken effort. Before anybody quite realizes what has happened, much of the peaceful atmosphere has departed. Conversely, there are enough people who dislike disorder and strife who will band together and work hard to take corrective action.

A fourth characteristic of bargaining is its constantly changing scope. Select almost any labor agreement at random, including choice from among those governing bargaining relationships of long vintage. Compare the current contract with the one in effect 20 years ago. The little books get fatter and fatter. Pension and insurance provisions are now often printed separately. The total current agreement may be a composite of several labor contracts and supplements, thousands of grievance settlements and hundreds of arbitration decisions.

Some aspects of this development are deplorable; some are inevitable; some are highly desirable. All I'm suggesting here is that bargaining is a process that almost invariably enlarges its subject matter as a relationship develops. But this enlargement is very uneven. It's not growth at a steady pace. There are sharp rises and plateaus. The growth curve for any one relationship will be different from the one next door. Parenthetically, these differences make it somewhat unrealistic to attempt to formulate any general rules about mandatory subjects for bargaining.

Will labor and management need laws and rules that go beyond the outer limits of voluntary persuasion? The answer to that question is a bit academic. We already have them and probably will have more. It's beyond the reach of these remarks to attempt to analyze what we have or to predict what we may have. The answers lie, on the one hand, in the hoped-for good judgment of the lawmakers and, on the other hand, in the demonstrated ability of the bargainers to exercise the process within the reasonable range of its potential.

The days, months, and years ahead in the collective bargaining arena will not be easy. There are serious problem areas. Collective bargaining is on trial. It has been on trial in the past. It will always be on trial. There are many sound reasons to believe that both the process and the practitioners will meet the challenge.

Bargaining Efforts:

Union-Negotiated Wage Gains Bring Peak Purchasing Power

AN AFL-CIO ECONOMIST credited "long work at the bargaining table" with the new high in workers' buying power reached in September.

"For the first time in the last three years," workers' wages overcame the "handicaps" of sharp consumer price rises and higher taxes, Rudolph Oswald, an economist in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, reported on the network radio interview, Labor News Conference.

But, the labor economist noted, the gains were really not enough to permit substantial improvement of workers overall living standards, which have seen "practically no change" in the last three years. The AFL-CIO produced program is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

Oswald rejected the contention that improved wages have triggered the price rises. "As a matter of fact," he declared, "prices started to rise before larger wage increases occurred." He noted that in mass production industries, manufacturing, automobiles, radio and television sets and other durable goods, union-won wage improvements have been "more than offset . . . by the growth in productivity and automation."

He pointed out that price increases in those industries have been smaller than in other industries that are not as well organized. He cited the substantial rise in doctors' fees, pointing out that doctors "are not members of formal labor organizations."

OSWALD SAID that the two broad objectives of collective bargaining in the next year or two will be wage improvements that "more than cover increasing prices," and a larger share of "what we are really producing . . . so that workers can share in the growing wealth and productivity" of the nation's total economy.

YOUNGSTERS in American schools are taught that the U.S. government consists of three branches. executive, legislative and judicial and that these divisions provide a high degree of checks and balances.

This description is accurate enough so far as it goes. There is, however, a fourth branch in the governmental structure—the more or less independent regulatory agencies which play so powerful a role in American life.

What happens to these agencies when the new Nixon Administration takes over can be just as important as what happens to the kind of legislation that Pres.-Elect Richard M. Nixon will ask for, the kind of appointments he makes to future vacancies on the Supreme Court, and the executive decisions he has the power to make as President.

The new President, of course, will not be able to change the present character of these agencies over night. In most cases he will be able to change the chairmen, but for the most part an expression of how he wants these agencies to operate will only come as he fills vacancies that occur.

The vast range of activities carried on by these regulatory agencies can be appreciated simply by listing the more important ones, their functions and how they have been operating.

There is a fat "United States Government Organization Manual" that is published yearly as the official organization handbook of the federal government. It lists those agencies that are part of the legislative and judicial branches but the overwhelming section—500 pages out of 600—is devoted to agencies of the executive branch where the President has the power of appointment.

THERE ARE MANY so-called independent agencies, that have a wide influence over Americans. These include the Federal Aviation Agency which oversees the commercial airways; the Federal Communciations Commission, which regulates radio and television; the Federal Reserve System, which controls monetary policy and credit; the Federal Trades Commission, which is designed to protect the consumer; the Civil Service Commission, that is charged with keeping the "spoils system" out of the federal service and the Tennessee Valley Authority, which has had so profound an influence on the development of power resources in the United States.

For union members the National Labor Relations Board is a key agency that is charged with balancing the scales between labor and management. Back in the days of the Eisenhower Administration, the NLRB was loaded with conservative members and its decisions tended to favor management. Since the Kennedy and Johnson Administration came to power, the scales are in much more even balance. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce now—would like to abolish the board and set up labor courts that inevitably would weaken labor.

It is customary for agency chairmen to resign when a new President comes into office, but this resignation does not affect service in the agency involved. Thus Chairman Frank McCulloch of the NLRB may step out as chairman, but his term on the board does not expire until August 1970.

The term of former newspaperman, Sam Zagoria, expires on Dec. 16, 1969, the first vacancy that the board will have. Zagoria, is a Republican from New Jersey with a liberal reputation. Whether Nixon will reappoint him will be highly significant.

The other members on the board are Gerald A. Brown, whose term expires on Aug. 27, 1971; John H. Fanning, whose term expires on Dec. 16, 1972, and Howard Jenkins, Jr., whose term expires on Aug. 27, 1973.

Jenkins is the second Republican member on the board. If Zagoria is re-named or replaced by another Republican, Nixon will not have a chance to appoint a third Republican until mid-1970, when McCulloch's term is up.

In any event, the kind of men that Nixon appoints to this "fourth" branch of government will be the signal for the kind of administration that the American people will get.

PROGRESS at the bargaining table pushed workers' purchasing power to a new high, AFL-CIO economist Rudolph Oswald, center, said on Labor News Conference as he was interviewed by Frank Swoboda, left, of United Press Intl. and Harry Conn of Press Associates, Inc.

AFGE Local Helps Set Up Child Day Care

Local 12 of the American Federation of Government Employes is cooperating with the Labor Dept. in setting up an experimental child day care service for some of the department's employes in the Washington area.

The union is represented on a special committee which will select a token number of 30 pre-school children to take part in the demonstration program which is designed to show both public and private employers the usefulness and feasibility of such centers for their workers.

Aids Recruiting

The overall objective of the project is to explore such employer-sponsored day care centers as an aid in recruiting prospective employes from inner city poverty areas. It is also to explore the effects of employer-sponsored programs on employe stabilization and to assess the impact on public and private employers in the District of Columbia area.

Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz said that the one-year trial is "for employes or potential employes whose day care arrangements are not or would not be adequate."

"This inadequacy is often reflected in the employe's inability to get to work on time or to perform at a worry-free level," he said.

Fees Based on Ability

A sliding scale of fees, ranging from $25 a week to $1 a week, is pegged to the employe's ability to pay.

Fifteen of the 30 children are being selected from new employes who could not accept employment unless low-cost child day care were available.

The other 15 are being selected from among current Labor Dept. employes from all levels. All children must be taken to and from the center by private means.

The center is a professionally staffed day care operation, open from 7:45 a.m. to 5:45 p.m. A hot lunch is served daily, as well as morning and afternoon snacks. Trips, music, science, creative materials, and use of conceptual language highlight the program. Parents will be able to have lunch occasionally with their children and teachers.

2 Trades Departments Join Apprentice Plans

Two AFL-CIO departments—the Building & Construction Trades and the Metal Trades—have set up a joint committee to coordinate apprenticeship activities and policies.

The Joint Apprenticeship Committee is designed to be the unified spokesman on apprenticeship programs and problems for the many union affiliates of the two federation departments.

Pres. B. A. Gritta of the Metal Trades Dept. told officers of the affiliated unions that the new committee "would be in a unique position to discuss labor's apprenticeship problems and arrive at answers to assist the Bureau of Apprenticeship of the Dept. of Labor."

Pres. C. J. Haggerty of BCTD promised that the committee "will have the full support of all segments of the organized labor movement."

The committee's purpose, said David S. Turner, its newly-appointed chairman, "is to bring together all trades to discuss—and hopefully solve — problems common to our separate apprenticeship programs."

Turner, secretary-treasurer of the Sheet Metal Workers, has served as chairman of the Metal Trades Apprenticeship Committee which is now merged into JAC.

Marcus Loftis, assistant to the president of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and director of IBEW apprenticeship training, was elected vice chairman of JAC.

Paul Hutchings, secretary of the Metal Trades Apprenticeship Committee for the past 10 years, was elected secretary of the new joint committee.

Chairman Turner expressed belief that the committee would serve to bring better communications among various segments of the labor movement. He also noted the importance of presenting a unified stand for labor to the new administration.

Turner said JAC would also be concerned with the many changes in jurisdiction in the Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training (BAT) programs.

BAT Dir. Hugh Murphy said he hoped for a cooperative association with the committee to pursue the mutual aims of a strong apprenticeship program.

JAC initiated steps for the naming of subcommittee members in the areas of legislation, vocational education, BAT and equal employment opportunities. Subcommittee appointments will be made at the next quarterly meeting.

The New Senate

There will be 58 Democrats and 42 Republicans in the Senate when the 91st Congress convenes in January if a recount confirms the narrow victory of Republican Robert W. Packwood over Wayne Morse in Oregon. The GOP scored a net gain of five Senate seats.

hour for every hour worked into the fund, which finances a comprehensive health and welfare fund.

The pact specifies that all covered employes shall join the union and remain in good standing as a condition of employment within 30 days of contract signing or after 10 days of work. A voluntary check-off is included.

The employer is bound to call on the union first when he requires any additional employes to perform work covered by the contract.

The union and the company will establish a joint safety committee to consider present rules on safety, work out safety improvements and make recommendations regarding safety to local managements on Franzia's ranches and farms.

The pact requires the employer to provide "suitable, cool, portable drinking water convenient to employes," adequate first aid supplies, safety equipment and protective garments necessary to safeguard health and prevent injury.

The company also is mandated to furnish adequate toilet facilities in the field, readily accessible to workers in the field and maintained in a clean and sanitary manner.

The contract sets up a seniority rule based upon an employes length of service from the date of his hiring. When filling vacancies, making transfers or recalling from layoff, the employer will give preference to workers with the greatest seniority.

Included among the contract's many other benefits are three days pay in case of death in the immediate family, maintenance of seniority in the case of military service, maintenance of pay for jury duty and relief periods during working hours.

While many of the pact's provisions deal with benefits and conditions industrial workers have had for many years, these are achievements just now being made for farm workers.

The contract has been the subject of negotiations that got underway in January. Chief negotiators for the union were Delores Huerta and Mack Lyons, assisted by Irwin De Shelter of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Organization.

13 Pogy Boaters Settle on Backpay

New Orleans — Thirteen pogy boat fishermen, fired five years ago when they voted for a union, will divide $32,000 in backpay under a settlement announced here by the National Labor Relations Board.

The settlement ended a legal battle by the Meat Cutters for the crew of the motor vessel Gallant Man, owned by the Patterson Menhaden Corp. The crewmen fish the Atlantic and Gulf coasts for menhaden in craft they call pogy boats.

AFL-CIO Asks Strict Policy:

Curbs on Land Profiteering Sought in Water Projects

The AFL-CIO has renewed a long-standing appeal to the federal government to halt "perversion" of the Reclamation Act by big landowners who are profiteering on federal water projects.

It did so by endorsing a contemplated new policy to give land holders on such projects 90 days to sign contracts complying with the law's acreage limitations, or see the water project terminated.

The federation also backed a program being considered whereby the federal government would buy lands divested under the law, with resale profits used to aid education and conservation.

The proposals to enforce the law's acreage requirement and buy excess holdings are under consideration by the Federal Water Resources Council, an interagency group to administer water policy.

AFL-CIO support for two resolutions dealing with the subjects was expressed by Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller in a letter to Sec. of Interior Stewart L. Udall, council chairman. Copies of the letter also went to other department heads who are members of the council.

Under the Reclamation Act, land owners eligible for federal water on reclamation projects are supposed to divest themselves of all holdings in excess of 160 acres—320 acres in the case of a husband and wife. The law also prohibits speculation on reclamation lands.

Enforcement of the excess acreage and anti-speculation provisions has been left to the Secretary of Interior, and as recently as 1964 Udall conceded that enforcement has been loose under a policy allowing 10 years for divesting.

However, the problem really came to a head in the years following 1959 when Congress authorized a huge project to bring federal water to a 400,000 acre area of California's Central Valley, known as Westlands Water District.

Congress has appropriated more than $250 million for the project, which is expected to be completed in two years, under a system whereby landowners can repay their share of costs to the United States over 50 years, interest-free.

Big Corporations hold huge chunks of Westland. For example, Southern Pacific Railroad reportedly holds 100,000 acres there. Boswell Land Co. is said to hold 35,000 acres.

In his letter, Biemiller pointed out that the AFL-CIO has "long been most active" in support of strong enforcement of the Reclamation Act and particularly noted that the new divesting policy, if adopted, would apply to Westlands.

When Westlands was authorized, he noted, about 70 percent of its area was owned in individual parcels of more than 160 acres and "since that time excess ownership has climbed to more than 75 percent of the district."

Subsidized Profiteering

"The American taxpayer," Biemiller said, "is subsidizing an enormously expensive water delivery system to Westland, which is being used by excess landowners in combination with California's insatiable demand for land to push land prices sky high."

"This," he declared, "is a perversion of both law and public policy and must not be allowed to continue."

Stressing that the AFL-CIO has long supported federal purchase of excess reclamation lands, Biemiller suggested a number of ways in which the contemplated purchase program be broadened.

He proposed that the excess wetlands be bought at dry-land prices, in order to bring resale prices within reach of family farmers, who would be aided by low-interest federal loans and federal programs to meet their needs.

He also urged that Congress be given right of approval of expenditures for excess lands and that provisions also be made for state and local governments to acquire some of the lands for parks, recreational areas and schools.

Pension Gains Go to Crews Of Towboats

New York—River boat crews covered by contracts of the National Maritime Union with major towboat operators now are entitled to full pensions after 20 years' service regardless of age, the NMU announced here.

Elimination of the age requirement—formerly age 65 for full benefits—was made possible by increased employer contributions. The increases were agreed to in three-year contracts negotiated earlier this year, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran said.

The higher contribution rate also will produce a two-stage increase in pension benefits from the current $100 a month to $150 in 1970. The joint union-management board of trustees approved the changes at a meeting in St. Louis.

The new contracts also provide for an annual $25 per month increase in base wages, formerly averaging $600 a month, for each year of the three-year agreement. They cover 1,800 employes of 16 companies.

Alabama Labor Backs TVA Fertilizer Center

Muscle Shoals, Ala.—Alabama labor has vowed to continue to press Congress for adequate appropriations for TVA's National Fertilizer Development Center—"a strong weapon in the world war on hunger."

The center—the nation's only major fertilizer research setup—has been the source of most advances in fertilizer technology for more than 30 years and is largely self-supporting.

But its funds have been steadily whittled in recent years. Last spring more than 400 union members were laid off. Research is being reduced and programs are being delayed.

In July, a trade union delegation that included Alabama AFL-CIO Pres. Barney Weeks, Wylie E. Chaffin of the Tri-Cities AFL-CIO and other labor leaders went to Washington to appeal for enough money to halt further cutbacks.

Although the Senate Appropriations Committee approved $3 million for the center's research programs, the independent agencies bill, as finally approved, contained a mere $50,000 for that purpose.

Tri-Cities AFL-CIO Pres. John A. McDonald now warns that the situation "has become further aggravated," with the center being forced into further retrenchment.

"While the labor movement at Muscle Shoals has a number of jobs directly at stake in this matter, this is of little consequence compared to the national and international ramifications," he points out.

For one thing, he and other labor leaders emphasize, the research developed "at this single plant is the key to keeping the consumer's food bills down."

But more than that, they contend, the center is the training ground in fertilizers for technicians and leaders in industry and government from "developing nations who are trying to learn how to end starvation."

"The center," McDonald concludes, "is this nation's best hope for reducing its foreign aid costs by teaching other nations how to reduce their dependence on the United States for food and other goods."

With these thoughts in mind, the representatives of all Alabama unions have agreed that they'll be back in Washington to continue their fight in next year's Congress.

Beirne, Jennings Warn of Dangers To Collective Bargaining Progress

Creative and bold new procedures are expected to play a key role in the negotiation of many national contracts in 1969. But there is also a threat of a breakdown in the collective bargaining process if powerful anti-union groups have their way.

This contrasting picture was illustrated by Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers and Pres. Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at a St. Bonaventure University seminar on collective bargaining.

Jennings called for continuing collective bargaining between employers and unions, and not leave the process "to a short period every two or three years to solve all the ills that affect the relations of both parties."

He proposed the formation of a labor, management and public committee to work closely with the President that would deal with broad national policy questions in the social and economic field related to collective bargaining.

This committee would assess what is happening in labor-management relations, its effect on public policy and advise the President, labor and management groups on policies that should be adopted.

Beirne warned of breakdowns in the collective bargaining from within the process and from outside pressures.

Interior breakdowns often result when a weak union must stand up to a powerful employer or when an "employer may feel so dominated by a strong union" that his essential managerial rights have been eroded.

He noted that the collective bargaining process functions best when the power between the two negotiating parties is in approximate balance.

"Thus, the strike weapon often becomes the 'X factor' which permits rich management and not so rich working people to talk on as equals across the negotiating table," he said.

The strike is not a breakdown of the collective bargaining—but rather "an essential part of that process," Beirne said.

The greatest threat of the breakdown, Beirne warned, "is the plan to overhaul and to weaken the national laws on labor-management relations, to pull the National Labor Relations Board to pieces, and to substitute for the NLRB either nothing or a formalistic labor court."

This scheme has the support of influential corporation executives, he commented. The plan has attracted a group of corporate lawyers who would benefit in a revised statute with a heavy case load and exorbitant fees.

He named the National Association of Manufacturers and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce as supporting the overthrow of the NLRB and the Hill & Knowlton public relations firm for grinding out propaganda for the attacks.

Beirne said he hoped "that the wise and experienced men who ably represent our big corporations at the collective bargaining table will have the courage and the stature to blow the whistle on this misguided anti-union lobby."

"If the lobby is successful, it will deal a mighty blow to collective bargaining. We could have the sterile process of writing briefs and of a case presentation to a labor court. That is the road to compulsory arbitration. I don't want it, my labor colleagues don't want it, and I feel sure, wise men in business and industry don't want it."

City Workers Get Bargaining Rights

Lakewood, O.—City council of Lakewood unanimously passed an ordinance calling for full recognition of union bargaining rights.

The ordinance was enacted after extensive negotiations with Local 1043 of the State, County & Municipal Employes and the local lodge of the Fraternal Order of Police.

City-recognized unions are to submit their proposals for wage provisions by Dec. 15 for the following year. Bargaining will then be handled by the council's finance committee and any agreements must be approved by the council. The ordinance prohibits strikes.

Arkansas Certifies Compensation Law

Little Rock, Ark.—It's official! The biggest single round of improvements in the history of Arkansas' workmen's compensation law has been certified as enacted.

The secretary of state's office has tabulated the labor-sponsored initiative in the Nov. 5 election as carrying by a margin of 7,545 votes—252,506 for, 244,961 against.

The measure, fought by employers, amends the law to provide substantial new benefits and removes some present restrictions on claims. It becomes effective Dec. 18.

Labor Analyst David Saposs Dies at 82

David J. Saposs, a former economist on the National Labor Relations Board and a specialist in the labor field, died at his home in Washington. He was 82.

In the early years of the NLRB, from 1937 to 1940, Saposs headed its economic research division and was credited with assembling data to counter attacks on the agency from employers.

During World War II, he served as an economist on the War Production Board and following the war, in 1945 and 1946, he held a post with the military government in Germany.

Saposs returned to the United States to become a special assistant to the Commissioner of Labor Statistics in the Labor Dept. Later he became an adviser to the Marshall Plan. He retired in 1952.

An author of books and magazines on industrial economics, his publications dealt principally with labor trends and the government role in labor relations.

He was a graduate of the University of Wisconsin, later studied at Columbia University and taught at Brookwood Labor College, Katonah, N.Y.

In a message to his wife, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany recalled that he only recently had discussed labor activities with Saposs. "Dave was an astute and competent observer and author and we shall miss him," Meany declared.

Hruska vs. Scott:

GOP Conservatives, Liberals Battle for Senate Leadership

Senate Republicans are in a scramble for the leadership ladder, and a clash between the conservative and the moderate-liberal wings of the GOP appears to be shaping up.

Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen, who will be 73 when Congress convenes, is in no danger of being unseated as Senate Republican leader.

But the defeat in the California Republican primary of liberal Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel opens up the number two spot in the Senate GOP hierarchy—party whip, or assistant leader.

In the race for the job are Nebraska's Roman L. Hruska and Pennsylvania's Hugh Scott.

Hruska, a conservative, is reported to have the backing of Dirksen, and Sen. John G. Tower of Texas is playing a major role in lining up votes.

Scott, a pre-convention Rockefeller supporter, represents the more liberal wing of the party.

Dirksen has had occasional bouts of ill health and the battle for the number two leadership role has taken on greater intensity as a result.

Adding to the stakes in the contest is the potential the Republicans have in 1970 to wipe out the present 58-42 Democratic majority. In that year 25 Democratic seats will be up for election, as against only eight Republican seats.

Two other lesser posts on the Senate GOP leadership ladder are also open this year.

Thus far, Sen. Gordon L. Allott of Colorado has announced his candidacy for the chairmanship of the Senate Republican Policy Committee. It is now held by Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper of Iowa, who is retiring.

The politically influential post of chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, which involves fund-raising, is being sought by Tower. The Texas senator seeks to succeed California's George Murphy, who is stepping down.

Pres.-Elect Richard M. Nixon is apparently staying clear of the Senate leadership struggle.

Nixon, meanwhile, continued to confer with top aides on filling the key posts in his new Administration.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, he had named only a handful of White House assistants, members of his immediate staff.

Four of the early White House staffers named are from California and three of them were on leave from the J. Walter Thompson advertising agency to work on the campaign.

One of the Thompson advertising people is 29-year-old Ron Ziegler, who will apparently have the duties of White House press secretary, although at a step below the policy level usually associated with the post. Still uncertain was the role in the new Administration for Nixon's chief news advisor, Herbert Klein, a San Diego newspaper editor.

Stressing the theme of uniting the country, Nixon has met with prominent Americans in all walks of life, including AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, business and Negro leaders.

He has been keeping in close touch with foreign policy developments through his personal representative, Robert Murphy, a former under secretary of state.

At least one Republican campaign leader wasn't taking any chances of being overlooked in the Nixon Administration's talent hunt.

Wants a Job

William H. Rentschler, a candy manufacturer who headed the Nixon campaign in Illinois, was quoted by United Press Intl. as follows:

"I want a job in the federal government—not just any job, but a high-ranking job.

"First, I wouldn't take a job as an ambassador . . . I would not want to go to Washington just to be a deputy secretary of something. I would want to run a department or an agency.

"What I would really like is to be director of the U.S. Information Agency. Or perhaps I would accept appointment as secretary of commerce, or postmaster general, or chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Jobs like those are worth taking."

URBAN LEAGUE'S annual Equal Opportunity Day award was presented to Pres. Jerry Wurf of State, County & Municipal Employes, left, by Pres. Paul Jennings of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, right, last year's recipient of the award. With them is Whitney M. Young Jr., Urban League executive director.

Urban League Award Honors State-County

New York—The successful struggle by Memphis garbage men to gain dignity through union recognition brought the National Urban League's Equal Opportunity Day award to the State, County & Municipal Employes and its president, Jerry Wurf.

Wurf, in accepting the award, said that "black people want to be part of the mainstream of America."

But, he stressed, "they do not want to be patronized. They do want equal opportunity for and recognition of their accomplishments."

Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson received a long and emotional ovation as he made a surprise visit to the awards dinner.

"I came here to reaffirm my dedication to equal human rights to all Americans. Despite the blind anger of some men and the apathy of others, we shall overcome," he told his applauding audience.

"For as long as I live, I shall remain joined with you in fighting for that right to opportunity," he added.

The Urban League citation noted that "AFSCME risked all to win that (Memphis) strike— its power, its prestige and its future in the South.

"The grievances of a relatively few black workers escalated into a confrontation that ranks Memphis among the great battles in American labor history," the citation added.

"It was a coalition of the union and the black community that won Local 1733 almost everything it fought for: recognition, a substantial wage increase and a system of seniority that would insure the appointment of black supervisors for the first time—plus human dignity!"

Wurf recalled that human dignity was the hallmark of the Memphis struggle, during which Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was murdered. It reflected, Wurf said, in the picket signs carried by the garbage men proclaiming "I am a man!"

He said the trade union movement must do more than protect those earning high wages. It must take the lead, he said, to "provide a modicum of decency to those not sharing in the affluence of our society."

"Trade unions are the only ones who care about the poor working in a runaway garment factory in Arkansas," he said. "Trade unions are the only organizations striving to do something to help the grape pickers in California."

He said the trade union movement is the "fundamental unit remaining to do the job" of bringing equality of opportunity to all Americans.

Paul Jennings, president of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and last year's union recipient of the Urban League honor, presented the award to Wurf, saying:

"Jerry Wurf knows and understands misery and hopelessness of the people of the slums in the teeming cities. He knows and understands the degradation and humiliation which so many of our fellow Americans must face. But more than just knowing and understanding these things, he and the AFSCME have been trying to do something about them."

Labor Council Head Named Buffalo Judge

Buffalo, N.Y.—James L. Kane, 48, president of the Buffalo AFL-CIO Council since 1959, has been appointed to a Buffalo City Court judgeship.

Kane will take office Jan. 1.

"James L. Kane has been a very active lawyer," Buffalo Mayor Frank A. Sedita said in announcing the appointment, "he will be a very good judge."

Kane, a graduate of the University of Buffalo Law School, became president of the former Buffalo Federation of Labor in 1946 and has presided over the council since its merger. He is a member of the Postal Clerks.

Kane received a prolonged standing ovation from 100 council delegates at the meeting following his appointment.

A successor will be chosen at a Dec. 10 meeting of the council, the last meeting Kane will attend as president.

The judge-designate must run for election next November for a full 10-year term on the bench.

New Deal Era Dramatized in Television Film

A dramatization of fast-moving events following Franklin D. Roosevelt's appointment of Frances Perkins as Secretary of Labor in depression-ridden 1933 will be presented on more than 100 NBC-TV stations Sunday, Dec. 8.

The play, entitled "The Vine and the Fig Tree," gives a moving account of Miss Perkins' unswayable determination to meet the crushing plight of America's workers head-on, and to help ease it.

Written by Joseph Mindel, the half-hour film was produced under the auspices of the George Meany Foundation, an arm of the Herbert H. Lehman Institute. The film will be incorporated into the "Eternal Light" series, presented weekly by NBC and the Jewish Theological Seminary of America.

"The Vine and the Fig Tree" will be carried on the NBC-TV network at 12:30 p.m., EST. Local television schedules should be consulted for areas outside New York City.

Food Stamp Program Extended to 235 Areas

A major expansion of the federal government's food stamp program has been announced by Agriculture Sec. Orville L. Freeman. And a series of law suits has been filed in an effort to extend the program to hundreds of additional counties.

Freeman said the addition of 235 areas in 31 states will add 290,000 low-income persons to the food stamp eligibility roster—bringing the total to more than 3 million. Another 3.5 million persons are receiving surplus food under the department's Commodity Distribution Program.

An increase in congressional appropriations for the food stamp program—the result of a legislative fight led by Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (D-Mo.)—enabled the Agriculture Dept. to clean up the backlog of states and counties which had requested food stamp programs.

Food stamps are sold to low-income individuals and families certified by county or state agencies at discounts based on income and family size. The poorest person can buy $12 worth of food stamps a month for 50 cents, but most families pay a higher percentage of the retail value.

Suits to compel the Agriculture Dept. to provide either food stamps or free food distribution in an additional 500 counties have been filed by an anti-poverty legal agency—the Center on Social Welfare Policy & Law at Columbia University.

The suits are expected to provide a test of whether the Agriculture Dept. is correct in asserting that it cannot bring a food stamp program into a county without a request by the local government unless Congress changes the law. Direct distribution programs do not require local requests, however.

The new additions will bring the food stamp program to some 1,550 counties and cities over the next few months.

The food stamp program was inaugurated as a pilot project by Pres. Kennedy early in 1961 and was established through legislation under Pres. Johnson in 1964.

Don't Hit Labor on Prices Wall Street Journal Says

"It's more accurate to say that rising consumer prices cause rising wage demands than it is to state the reverse."

That's the conclusion of a Wall Street Journal editorial on the causes of inflation.

The editorial is headed, "The Unions Aren't to Blame." And the business newspaper cites its own surveys of wage and price increases in organized and unorganized industries which, it noted, showed that "many of the largest price increases have come in areas where workers are weakly organized or are not organized at all. A number of price declines have occurred in areas that are firmly unionized."

The Wall Street Journal terms inflation "a clear and present danger." But it warns that "it won't be diminished one whit by efforts to put the blame solely on the labor unions."

States Challenged to Press Housing Crisis Programs

Safer Limits On Radiation Risks Urged

Human life and health must have priority over the dollar cost of lowering the level of radiation exposure in uranium mines, spokesmen for organized labor stressed at a Labor Dept. hearing.

Testimony came from George Taylor, an AFL-CIO economist; Henry A. Adkinson, an Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers' representative, and George W. Haycock, Steelworkers' representative.

New Standard Backed

They strongly supported Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz's plan to limit exposure of miners to three-tenths of a "working level" (.3WL) of radiation a month, effective Jan. 1. A "working level" is a measure of radiation concentration.

The three witnesses recalled labor's past battle on behalf of radiation standards, including its call for the .3WL at hearings in June 1967 held by the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Acting under Walsh-Healey Act authority, Wirtz set a temporary one working level standard last year. He proposed the new lower level after statistics continued to show a death rate from lung cancer among uranium miners far exceeding that for the rest of the nation.

A report published in August of this year by the Federal Radiation Council showed that, in a group of 3,414 uranium miners studied from 1950 to 1967, there were 62 deaths from lung cancer, about six times the normal rate of death from that disease.

Employers Cite Costs

Nevertheless, several spokesmen for mine managements have testified in opposition to the new lower limit, as has the Atomic Energy Commission.

Some of the employers have contended that the added costs of venting equipment and fans for moving fresh air would put them out of business.

Taylor emphasized that the AFL-CIO backs the lower level because "we assert the value of each miner as a human being—his health, his safety, the continuity of his earning capacity to fulfill his family obligations, and to live his life free from the shadow of slow death."

There "has been no convincing data," he pointed out, to show that the secretary's standard "would ruin the industry economically, nor sub-

White Collar Wages Jump 4.9 to 7%

White collar workers in selected jobs in private industry won wage increases ranging from 4.9 to 7 percent from June 1967 to June 1968—the largest in eight years, the Labor Dept. reported.

Data gathered in the annual survey, by the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics, will be reflected in salaries for close to 2 million civil service workers, some postal employes and foreign service workers, along with medical personnel whose wages are linked to the classified service, the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research reported.

New Pay Raises

New pay rates will go into effect next July 1 under the 1967 pay act unless Congress vetoes full comparability with private industry rates.

Government statisticians use the BLS study to recommend salary increases to the President and Congress. The last raise ranged from 3 to 8 percent, but some in the higher grades got only half the expected amount.

BLS said preliminary information from its study shows that salary hikes for clerical workers averaged 5.1 percent over the year's period, compared with 4.6 percent the preceding year and an average annual increase rate of 3.1 percent from 1961 to 1967.

It listed the following average salary increases for professional, administrative and technical occupations:

Urban Group Details Plan For Action

The national Urban Coalition has given state governments a comprehensive plan for expanding their efforts to achieve a national goal of "decent homes and environments for all American families."

The coalition of leaders from labor, business, city government, church and civil rights groups also stressed that the plan demonstrates the great importance of "state action to help resolve the urban crisis."

The plan—and a challenge to the states for action—came in a coalition task force report, "An Agenda for Positive Action: State Programs in Housing and Community Development."

One of the co-chairmen of the task force on housing, reconstruction and investment was Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

Copies of the plan were sent to the 50 governors by John W. Gardner, coalition chairman, along with a letter urging them to use the plan in preparing legislative programs. Most state legislatures meet in 1969.

The report also was presented by Terry Sanford, former governor of North Carolina, to a Washington meeting of state urban affairs officials, sponsored by the National Governors' Conference.

Sanford is president of Urban America, Inc., a Washington-based nonprofit organization which works with the coalition in seeking solutions to urban problems.

In an introduction to its report, the task force said that state action must be a part of any national program to fulfill the housing needs and expectations of millions of American families.

States have "abilities and legal authority unavailable to the other

Huge Housing Co-op Opens in New York

New York—The world's largest cooperative housing development, the $293.8 million Co-op City, was dedicated here in the presence of many civic and community leaders and to the cheers of many of the families who will soon be living in the apartments.

The development, sprawling over a 300-acre site, is being sponsored by the United Housing Foundation, a non-profit foundation of unions, civic groups and housing cooperatives.

In a huge green and white striped tent, Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Clothing Workers and of the United Housing Foundation, presented keys to the children of the first of the 15,382 families who will eventually live in the apartments.

As the children accepted the keys, Potofsky said:

"It is most appropriate that these children be participating in this ceremony. Much of the program of the United Housing Foundation is motivated by a deep desire to see that these children have an opportunity to live in decent homes, in a wholesome environment."

Most of the money for the development ($261 million) is being financed by a 45-year mortgage from the state. The remaining money comes from the tenants who put down $450 a room—as equity, and pay monthly carrying charges which average $25 a room. Since the first developments were started in 1924, the ACWA and United Housing Foundation cooperatives have been completely integrated.

Further Safeguards Sought for Consumer

Consumer protection laws are good for business as well as for buyers, Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen told the Federal Trade Commission as he proposed a 12-point program to halt continuing abuses in the marketplace.

The FTC, which tries to halt unfair trade practices by business firms, is holding hearings on consumer problems and Cohen told the commission that "consumer well-being must be one of the important purposes of both public and private policy."

He said "sound and effective legislation to protect the consumer against quackery, gouging, misinformation, inferior quality and ineffective products is the soundest protection of good business and fair competition."

Cohen said some of the pressing need for consumer protection has been met by laws and programs inaugurated under the Johnson Administration. But more must be done, he stressed.

The HEW secretary proposed this program as a starter:

1. Authorize a federal publication to provide consumers with information developed through government-sponsored product research.

2. Provide aid to the states to improve their consumer service programs.

3. Initiate a study of the antiquated, inconsistent, and inequitable federal and state laws relating to sale practices, contracts and credit, and recommend action.

4. Expand the Bureau of Federal Credit Union programs to en-

Buying Power Declines As Wages Trail Prices

The purchasing power of workers across the nation dropped sharply in October as the cost of living shot up by six-tenths of 1 percent, the Labor Dept. reported.

The rise in prices—the largest one-month increase since September, 1962—sent the Consumer Price Index to 122.9 percent of the 1957-59 base period.

The index figure, 4.6 percent above last October, means that goods and services that cost $10 a decade ago now cost $12.29.

Gross average weekly earnings of production workers dipped 20 cents over the month to $110.67, as a 1-cent rise in hourly earnings was offset by a two-tenths of 1 hour reduction in the workweek.

For the worker with three dependents, weekly take-home declined 15 cents over the month to $97.44. For the worker with no dependents the drop was 14 cents to a weekly average of $88.51.

After adjustments for the monthly price increase, real spendable earnings were down 58 and 53 cents a week for the worker with three

PANELISTS FROM two countries prepare for a session on collective bargaining in the federal service during a three-day conference at Niagara Falls, Ont., sponsored jointly by the AFL-CIO and the Canadian Labor Congress. Ryan, Machinists' Government Employes Dept.; John-David Lyon, Canadian Air Traffic Control Association; Rudolph Oswald, AFL-CIO Dept. of Research; John A. Bargaining in Civil Service:

2-Nation Unions Hold Joint Seminar

Niagara Falls, Ont.—Leaders of federal employe unions in the United States and Canada—and government officials from the two countries—spent three days together in a first-of-its-kind conference sponsored by the AFL-CIO and the Canadian Labor Congress.

The 125 delegates represented more than 40 unions on both sides of the border plus councils and departments of the two federations.

A number of U.S. union participants thought the labor relations grass looked greener on the Canadian side—where legislation gives public employe unions the right to decide before bargaining begins whether to utilize binding arbitration or the right to strike if an impasse develops.

One of the big complaints of U.S. unions is that the nearly seven-year-old presidential executive order which governs union-management relations in the federal service provides no way out of an impasse. If management says no, union negotiators have no legal recourse.

But Canadian delegates had their problems, too—including what they considered as too limited a scope for bargaining.

U.S. participants, including top officers of the Metal Trades Dept., the Government Employes Council, postal, blue collar and white collar unions also stressed the need for an independent agency to deal with government labor-management issues. This "little NLRB," the union leaders generally agreed, should both supervise representation elections and procedures and should handle unfair labor practice complaints.

Top management officials of the two countries shared the speaker's podium at a conference banquet.

Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., of the U.S. Civil Service Commission stressed that public employe labor relations policy is no longer "a topic for academic pursuit or theoretical debate." It has become, he said "a major national problem."

Macy argued that unions must accept "essential differences between public service and private employment." He urged unions to use the results of negotiations, rather than the means of achieving a contract, as a guidepost in judging whether their efforts on behalf of their members are successful.

C. M. Drury, president of the Canadian Treasury Board, said that his country's experience has been that where unions have chosen the binding arbitration option to resolve impasses, "the pressures to find a mutually satisfactory settlement are just as strong as they are when the conciliation-strike route has been chosen."

Otto Pragan, AFL-CIO assistant education director, noted evidence of growing dissatisfaction with existing machinery on the part of federal workers.

He cited the fact that a number of unions representing government workers have removed "no strike" clauses from their constitutions and have called for full equality with the private sector in union rights and bargaining issues.

Pragan suggested the possibility of "coalition bargaining" by unions representing different groups of workers in a single department or agency. Since the scope of local bargaining is limited, he said, the unions might be able to join together in negotiating at the agency level.

Pres. B. A. Gritta of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. and other speakers urged the White House to make public the report and recommendations of a Presidential Review Committee which held extensive hearings last year on proposed changes in the executive order on union-management relations.

Rudolph Oswald of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research termed the grievance procedure the "most important" area open to union-management negotiations in the federal service. In public as in private employment, he stressed, grievance procedure is the key assurance to workers of fair treatment through adequate union representation.

Joint chairmen of the program were E. C. Hallbeck, chairman of the AFL-CIO Government Employes Council and president of the Postal Clerks and Gerard Rancourt, executive vice president of the CLC.

U.S. union leaders who served as chairmen of sessions or as major speakers included John A. McCart, director of the Government Employes Council; Gritta and Research Dir. Paul Hutchings of the Metal Trades Dept.; Pres. John Griner of the American Federation of Government Employes; William H. Ryan, government employes director of the Machinists; Pres. James H. Rademacher of the Letter Carriers and Oswald.

The conference summary was given by Lawrence Rogin, of American University's Labor Studies Center.

Right-to-Work Group Retreats in Oklahoma

Oklahoma City—Oklahoma's voters, who turned down a proposal to ban the union shop in a 1964 referendum, won't be faced with another vote on the issue for at least some time to come.

Oklahomans for the Right to Work, the state affiliate of the National Right to Work Committee, gave up its attempt to force the issue on the ballot on the basis of petitions collected last year.

Oklahoma's secretary of state, John Rogers, had ruled that the organization hadn't turned in enough valid petitions to qualify under state law. Signatures of 101,589 voters were required.

The "right-to-work" group fought his decision in the courts—and claimed that some 3,500 names they turned in hadn't been counted.

But they couldn't make the charge stick.

The state's Supreme Court appointed a referee to investigate the charge. He found no evidence that any uncounted petitions had ever been submitted.

The Supreme Court then confirmed his findings and took note of "obvious discrepancies" in the testimony given by "right-to-work" officials regarding the "missing" names.

That left the number of petitions on file at only a few hundred over the legal minimum—despite the use of paid solicitors and a high-powered advertising and publicity campaign during the three-month period allowed for collecting initiative petitions.

The "right-to-work" group could have contested the ruling that 17,000 of these signatures were invalid—fake names, duplications, names of persons not registered voters, names written in the same handwriting.

But it conceded defeat, declaring the Supreme Court ruling made it "impractical" to continue the fight.

The organization's executive vice president, Herb Johnson, said a new "right-to-work" petition will be circulated "as soon as we can get everything set up."

He said the state legislature should pass a new law to cover the problem of "missing" signatures.

stantially increase the cost of nuclear power."

Even so, Taylor continued, the federation would agree to an amendment to give all mines until July 1, 1969, to comply with the .3 WL standard, assuring the industry "it is not being dealt with in an arbitrary and capricious fashion."

Adkinson also stressed that the mines could afford to make the changes needed to lower radiation exposure.

"We don't have any knowledge of anyone being forced into bankruptcy in the last 10 years because of bringing down the working level from 10 to 1," he said, adding, "If this can be accomplished in this period of time, why can't the .3 WL . . . be met?"

Expressing "little sympathy" for the employers, he added, "If it is not economical to operate a safe place for the workers to work, then the employer should not be permitted to operate a uranium mine."

Haycock told the hearing that "good ventilation" is the key to reducing the radiation hazard in a uranium mine because it disposes of radon daughter concentrations in the atmosphere.

It is the radon daughter decay products that attach themselves to dust particles and are inhaled into the lungs and bronchial passages, he pointed out.

A majority of companies, he noted, are maintaining the 1.0 WL standards with little difficulty and some already keep exposure at the new level. "Of course, the ultimate goal is to attempt to completely eliminate any exposure at all," Haycock concluded.

Formaldehyde Gas Hazard to Workers

Exposure to formaldehyde gas used in permanent-press finishing and cutting plants is causing a high incidence of respiratory complaints, eye irritations and nervous disorders among workers, the Health, Education & Welfare Dept. reports.

The department has called for better ventilation standards in plants and extensive research to develop a compound to control the gas, which is emitted by resins used in making permanent-press clothing.

For fully experienced employes, the averages were $1,091 a month for engineers, $1,063 for chemists.

Among the clerical work levels in the survey, average salaries ranged from $306 monthly for File Clerks I to $606 for Secretaries IV. Averages for 11 of the clerical levels were above $420. Only four were below $380 a month, BLS said.

The survey originally was designed to compare federal with private pay. It also is used as a benchmark by business, unions, professional societies, trade associations, schools and local government agencies, the bureau said. A complete report will be issued early in 1969.

Arts Project Aide Named for Buffalo

Buffalo, N.Y.—Robert J. Jarnot, former president of Teachers Local 399 here, has been named coordinator of the AFL-CIO demonstration arts project for Buffalo. The city's board of education has granted him a leave of absence from a high school teaching post to take the assignment.

The appointment was made jointly by Buffalo AFL-CIO Pres. James L. Kane and Samuel F. Cariola, president of Hotel & Restaurant Employes Local 66, who are co-chairman of the project.

Reliability, Savings:

Electricity Pool Held Key to Power Needs

They still talk about the power failure that blacked out the Northeast in 1965. It was the biggest in history, affecting about 30 million people in an 80,000-square-mile area including New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island and parts of Maine, Vermont and Ontario. Another big power failure hit the interconnected utilities of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maryland last year affecting some 13 million users.

An obvious weakness in the interconnected power systems came to light in the failures. But even before these blackouts, the federal government had long been working to improve the system and to lower the unit cost of electricity.

As early as 1959, the AFL-CIO—in its policy statement on natural resources — called for "modernization of America's power supply system to meet an expected quadrupled demand for electric energy within the next quarter of a century."

Labor has continued to press for lower costs in electricity and improved dependability, George Taylor reports in an article in the November issue of American Federationist magazine.

A pioneer in the effort to interconnect power systems was Morris L. Cooke, who later became the first administrator of the rural electrification program under Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Cooke conceived the idea of "giant power" as a large-scale electrical development, tapping the cheapest sources of power and practicing every economy, Taylor points out.

The federal government in the days of the New Deal led the early efforts for power pools following the establishment of the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Rural Electrification Administration and the Bonneville Project.

But the concept of cheap power was not in favor during the Eisenhower Administration, comments Taylor, an economist with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

After the inauguration of Pres. Kennedy, the Federal Power Commission was reconstituted with the majority of members consumer-oriented.

The National Power Survey followed. It suggested the need for wider regional and interregional power networks, not only to insure reliability, but also to reduce costs.

The objectives of such connectives would intertie the four segments of electric power generation: privately-owned companies, government projects, public utilities and cooperative systems.

A conclusion of the study that followed the 1965 great power failure concluded that "coordinated planning and operation must not only be extended more broadly among the 347 investor-owned utilities which furnish nearly 80 percent of total electrical needs, but bridge as well the differences among the four segments" of the industry.

Despite wide efforts to bring about the power networks, there have been hang-ups, Taylor states.

The FPC said that "we are concerned that delays from many causes are adding years, not months to planning and construction schedules for generation and transmission."

The private power industry has bucked proposed legislation that would give the FPC regulatory authority over the creation of interregional power networks.

Industry opposition to the Electric Power Reliability Act is illustrated by a New Jersey power company executive.

In testimony before a Senate committee, Taylor quotes him as saying that "through coordinated planning, engineering and operation, member companies [of the Pennsylvania-New Jersey-Maryland (PJM) power pool] provide economical and efficient service to the public."

The PJM system failed the following June, Taylor points out.

However, there have been breakthroughs in the tedious efforts to link up the power systems.

"The PJM interconnected system," Taylor notes, "has reacted to its 1967 brownout by joining this year in a revised service-reliability compact to undertake more effective coordinated planning and operation in interconnected facilities."

One technological problem centered around link-up of interregional systems, Taylor reports.

A tentative step was taken in February 1967, to close the gap between the eastern and western ends of the country's interconnected systems which have synchronized 94 percent of the U.S. generating capacity from coast to coast, including parts of Canada.

"However, the crucial meeting points of the systems were incapable of withstanding severe shifts in power flows due to changes in demand," Taylor said, "and the ties were quietly broken a few months later."

"Nevertheless," Taylor concludes, "the technological advances of the giant power age have made it possible to avert major power blackouts, provide a national, mixed ownership power system, with the prospect of major savings for consumers."

STEWARDESSES relax between committee meetings at their convention in Miami Beach. They are among the 68 delegates from 25 air lines at the convention, fourth biennial meeting of the Steward & Stewardess Division of the Air Line Pilots.

Pilots' Convention Urges Action To Improve Plane, Airport Safety

Miami Beach—Steps to improve the safety of America's aircraft and airports were urged by the Air Line Pilots at the union's 20th biennial convention.

Some 270 delegates representing 27,000 members on 46 U.S. air lines approved recommendations on air safety, airport planning and development, improvement of anti-collision devices and other measures designed to expedite plane travel in the face of the current expansion of the air industry and the development of jumbo-size aircraft.

The convention urged the President of the United States and the Secretary of Transportation to initiate "immediate action" to prevent the armed hijacking of commercial planes, and offered to help develop a three-point prevention program.

By a vote of 18,901-12,125 the delegates adopted a motion supporting actions of ALPA Pres. Charles H. Ruby and rejecting a proposal for his recall. Ruby has served two years of the four-year term in office he won in 1966.

Capt. Robert L. Tully of Vienna, Va., Eastern Air Lines pilot, bested four opponents to win a first term as the union's 1st vice president. Capt. Seth M. Oberg, Jr., of Costa Mesa, Calif., ALPA secretary, won the new office of secretary-treasurer in a field of three candidates. Miss Betty Jo Stewart, United Air Lines stewardess, of Redondo Beach, Calif., won a second term as secretary-treasurer of ALPA's steward and stewardess division.

An ALPA committee recommended, and delegates approved, a three-phase program to reduce the capture of planes and their diversion to Cuba and other countries.

The convention urged the government, airline companies and the news media to cooperate in reducing the incentive, making hijacking more difficult and "adequately" punishing convicted offenders.

"Sensational and disproportionate coverage" by the press, television and radio "serves to encourage publicity seekers or to plant the idea in a deranged mind," the convention said. Its resolution called for installing weapons detection devices in airport terminals and improved security measures such as bulletproofing plane bulkheads and arming crews.

Since the last convention, officers reported, ALPA representatives have worked actively in airport planning and development, rule making, development and evaluation of new and existing aircraft, accident investigation and other air safety problems.

While long-range goals have not been ignored, an ALPA committee reported, pilots have worked to help solve problems of air traffic congestion, landing minimums, inadequate airport facilities, marginal certification procedures, and on pilot training programs.

Since November 1966, union members have investigated 46 major airline accidents and many minor ones. This produced prevention recommendations, many of which were "accepted and implemented," the delegates reported.

Ruby submitted an officers' report that as of September 1968, the number of employed ALPA members stood at 27,024—an increase of 41 percent over the 1966 membership and an all-time high figure.

While income in the last two years continued to stay ahead of outgo, Ruby said, the officers moved some home-office departments to Washington, D. C.; set up 14 branch and joint council offices, and will complete the moving program from Chicago to Washington by next summer.

Ruby said ALPA made staff increases to strengthen union programs in the fields of air traffic control, noise abatement, rescue and fire efforts, accident investigation courses for selected pilot investigators, and such problems as keeping a distance of 120 miles between planes on North Atlantic routes.

Union negotiators worked on 526 contract agreements in the two-year period ending Sept. 1, 1968.

The union's noise abatement committee reported that relief is in sight for the problem of noise abatement near major airports, but not before the mid-1970s. The collision avoidance systems committee said "we are on the brink of having some collision protection between large aircraft" and urged continued support for collision avoidance systems applicable to private as well as commercial aircraft.

The fourth convention of the Steward & Stewardess division of ALPA, which represents more than 7,000 flight attendants, ran concurrently with the pilots' meeting. Vice Pres. Marge Cooper presided at meetings of 68 delegates from 25 air lines.

Musicians Vote on Pact To End Network Strike

Network musicians voted on ratification of a new contract offer to end a strike against three broadcasting networks which began Oct. 30.

The proposal, from the NBC, CBS and ABC networks, was recommended by officers of the Musicians. Ballots were still being tallied by the American Arbitration Association as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

The 600 strikers were notified in telegrams from Musicians Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the new network offer and the ratification vote.

Negotiations had been stalemated when the U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service called the parties to resume talks Nov. 23. The new sessions resulted in a management offer which won the approval of union bargainers.

Network musicians voted twice by secret ballot before the strike to reject company proposals. Their union had been trying for months to win improvements in contracts that were due to expire July 31.

In a strike notice served on ABC, NBC and CBS, the union said the walkout was called because of the networks' refusal to improve wages and conditions adequately for station staff musicians and for "casual" musicians performing before TV or radio audiences.

For staff musicians the AFM sought an immediate wage hike of 25 percent this year and additional raises of 10 percent and 5 percent in the following two years. Also it was asking premium pay for work in excess of six hours a day; for work performed beyond an eight-hour spread, or between midnight and 7 a.m.

The union also asked for an increase in pension contributions, additional paid holidays; improved job security, more liberal vacation time, and a health, welfare and disability plan covering staff musicians.

Also sought for staff and casual musicians was a mandatory one-hour meal "break" after six hours of duty, and payment of double wages when a musician plays more than one instrument.

For casual musicians the union proposed "performance" wages at 150 percent of the non-air rate.

During the election campaign and on election night, the union withdrew pickets so as not to interfere with the campaign or the right of the public to election returns.

U.S. Maritime Efforts Termed Inadequate

The nation's maritime program enacted 32 years ago "has been too narrowly conceived and too narrowly interpreted to insure a strong, modern American-flag fleet," a congressman told labor leaders in Washington.

Rep. Joseph Karth (D-Minn.), speaking at a luncheon meeting sponsored by the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept., said the program "simply has not worked to give us adequate shipping capacity and adequate shipbuilding activity."

He predicted that bipartisan efforts in the 91st Congress will produce new maritime measures to "put more stress on private investment and, perhaps, a little less stress on government funds."

Karth, a member of the House Merchant Marine Committee, said that new legislation must be "fair and equitable" for all segments of the fleet.

The Monetary Crisis

THE LATEST international monetary crisis involving the French franc, the West German mark and the British pound has brought the predictable rash of stories and their superficial interpretations that leave most readers more puzzled than ever.

There is knowing allusion to "speculators" who buy and sell currencies, to import taxes and export rebates and the inevitable balance of payments.

Left untouched are the basic elements: shall the government and private banks of the world dictate a nation's economic policies and determine the level of unemployment, the standard of living, the extent of social welfare policies?

Tied in is the question of whether the free world's nations will continue to engage in a destructive form of economic nationalism or whether they will sit down finally and work out a flexible cooperative monetary system that will allow each nation to provide for its people the best possible standard of living.

A year ago the monetary crisis involved the United States and Great Britain and the price of gold on the world market. The speculators were successful then in forcing the devaluation of the British pound, inflicting heavy burdens on British workers and their families.

At that time the AFL-CIO declared that the best basic protection for the dollar "remains the strengthening of the national economy supplemented by a new international monetary mechanism that must become operative as soon as possible. Until the establishment of a new monetary mechanism, the cooperation of all industrialized nations is essential to keep short-term monetary speculation from developing into crises."

The federation noted also at that time that "neither foreign central bankers nor U.S. bankers should be allowed to dictate America's policies. Our economic and social policies must be geared to the requirements of the national interest and the American people, not to the policies of the bankers."

That holds true today for the French, West Germans and British. Central and private banks seeking to enhance their holdings of currencies; wealthy individuals who live off the speculation on the price of gold or one nation's or another's currency should not be in a position to determine the economic policies of those nations.

There is another factor, best expressed perhaps by an editorial in Business Week. The magazine said:

"The fact is that economic morality is not the exclusive possession of any nation. The common problem of all countries is an inability to handle domestic political and economic pressures and an unwillingness to go far enough toward genuine international cooperation."

The current uproar has led—for the moment, at least—to a reduction in the standard of living for the French and British peoples. They are paying the price of monetary stability exacted by the international financiers, the bankers and the speculators whose currency holdings are now presumably protected and safe.

It is now that a real try at meaningful international cooperation in the monetary world is necessary to help guide the free world's economic growth along intelligent and rational lines.

As 78 Die Underground:

Coal Mine Explosion Points Up Need for Better Safety Laws

WITH A NEW MINE explosion horror—78 men believed trapped and dead in a coal mine explosion at the Number 9 mine of the Consolidation Coal Co. near Farmington, W.Va., the haunting question of the adequacy of mine safety laws again has become of tragic importance.

There was hope that somehow or other a miracle would make it possible for rescue workers to enter the flaming mine and bring out the men trapped deep within the mine's shafts, but the hope was feeble as new explosions and flames added to the inferno that already existed. Only 21 of the 100 or so men on the shift were able to escape.

On the scene were United Mine Workers Pres. W. A. (Tony) Boyle, Safety Dir. Lewis Evans and Rex Lauck of the Mine Workers Journal, who is chairman of the Labor Conference of the National Safety Council. Deeply concerned, they were seeking to find out exactly what happened to cause the explosion and fire.

In Washington, Sec. of Interior Stewart L. Udall, said "we all haven't done enough," declaring that such mine disasters are "simply not acceptable" in a country with the technical know-how and wealth of the United States. He said that he had sent two top aides to make an on-the-spot investigation and that he would shortly open an emergency conference on coal mine safety.

Udall's concern was fully justified. As recently reported by the United Mine Workers Journal, the productivity of coal miners has been tripled in the past 20 years, but the safety record in the mines is nowhere nearly that good.

Reliable record-keeping on mining accidents has been in existence only since 1930, but during the years since then there have been 1.5 million injuries of which more than 40,000 caused permanent or partial disability.

OVER THE PAST 60 years there have been more than 87,850 coal miners killed in some of the world's worst mine disasters: 3,242 fatalities in 1907; 548 in 1952, the year the Coal Mine Safety Act was written into law against the stubborn opposition of the coal industry; 220 last year.

Actually, the drop in fatalities is not as good as it seems. The rate per million man-hours hasn't improved a great deal since 1952 and the rate per 1,000 miners has actually increased from 1.37 to 1.50. This year, too, has shown a worsening situation—182 miners killed during the first nine months of the year, or 9 more than during the same period last year.

The Coal Mine Safety Act was passed after the December 1951 explosion that killed 119 miners in West Frankfort, Ill., but its adequacy even then was questioned, notably by Pres. Harry S Truman who signed it.

"The legislation falls far short of the recommendations I submitted," he said regretfully.

But all efforts to tighten up the law have since proved futile. Pres. Johnson sought to do something about the situation last September when he proposed remedial legislation that got nowhere. Citing coal mine accidents at the time, the President said:

"They happen because our coal mine safety laws are inadequate, and because even existing laws are all too frequently ignored."

He noted that in 1967 more than 80 percent of the underground mines were "in violation of one or more federal safety standards."

Supporters of the tighter federal safety legislation in the mines are hopeful that the latest mine disaster will spur the 91st Congress to take long neglected action. (PAI)

TV Network Film Shows FDR, 'Blue Eagle' Era

The struggle for an industry-wide NRA code for steel and other episodes from the early days of Frances Perkins' career as Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt's secretary of labor highlight the annual television production of the George Meany Foundation.

Marian Seldes stars as Miss Perkins in the filmed drama, "The Vine and The Fig Tree," which premieres nationwide Sunday, Dec. 8, on the NBC-TV Network. The script for the half-hour play was written by Joseph Mindel.

"The Vine and The Fig Tree" will be incorporated into the "Eternal Light" series, presented weekly by NBC-TV and the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. The George Meany Foundation is an arm of the seminary's Herbert H. Lehman Institute.

Network broadcast time for this year's production is 12:30 p.m. EST. Local television schedules should be consulted for areas outside New York City.

Catholic Bishops Call for Action To Improve Lot of Farm Labor

The following is excerpted from a statement on farm workers issued by the Catholic bishops of the United States during their annual fall meeting in Washington.

THE PROBLEMS of farm workers have been receiving increased attention in this country in recent years. Greater awareness on the part of the general public has resulted in some progress such as is mirrored in the Migrant Health Act. However the workers' dramatic struggle to improve their lot has sometimes produced divisions and protracted conflict in the relations between the two parties.

We, the Catholic bishops of the United States, address ourselves to this problem with the high hope of assisting in a reconciliation between grower and worker.

For 30 years the disadvantaged field workers of this nation have stood by helplessly and listened to other Americans debating the farm labor problem. Burdened by low wage scales, mounting health problems, inadequate educational opportunities, substandard housing, and a lack of year-round employment, they have often been forced to live a life devoid of security, dignity, and reasonable comfort. For the past three years, however, many of them have been attempting to take their destiny into their own hands. This is a very healthy development.

Farm workers are now very painfully aware that not only do they have to struggle against economic, educational, and social inequities, but they have also been excluded from almost every piece of social legislation as well.

The conflict that began in California is now spreading throughout the nation and is clearly a national issue. Farm workers are demanding legislative protection for their natural right to organize for purposes of collective bargaining. They are demanding inclusion under a law which has protected the bargaining rights of other American workers for 33 years, namely the National Labor Relations Act.

Tragic as is the plight of farm workers, American growers and farmers also find themselves in a sea of difficulties. Mounting costs, foreign competition, water shortages, and many other problems are closing in upon them.

We are aware that the small grower is often the victim of circumstances beyond his control, and that his sincere willingness to pay higher wages meets with obstacles which he cannot overcome without a realistic coordination of all his strengths.

TO PROTECT himself, his interests of the farm workers, and the interests of our agriculture, we plead with him to unite with his fellow farmers and growers in associations proper to themselves.

At the same time, we wish to note that throughout this century, our state and federal governments have done much to assist growers and farmers with their difficulties. The same, unfortunately, cannot be said for the men working in the fields.

Catholic bishops in several of the states most deeply affected by the current crisis in the field of farm labor have already addressed themselves to the need for federal legislation to provide machinery for the peaceful settlement of disputes between growers and farm workers.

We urge the 91st Congress to provide the legislation necessary both to protect the rights of farm workers and to provide the peace and stability so essential to the well being and prosperity of the agricultural industry. Specifically we urge that Congress enact legislation:

1. To include farm workers under the National Labor Relations Act.

2. To include farm workers more effectively under a national minimum wage which will ensure them a decent standard of living.

3. To include farm workers under the national employment insurance program.

As a servant of justice, the Church must speak out on controversial issues such as these even with the knowledge that she might be misunderstood. Sensitive to the problems of both sides, the Church must encourage dialogue by helping to create an atmosphere of charity and justice.

It was in this spirit and for this purpose that the Second Vatican Council reaffirmed the traditional teaching of the Church with regard to the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively and, under certain conditions, to resort to the strike. These matters were treated by the council in its Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World, which in part reads:

"Among the basic rights of the human person must be counted the right of freely founding labor unions. These unions should be truly able to represent the workers and to contribute to the proper arrangement of economic life. Another such right is that of taking part freely in the activities of these unions without risk of reprisal. . . .

"When, however, socio-economic disputes arise, efforts must be made to come to a peaceful settlement. Recourse must always be had above all to sincere discussion between the parties. Even in present-day circumstances, however, the strike can still be a necessary, though ultimate, means for the defense of the workers' own rights, and the fulfillment of their just demands . . ."

In calling for the legal protection of the rights of farm workers, we, the bishops of the United States, do so in this same spirit and with sympathetic awareness of the problems faced by the growers and, more specifically, by family farmers. It is our prayerful hope that ways can be found at the earliest possible date "to resume negotiations" and to bring about a "reconciliation" between the parties to the current farm labor dispute. We pledge our united efforts to achieve this objective.

Marketplace Watchdog:

Wider Safeguards Stressed For Abuse-Ridden Consumers

PRES. JOHNSON'S long battle for consumers was praised by an AFL-CIO spokesman, who urged the new Administration to carry on the drive to stem new and continuing abuses in the marketplace.

Automobile and other repairs, installment buying and the fast-growing credit card industry were singled out by Leo Perlis, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Community Service Activities, as areas in need of tighter control and regulation.

Consumer-abuse is especially acute in "poverty-stricken" areas, Perlis charged. "The poor consumer often has no knowledge of how to select products" and "doesn't do the kind of comparative shopping that he should," he said. The problem is further complicated, he said, by the expense and difficulty of the "average citizen to redress his grievances through local law enforcement agencies."

Perlis appeared on Labor News Conference, an AFL-CIO produced public affairs interview broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35, EST, on the Mutual Radio Network.

The union spokesman hit hard at the growing practice of sending credit cards to people who have not requested them. "Even young boys and girls just out of high school are sometimes sent these unsolicited cards," he asserted. He said that while credit is a useful system, "the individual must have a degree of maturity" to use it properly. He also warned that easy credit poses special problems for "compulsive buyers"—people who "cannot withstand the temptation and compulsion to buy."

PERLIS URGED stepped-up consumer education and enforcement of statutes already in force. "Consumer education ought to begin in our school system—in the junior high schools, at least"—and should be available to the community at-large in adult education courses.

The AFL-CIO tries to reach "as many people as we can" in its nationwide consumer counseling program, he said, but "we cannot even reach all the union members. Public and community consumer counseling . . . should be a first approach," he added, "supplemented by effective laws and law enforcement."

IN THE ORNATE Executive Office Building, next to the White House, is an empty office which will soon be filled by a Pres.-Elect Richard Nixon appointee.

Until the new Administration takes over on Jan. 20 he will be merely an observer but he will be witnessing some of the first major domestic problems that Nixon will have to face.

The empty office is in the Bureau of the Budget. The bureau is now feverishly working on the new budget under which the Nixon Administration will have to live for his first 18 months in the White House.

Pres. Johnson will submit the fiscal 1970 budget to the Congress only a few days before he steps down. What Nixon does with this budget will have a massive impact on the economy, on jobs and the general health of the nation.

The budget is expected to be in the $200 billion figure. Just where this money is allocated, the extent of the funding of various federal programs will effect the entire nation.

The President, of course, will make the broad determinations in the budget. The specifics, however, are determined by the powerful Bureau of the Budget.

When Robert McNamara was named secretary of defense by Pres. Kennedy eight years ago he knew the power of the bureau. Before even venturing into the Pentagon he spent a week in the bureau and left with their three top professionals.

The director of the bureau is the only agency head in the government who does not require Senate confirmation—symbolic of his close relationship to the President.

The bureau has only 320 professionals but they are all key policy makers.

Over the years since it was first created in 1921 the Budget Bureau has become, with all its obscurity, one of the most commanding forces in the country today. Major government programs, sweeping in their effect in one area or another, can stand or fall depending on how they fit into the budget.

Under 1945 legislation, the bureau has the authority "to assemble, correlate, revise, reduce or increase the requests for appropriations of the several departments and establishments." It has similar authority over budgets of wholly owned government corporations.

IN ADDITION to being a budget agency, the bureau serves as the President's staff for the improvement of financial management and organization of the Executive Branch, of federal agencies, for the coordination and clearance of legislative proposals and executive orders.

Next to the President, himself, top government officials find themselves concerned more about what the Bureau of the Budget does than any other agency or person in the federal government.

The budget which the President presents to Congress in January will be, of course, of broad interest.

Nixon and his own budget director can alter the budget but it will have to be with the approval of the Congress.

When Pres. Truman left office he gave incoming Pres. Eisenhower a budget which included many items of social need that the new Administration promptly threw out.

Johnson has the alternative of offering a budget like this or one which will be trimmed to items which Nixon cannot easily cut such as interest on the national debt, defense, social security, railroad retirement, medicaid, etc. There will be also built-in increases in federal employe pay, welfare payments and so on.

Whatever is ultimately decided by Nixon on the budget will be determined largely by the state of the economy.

If he persists in an economy approach he will find that the Johnson Administration has already cut back in highway construction, public works projects and similar avenues.

To keep abreast of the making of the fiscal 1970 budget Nixon will shortly fill that empty chair in the Budget Bureau. The occupant may well be his next Budget Bureau director.

TIGHTER CONTROL and regulation of the fast-growing credit card industry was urged by AFL-CIO Community Services Dir. Leo Perlis, center, on Labor News Conference. Questioning him were William Eaton, left, of the Chicago Daily News and Alan Adams of Business Week magazine. The public affairs interview is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m. on Mutual Radio Network.

Utility Union Wins 82¢ Hike In New York

New York—Wage increases totaling 82.9 cents an hour will go to employes of the Consolidated Edison Co. of New York if 20,500 members of the Utility Workers vote to accept a new two-year contract.

Negotiators for the union's Local 1-2 reached agreement with management before the old agreement expired. Members were due to ballot Nov. 27 on acceptance or rejection of the improvements.

The proposed agreement calls for a 9 percent wage increase effective Dec. 1, 1968, an additional 6 percent on Jan. 1, 1970, and wage progression improvements of $3 to $5 a week every six months for workers not at the top of their wage maximum during the life of the contract.

Local 1-2 Business Manager James Beamish said the company offer includes improved health and welfare benefits for members and their families, pension improvements including voluntary retirement at age 60 for employes with 15 years of service, longer vacations, and other benefits.

The new pact was reached with the aid of Chairman Vincent McDonnell of the New York State Mediation Board. It was recommended for membership approval by unanimous vote of the Local 1-2 executive board.

The union said Con Ed workers earn an average of $3.58 an hour under the expiring contract.

CANADIAN LABOR support of the Farm Workers Organizing Committee boycott of California grapes is boosted at the Ontario Federation of Labor annual convention as Jessica Govea, left, a farm worker organizer from Delano, Calif., displays a bumper sticker with Iona Samis, vice president of the OFL. Union representatives have been pressing the boycott for months at major grape distribution centers in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver.

Capital Area Women Rally for Grape Strike

Shoppers at supermarkets in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area were greeted with "don't buy grapes" leaflets and petitions in a demonstration of support for California's grape workers and their union.

In the nation's capital to open the boycott drive was Delores Huerta, vice president and negotiator for the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee.

At a news conference and in an address to some 350 women at a boycott support luncheon, Mrs. Huerta termed the boycott campaign "a last resort to bring grape growers to the negotiating table."

Because farm workers are not protected by the National Labor Relations Act, she stressed, "we have no protection. All we want is a chance for union recognition. Boycotts are our only way of applying pressure to the grape grower."

Mrs. Huerta told reporters: "The farm worker will not have a Thanksgiving this year. The farm worker who puts food on the American table will not have enough food for his own family."

While the average American family spends $1,500 a year on food, she said, the average farm worker's family earns about $1,300 a year.

Co-chairmen of the Washington, D.C., boycott committee are J. C. Turner, head of the D.C. Central Labor Council and the Rev. Geno Baroni.

Clergymen of all denominations have joined with labor and consumer groups in support of the farm workers' right to union recognition.

The National Conference of Catholic Bishops has urged coverage of farm workers under federal labor law and rabbis from 113 California Jewish congregations joined in a nationwide appeal for support of the grape boycott.

Local committees in a number of cities were sponsoring Thanksgiving season boycott demonstrations.

Greeting Card Scheme Uncovered in Illinois

Springfield, Ill.—The state attorney's office here, upon complaint of a union official has secured a warrant for the arrest of a man alleged to be falsely representing himself as a "dealer" for a greeting card firm.

The subject of the "deceptive practices" warrant is one David E. Rollins, who gave his address as 5633 Kenmore Ave., Chicago, Ill. Officials said a check revealed no one by that name at the address.

Charles H. Midden, recording secretary of the Springfield AFL-CIO, said he and several other employes of the federation gave orders for Christmas cards to Rollins as a representative of American Artists Group, Inc.

Rollins took his orders on a form headed "American Artists Service Division" and used the approach that he was selling "an outstanding line of beautiful, 100 percent unionmade" cards.

However, an inquiry to American Artists Group, Inc., of New York, which does distribute union-made cards, revealed that Rollins was not its representative. "We have no representatives, as such, and no dealers." a company spokesman said.

American Artists also said it has received reports that Rollins, or other imposters, might be taking false orders under its name in New York, St. Louis, Oakland, Sacramento, and other cities.

The AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. has sounded a warning to persons, particularly labor officials, to be on the lookout for Rollins, or false representatives of the company.

It pointed out that in recent past years, reports and complaints about swindles in the sale of Christmas cards have cropped up around the nation.

The department's advice is to check out all salesmen. Legitimate sellers of union-made cards can be identified by either a local Union Label Council or an Allied Printing Trades Council, the department said.

Furniture Unit Seeks Support In Piano Strike

Holly, Mich.—A small local of Furniture Workers, on strike since Sept. 16 against the Grinnell Piano Co., turned to the labor movement and the public to help change management's mind about bargaining realistically.

The union needs help in conducting informational picketing at the company's 37 stores in Michigan and others in North Carolina, Kentucky and Rochester, N.Y., it said.

Piano Maker

The firm makes pianos under the Grinnell, Holly, Clayton and Leonard labels here and also sells other musical instruments and supplies at American Music Stores and outlets under varied names—all wholly owned by Grinnell.

UFWA organized the plant several years ago and won a first contract. When management later refused to agree to acceptable terms on wages, pensions, insurance and other issues, employes voted to strike. They have stayed on the picket line ever since, with backing from the Michigan AFL-CIO and the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. The strikers total about 50 in Local 434.

Consumers can help, too, by refusing to buy company products, UFWA Union Label Dir. James Griesi said.

Civil Service Union Wins GSA Election

Civil Service Local 1632 of the Painters has won exclusive bargaining rights for some 300 workers assigned to the General Services Administration paint shops in the Washington, D.C., metropolitan area.

The recognition agreement, announced by GSA, will be followed by contract negotiations.

Challenge to States:

Housing Plans Urged By Urban Coalition

levels of government" which must be applied "or the federal government, cities and the private sector will be seriously hampered in carrying out their roles," the task force warned.

The report cited the states' abilities to assist cities with urban progress and their flexibility to experiment with incentives tailored to local conditions.

"Moreover," it added, "states have the capacity to respond directly to urban problems as they arise, and to work with cities in supplementing federal and local programs."

The task force noted that its plan was based upon what it considers the best of a number of existing programs in such "pioneering states" as New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Illinois.

The report emphasized that its programs are "designed to spur swift, effective action'" and do not require any drawn-out study.

"The primary objective of the majority of these programs is to attract greater federal aid—to bring in several federal assistance dollars for each state assistance dollar," it concluded.

The programs for state action were "designed to meet problems which fall into eight categories":

Increasing housing supply, increasing housing choice, improving building codes, broadening relocation assistance, equalizing landlord-tenant relationships, enhancing community development, developing new communities and centralizing administration of housing and community projects.

Among recommended programs, are those which would:

- Provide loans, technical assistance, and grants to the developer of housing for low- and moderate-income families.
- Acquire land or substandard housing for resale to developers to produce standard housing for such families.
- Reimburse communities which reduce normal property taxes on housing for lower income families.
- Give financial assistance for the establishment of housing information centers to aid poor families find adequate, sanitary housing in urban areas.
- Revise landlord-tenant laws to provide greater incentives for the maintenance of property by both landlord and tenants.
- Pay a part of the city's share of federally-aided urban renewal and other community development projects.
- Establish a state-wide urban development corporation to develop land within metropolitan areas.
- Charter corporations to develop new towns.

In his letter, Gardner warned states that complex local problems of housing and community development "cannot be solved from Washington, and many of them cannot be solved by the city itself.

"The state governments are an immensely important ingredient in any rational plan of action."

The plan and its programs are no panacea—"for none exists," he said. "They are practical methods of putting the weight of the states behind our national goals."

Pointing out that they call for "no extended studies, new layers of bureaucracy or radical constitutional changes," he added: "Their thrust is to make maximum use of federal assistance and private investment."

Expense Cuts Trigger Shifts In Labor Dept.

Sec. of Labor Willard Wirtz has announced changes in the department's Manpower Administration to meet requirements of the 1968 tax increase law on which Congress also cut expenditures.

The Bureau of Employment Security and the Bureau of Work-Training programs are being abolished and their functions turned over to Manpower Administration.

The Unemployment Insurance program and the responsibilities of the Bureau of Employe Compensation will be administered by a separate unit in the Manpower Administration.

The Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training, whose responsibilities involve the private apprenticeship programs, will be taken out of the Manpower Administration and made part of the Management Services Administration.

The changes, Wirtz said, will eliminate duplications in responsibilities, promote efficiency and save about $4 million and 350 positions in fiscal 1969. There will be no cutback of employes, except by normal attrition, he added.

U.S. LABOR DELEGATES to a Congress of the Intl. Federation of Textile & Garment Workers in West Berlin discuss a point on the agenda. From left, Pres. William Pollock, Textile Workers Union of America; Vice Pres. Charles Zimmerman, Ladies' Garment Workers, and Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, Clothing Workers. Delegates from 29 countries representing more than 3 million textile and garment workers attended the Congress, Nov. 11-15.

Last Frontier on Earth:

Unclaimed Riches in the Sea Await Exploitation by Man

There is more than just water in the sea around us. Untapped sources of food, minerals, fuel and medicines lie in the vast oceans and their floors.

It is the last frontier on Earth, writes Herbert Brand in the November issue of the American Federationist. The only barriers to the exploration and exploitation of these resources are the 329 million cubic miles of salt water, he says.

Records dating to 400 B.C. tell of daredevils venturing below the sea using devices like inverted cups to trap air so they could breath during their dives.

But for 2,000 years scientists and philosophers fashioned their descriptions of the ocean depths in academic terms from information gleaned from vantage points on the surface, Brand notes.

"It was not until late in the 18th century that basic research in the field we call 'oceanography' really began," the article in the monthly AFL-CIO magazine states.

Valuable observations of surface phenomena were made on expeditions by Capt. James Cook in the 1770s and Sir John Ross 50 years later.

However, Commodore Matthew Fontaine Maury, an American naval career officer, earned the title of "father of oceanography" with his accurate and meticulous charting of ocean winds and currents.

The British during 1872-76 launched a great maritime expedition which gave science the first coordinated overall view of the physical and biological aspects of the ocean.

Then the Germans, in 1925, conducted the first deep sea study which generated international interest and many other nations followed with similar programs of their own.

And although the United States was responsible for launching the study of oceanography, it only had a limited marine science program until 1930, Brand points out.

It was the greater demand for minerals, oil and natural gas in the 1940s that led to man's increased interest to explore the sea.

During the past 20 years immense quantities of petroleum and natural gas liquids have been extracted from the U.S. continental shelves. Currently, about 15 percent of the world's total oil and gas production comes from offshore drilling, Brand reports.

Until now, U.S. offshore oil drilling has been limited to coasts of Texas, Louisiana and California. But geologists believe that large amounts of oil exist beneath the country's Atlantic slope which extends 300 miles out to sea.

The experts predict that there may be as much as 100 trillion gallons of petroleum beneath the U.S. continental shelves—more than all our reserves on land and enough to supply requirements for thousands of years, Brand says.

Many minerals also lie on the shelves. The Blake Plateau—off the southeastern Atlantic Coast—contains more than a billion tons of manganese oxide sediment as well as substantial amounts of copper, cobalt and nickel.

And the beaches of Alaska hold millions of ounces of gold in addition to vast deposits of tin and platinum, writes Brand, who has been on the staff of the Seafarers for nearly 25 years.

Scientific applications also have expanded the world seafood catch.

"The effort to increase the fishing catch is of primary importance the world over because it can bring an immediate increase in world food production," Brand stresses.

"Some scientists believe that the potential world yield of marine fish resources could be as high as 400 million metric tons annually—fully eight times the present world catch."

Brand, who is now administrator of the non-profit Transportation Institute, notes that of all the fishing nations, Japan experienced the greatest success in increasing the size of its catch. For example, its intake of oysters has grown from 600 pounds an acre to an astounding 32,000 pounds.

"In the field of medicine, many toxins used in treating human diseases are produced by deep sea animals and are found nowhere else," Brand says.

Brand feels that more government participation is needed to further expand the exploration of the sea. A step toward that direction was the passage of the Marine Resources & Engineering Development Act in 1966.

The law is designed to coordinate the various government operations in oceanography and marine programs and places the overall coordination under the President.

Upton Sinclair, 90, Dies; Fought for Social Justice

Bound Brook, N.J.—Upton Sinclair, who wrote 80 books, 20 plays and a movie in a lifetime of fighting for the underdog, died in a nursing home here at 90.

Dragon's Teeth, a book about the rise of Hitlerism, won the Pulitzer Prize in 1943. Other widely read works included The Jungle, an exposé of Chicago meat packing plants that led to passage of the Pure Food & Drug Act; the Brass Check, about newspaper publishing abuses; King Midas (1901); The Money Changers (1908); King Coal (1917); Jimmie Higgins (1919); Oil (1927); No Pasaran (1937), on the siege of Madrid.

Born in Baltimore, Md., Sinclair entered City College of New York in 1892, when he was 13, and began writing for Argosy magazine a year later. He assisted in a government investigation of the Chicago stockyards, founded the Helicon Home Colony at Englewood, N.J., in 1906, and in the same year, launched the Intercollegiate Socialist Society and was the Socialist candidate for Congress from New Jersey.

Later he founded a movement called End Poverty in California (EPIC); ran for the U.S. Senate and for governor in that state, always as a protest candidate; and helped found the California American Civil Liberties Union.

In 1962 Sinclair won a Page One award for literature from the New York Newspaper Guild.

He is survived by a son, David, physicist with the Atomic Energy Commission in New York.

In 1960 the AFL-CIO told the Upton Sinclair Story in a series of interviews by Harry W. Flannery broadcast over ABC radio stations. Called "As We See It," the series was put on tape and still is being distributed to schools and colleges by the AFL-CIO as a public service.

Flannery said in the first broadcast: "Upton Sinclair was one of the great forces for social justice in America."

His exposes of working conditions in American industry led, the interviews showed, to the growth of unions in meat packing, coal, auto and other industries.

Sinclair sent a copy of The Jungle to Pres. Theodore Roosevelt, who appointed a commission to investigate. The commissioners related their findings to Sinclair, who dictated the story to the New York Times before the report was made public. The report went all over the world, Sinclair recalled on As We See It.

BCTD Elects Pillard To Department Posts

Pres. Charles H. Pillard of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers was elected a vice president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. at its executive council meeting in Washington, Nov. 20. He succeeds his IBEW predecessor, Gordon M. Freeman. Pillard also was elected to replace Freeman on the department's administrative committee.

Illinois Consumer Group Seeks New Legislation

Chicago—A broad program of state legislation to further protect the consumer has been called for by the annual meeting and education conference of the Illinois Federation of Consumers.

Delegates from labor, civic and religious groups urged enactment of a consumer fraud law and measures to provide stiff regulations on credit transactions, a guaranteed annual wage and equitable rates on borrowing.

The conference's keynote speaker, Rep.-Elect Abner J. Mikva (D-Ill.) also sounded a theme of more consumer aid. Shoppers, he pointed out, are more aware of their problems than ever but need more tools to solve them.

Illinois Atty. Gen. William G. Clark, who ran against Sen. Everett Dirksen (R-Ill.) in the Nov. 5 election, was commended by the federation for his leadership in protecting and promoting consumer interests in the state.

Thomas Moore, executive secretary of the Illinois Association of Rural Electric Cooperatives, was elected federation president succeeding Jerry Voorhis, former congressman and cooperative housing leader. Voorhis, elected president at last year's founding meeting, was named president-emeritus. Sec.-Treas. Robert G. Gibson of the Illinois AFL-CIO was re-elected as a vice president.

Labor-Supported Co-op Dedicated in New York

declared that the state had a billion dollars available for building cooperatives and with a nod to Potofsky and Harold Ostroff, executive vice president of the UHF, said:

"We're ready to bank them again. They have paid us back in the past, and I know that we can depend on the foundation to pay back the money and the interest any time they take a loan."

Rockefeller described Co-op City as a "city within a city" and "a spectacular and heart-warming answer" to the housing problems which must be resolved in all of the nation's cities.

"I think we are on the threshhold of a new era in coping with our great urban problems," the governor said. "Today we dedicate a symbol of that new era."

UHF Praised

Robert Moses, chairman of the Triborough Bridge and Tunnel Authority, recalled that he had first suggested using the former amusement park for a housing development, and told the audience that only the UHF had the vision and the know-how to tackle such an enormous project.

He praised Potofsky and Ostroff for having "wrought this miracle when others chattered piously about salvation."

Although unable to attend because of other pressing duties, New York City AFL-CIO Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., sent a message commending the partnership of organized labor and the community through the foundation.

"The cooperative method of providing good moderate cost homes and building decent communities in our city benefits every man and woman seeking to make New York City a better place in which to live and work," he said.

Ostroff underlined the urgency of building more housing in his address when he asked:

"How many more reports do we need or, in fact, how many riots must we have to impress upon the administration that decent low and moderate cost housing in totally planned communities is the number one need of the city? How many children will die this winter in fires in slum tenements while the city planners continue to haggle over inconsequential things? How many housing developments have actually been started since we announced Co-op City in 1965.

"To my knowledge the answer is none."

When completed in early 1971, Co-op City will have 35 high-rise apartment buildings, varying somewhat in design and ranging from 24 to 33 stories. There will be 238 three-story town houses sprinkled among the buildings.

George Schechter, vice president of the project, said that the first families will begin moving in Dec. 10, with 414 apartments ready for occupancy at that time.

He said that 10,000 applications for apartments have been received and 6,000 families already have selected their homes. Many prospective tenants were among the 5,000 people who attended the dedication ceremony.

At the start, three bus lines will transport residents to the various subways but transportation is expected to be increased as families continue to move in. A pre-fabricated school building will be set up in February. A temporary supermarket soon will be expanded into a huge shopping plaza.

2nd Outreach Project Set for 80 in Detroit

Eighty Detroit youths, unemployed and from minority groups, will be tutored to help them enter the building trades under an extended Apprenticeship Outreach program, Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz announced.

The Trade Union Leadership Council of Detroit, which placed 91 Negro youths through an earlier "outreach" contract, has been awarded $84,131 to continue operations for another year, Wirtz said.

The latest contract calls for up to 10 weeks of training, using "cram course" techniques to prepare youths to pass specific examinations as they are announced in various crafts. The effort is actively backed by the Detroit Building & Construction Trades Council.

The first Detroit contract placed youths in training as asbestos workers, bricklayers carpenters, sheet metal workers, roofers, pipefitters, plumbers, iron workers, and several other trades.

Nixon Names Staff For 10 Task Forces

Miami—Pres.-elect Richard M. Nixon took the first steps toward developing the policies and programs of his new Administration with the appointment of ten special task forces made up of experts from government, private industry, and university faculties.

In overall charge of the groups is Prof. Paul W. McCracken, an economist at the University of Michigan and a member of Pres. Eisenhower's Council of Economic Advisers. None of the chairmen of the task forces is regarded as particularly anti-union or ultra-conservative.

Heading the first group dealing with manpower and labor-management relations is Dr. George Pratt Shultz, 48, chairman of the Center for Advanced Studies in Behavioral Sciences at Stanford University. Until he went to Stanford last year, Shultz was dean of the Graduate School of Business at the University of Chicago.

He has been an arbitrator in a number of union-management disputes and is considered a knowledgeable labor economist. In 1955-56, he was senior economist on the staff of Eisenhower's CEA.

Ronald Ziegler, press spokesman for Nixon, said the purpose of the task forces would be to "identify major issues in a number of areas, to point out where the new President will have the immediate power to act, and to make recommendations for action."

They are due to submit reports to Nixon during the first two weeks of December.

The other committees and their chairmen include:

Tax legislation—Norman Ture, head of the economics department of Planning Research Corp., Arlington, Va.

Intergovernmental fiscal relations—Richard Nathan, research associate in the governmental studies division of the Brookings Institution.

Public welfare—Richard Nathan.

Fiscal policy—Herbert Stein, senior fellow and head of economic studies at the Brookings Institution.

Federal lending and loan guarantee programs—James J. O'Leary, chairman of the board of Lionel D. Edie & Co., New York.

The environment—Russell Train, president of the Conservation Foundation, Washington.

Organizing of the Executive Branch—Frank Lindsay, president of Itek Corp., Bedford, Mass.

Transportation—Prof. Charles Miller of Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Housing and urban renewal—James Gaynor, commissioner of the New York State Division of Housing & Community Renewal.

Nixon also announced two other key appointments as he continued to draw together his personal staff. Herbert G. Klein, who served the President-elect as a key campaign aide, was named director of communications for the Executive Branch "to coordinate information activities of every department of government." Robert F. Ellsworth, a former congressman from Kansas who was Nixon's national political director in the campaign, was named an assistant to the President in the top level of the White House staff.

MEDAL OF HONOR, nation's highest award for heroism, is presented by Pres. Johnson to Gary G. Wetzel, Oak Creek, Wis., a member of Technical Engineers Local 92. Bleeding profusely after his left arm was torn off by exploding rockets, Wetzel kept firing a machine gun aboard his grounded helicopter near Ap Dong An, South Viet Nam, until he alone knocked out enemy guns that held up U.S. troops. Although he twice lost consciousness, Wetzel also aided his wounded crew chief.

3 PR Staffers Shift to New Posts in Labor

Three labor public relations staffers have moved to new positions within the trade union movement. Kenneth Fiester, Samuel F. Marshall and Patrick J. Ziska—all veteran newsmen—figure in the shifts.

Fiester, for nine years a member of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Public Relations, has been named public relations director of the federation's Industrial Union Dept. He succeeds Henry Santiestevan, now a member of the UAW Washington staff.

Marshall left the AFL-CIO Dept. of Public Relations to join the State, County & Municipal Employes as director of publications and public relations. He replaces John G. Blair, now editor-in-chief of the American Forest Institute.

Ziska joined the federation's public relations staff after leaving the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen where he was public relations director.

Fiester had been an editor and publicity director with the Textile Workers Union of America for a decade before joining the Auto Workers as publications director in 1957. He came to Washington in 1959 to handle public relations for the AFL-CIO Joint Minimum Wage Committee. He also has been secretary-treasurer of the Intl. Labor Press Association since 1962 and previously served as a vice president.

Marshall had been editor of the Communications Workers' CWA News for three years before coming to the AFL-CIO in 1967.

Ziska is a former president of Newspaper Guild Local 17 in Rochester and was on the executive board of the Cleveland local.

Further Safeguards Sought for Consumer

able them to work with more low-income groups to encourage savings and provide credit at reasonable rates. This phase might be expanded to encourage establishing other co-operatives, such as book store and housing co-ops, to help college students and their parents meet the rising cost of education.

5. Provide for the coverage of certain prescription drugs under the medicare program.

6. Authorize payments for drugs under medicare and medicaid on the basis of reasonable price range, the cost not to exceed the amount at which the drug is generally available for sale to drug stores by its established name or, if lower, by proprietary designation.

7. Authorize the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare to publish an up-to-date United States drug compendium by generic names.

8. Require all prescription drugs in tablet or capsule form to bear an identification of maker and drug's identity.

9. Provide for pre-market clearance of cosmetics, as is now done in the case of drugs, to "protect American women from the many hazards to their health and beauty."

10. Require pre-market clearance of medical devices and establish standards sufficient to assure safety and efficiency.

11. Extend coverage of the Hazardous Substances Act to toys that may be injurious to children because of a mechanical hazard.

12. Require firms which produce food and color additives, pesticides, cosmetics and over-the-counter drugs to submit records and reports of product performances.

Cohen noted that the 1960's have been called the consumer era. He added, "I believe that we can soar to ever greater heights in the decade ahead."

The commission also heard a New York State official call for stronger laws to curb "a small but hardy group of merchants who make their living by preying on the consumer."

Barnett Levy, an assistant state attorney general, said the chief victims are usually "the poorest members of the community" because they are less sophisticated in detecting fraudulent sales practices such as "bait and misleading advertisements, half-truths, evasive promises and the like."

Buying Power Declines As Wages Trail Prices

dependents and no dependents, respectively.

The drop in real spendable earnings from September averaged about 0.7 percent and prevailed through all major industries, with the decline ranging from 0.1 percent in finance, insurance and real estate to 4.9 percent in mining.

Compared to a year ago, real spendable earnings were virtually unchanged for single workers but were 1.2 percent higher for workers with three dependents.

Chief contributors to the big jump in the price index were an increase in food costs, a 4.5 percent rise in the cost of new automobiles, rising apparel prices and a continuing of the steady upward trend in consumer services.

Prices of food in grocery stores went up 0.3 percent, contrary to an expected decline in October.

Higher price tags on women's winter coats and dresses and men's suits accounted for the rise in apparel prices, which averaged 6.5 percent above a year ago.

In the area of services, rents, insurance and housekeeping costs were up, while medical care services soared eight-tenths of 1 percent above September. Dentist fees and hospital charges continued a relentless advance.

Arnold Chase, assistant commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said the overall rise in living costs in 1968 "could very well be around 4.5 percent for the year," the highest since 1951.

The increase for the first 10 months in 1968 amounts to 4.0 percent compared to 3.1 percent for all of 1967.

The Wholesale Price Index in October was 109.1 percent of the 1957-59 average, about 2.8 percent higher than last October. Preliminary data points to a rise in the index in November. An increase in this index often precedes a rise in consumer prices.

About 460,000 workers will receive cost-of-living pay boosts as a result of the rise in the October Consumer Price Index. For 385,000 electrical workers the increase will be 1.75 percent, based on a change in index over the year. Other workers will receive increases ranging from 1 to 8 cents an hour.

Outlawed 'Yellow-Dog' Contract Revived by Tennessee Employer

As any student of labor history can tell you, the yellow-dog contract went out with the flappers.

A Labor Dept. publication describes it as "an oral or written agreement whereby an employe pledges not to become nor to remain a union member, under penalty of discharge. Banned in 1932 by the Norris-LaGuardia Act."

It is also, of course, an unfair labor practice under the National Labor Relations Act.

But an Oak Ridge, Tenn., employer—Gibson Products Co., which operates a large general store—apparently hasn't caught up with the law.

The East Tennessee Labor News obtained a copy of a current job application used by the company and there, just above the applicant's signature, was an honest - to - goodness, collector's item yellow-dog clause.

To emphasize the point, it is preceded by a boldface "Warning—Read carefully and clearly understand the agreement you are signing below."

The key clause reads as follows:

"I believe in the policy of individual relationship with employer-employe and, if for any reason during my employment with the company, I should ever change my belief in this regard and desire third party representation with the company, I will immediately notify management of this change in my belief and this notification of my change of belief or my election of third party representation shall automatically become my resignation from the company, effective on the date of my election of third party representation."

In other words, signing a union authorization card is the same thing as signing a letter of resignation from the company.

Not only does it violate federal labor laws but it even breaks Tennessee's so-called "right-to-work" law. Although written to outlaw the union shop, the Tennessee law states specifically that it is unlawful for a firm to deny employment because of membership—as well as non-membership—in a union.

If you want a job with Gibson Products, you also have to declare your church preference—an odd question since the Civil Rights Act prohibits discrimination because of religion as well as race, national origin and sex.

And finally, you have to sign a statement agreeing that refusal to submit to a lie detector test at any time during your employment "will result in automatic discharge."

If that isn't enough, the employment agreement also requires the worker to agree that he can be fired at any time "without previous notice."

Human Rights Gains Tied To Full Employment Goal

Labor Hails New Rules On Welfare

The AFL-CIO gave its "enthusiastic endorsement" to public welfare reforms which the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare predicts will bring greater efficiency, economy and dignity to programs to help the needy.

Federation Pres. George Meany wrote HEW Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen that the new regulations his department has proposed would make "more humane a system which has in many ways been geared to punishing the most disadvantaged in our country."

The chief change would be to require states to rely on first-hand information obtained from applicants in determining whether they are eligible for public assistance.

There would be controls and checks to guard against abuse. But the intent is to end the "snooping" type of home investigation which has placed a stigma on the needy and helpless.

"Besides offering a measure of dignity and self-respect to those who must turn to public assistance," Meany stressed, "the new procedures will release many professional people to do what they have been trained to do—that is, to offer rehabilitation and other social services to people who badly need them."

The other change endorsed by Meany as in line with a policy resolution adopted by the last AFL-CIO convention would make legal help available to welfare recipients who believe their payments have been unjustly reduced or terminated. Payments would continue while the claim was being adjudicated.

Cohen announced the proposed changes Nov. 20, with a 30-day period for comments by interested parties. If finally approved, the new procedures would be binding on states after July 1, 1969. The bulk of the money for the programs—to help needy children, the aged and the disabled—comes from the federal government.

In his announcement, Cohen noted that several states already use the simplified declaration system for determining eligibility and spot checks have found that abuses are no higher—and often lower—than in states which rely on home investigations.

Caseworkers now spend 70 to 95 percent of their time determining who is eligible for assistance payments, the HEW noted. The time, the announcement suggested, could better be spent "helping peo-

Meany Asks Drive To Assure Jobs

By David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has called for immediate, practical programs to achieve long-established goals of full employment and just working conditions.

Specifically, Meany said that the government must become the employer of last resort for those who cannot find jobs in the labor market and that all workers—including farm workers—must have the right to form unions and engage in collective bargaining.

Meany denounced as "absolutely revolting" the theory of some conservative economists that "a little unemployment" is necessary to curb inflation.

The AFL-CIO president outlined labor's views at a conference called to mark the 20th anniversary of the adoption by the United Nations of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

As a member of the United States commission for the anniversary year, Meany had been scheduled to preside at a panel on employment and human rights. The panel's theme was the section of the UN declaration which reads:

"Everyone has the right to work, to free choice of employment, to just and favorable conditions of work and to protection against unemployment."

The funeral of AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison was being held in Cincinnati the day of the program so Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, the president of the Communications Workers, read Meany's remarks and chaired the panel in his stead.

Panelists included Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver;

Kayser-Roth Strike Ends In Contract

Dayton, Tenn.—A seven-month strike by 550 Kayser-Roth hosiery workers for their first Textile Workers Union of America contract ended successfully with the negotiation of a one-year agreement providing wage gains and other benefits for the strikers.

Ratification of the contract at a local union meeting here Dec. 2 also marked the conclusion of the widely supported AFL-CIO boycott of Kayser-Roth hose and other products in the United States and Canada. The boycott effort was credited as a major factor in the settlement.

Adolph C. Benet, hosiery division director of TWUA, said that besides a wage increase of 10 cents an hour, the settlement includes an assortment of other benefits.

Among them are paid vacations of one week or two, based on length of service; four hours' call-in pay, double time for Sunday work, three paid holidays, jury duty

Dramatic Vote Switch:

Surge by Humphrey Laid to Labor Effort

A massive effort by the trade union movement brought a dramatic switch of votes to Vice Pres. Humphrey and wiped out most of Richard Nixon's lead in the presidential campaign, two leading pollsters agreed.

Mervin D. Fields, head of the highly-regarded California poll, told an Industrial Relations Research Association meeting in Los Angeles that labor's effort took 5 million votes away from third party candidate George Wallace and wiped out more than 90 percent of Nixon's early-October lead.

A few days later, a Gallup Poll analysis of the election declared that it was the swing of union members to Humphrey that almost put him over the top on Nov. 5.

Gallup credited the vigorous effort of union leadership for the fact that support for the Humphrey-Muskie ticket increased 15 percent among union members between early October and the election.

Gallup estimated that 56 percent of union members voted for Humphrey, 29 percent for Nixon and 15 percent for Wallace. Independent estimates were that outside the South and the border states, the trade union vote ran between 65 and 70 percent for Humphrey.

Nixon received a smaller percentage of the union vote than he did in his 1960 presidential campaign but the Wallace inroads dropped the Democratic share of the vote to about the level of the 1956 election, when Eisenhower swept to a second term.

Television networks which analyzed the votes in key precincts, however, found that the dropoff in Democratic votes was less in city areas where labor is strong than in other sections of the country.

Field said the prodigious effort by unions for the Humphrey-Muskie ticket almost made up for the erosion caused by Wallace inroads in the South, defections from the left and weaknesses in local and state Democratic party organizations.

Auto Repair Pricing Condemned as Unfair

A journeyman auto mechanic told congressional investigators that automobile owners are the victims of the same price rate system on repairs that has plagued the garage mechanic since manufacturers delivered the first horseless carriage to the first dealer.

The mechanic, William W. Winpisinger, is a vice president of the Machinists. Nearly 120,000 of the IAM's 1 million members are auto repair mechanics working for auto dealers, garages, and truck repair shops.

Winpisinger told the Senate Antitrust subcommittee headed by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) that:

"The conditions and circumstances that frustrate the workforce are the same conditions and circumstances that prevent the average American car owner from receiving adequate, safe, economical and competitive service.

"Although we are committed to the principle of a fair day's pay for a fair day's work, our 1 million members are consumers as well as wage earners. So we are equally committed to the proposition that when a consumer pays for repairs and service on his car he has a right to receive proper repairs at a fair price."

The union officer laid the blame for high repair costs on the auto industry's system of flat rates established annually in manufacturers' manuals.

These flat-rate manuals establish recommended working time for which the customer is to be charged for specified repairs.

Winpisinger pointed out that whether the work actually takes

AFL-CIO Vice President George Harrison Dies

Cincinnati—AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison, who served the labor movement and the nation all his adult life, died here after a long illness at the age of 73.

He was president-emeritus of the Railway & Airline Clerks, the union he joined in 1917 and served as a national officer for 43 years—35 of them as president.

Harrison, who went to work at the age of 12, was a self-educated man who became an adviser to Presidents, represented his country in the United Nations, helped negotiate the merger of the AFL and the CIO, and filled key labor assignments at home and abroad.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a telegram of condolence to Mrs. Harrison:

"Few men in the history of the American labor movement have contributed as much over as great a span of years to his fellow workers as did George Harrison. His union, the entire labor movement and all of America have benefitted through his leadership, understanding and humanitarianism. He will be sorely missed . . ."

Harrison, one of nine children, was brought up in St. Louis and joined the Railway Clerks in 1917 when he was working as an evaluation clerk with the Missouri Pacific Railroad.

A year later he was local chairman and in 1919 was elected a general chairman. In 1922, Harrison was elected a vice president of the BRC and in 1928 he was elected president of the brotherhood.

A mere listing of his activities and honors would run for pages.

Hospital Lauds Schnitzler for Contributions

New York—More than 600 persons from labor, business and finance attended a dinner here in tribute to AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler for his assistance to a New Jersey hospital.

Honoring Schnitzler was Deborah Hospital of Browns Mill, N.J., which produced the nation's first open-heart surgery and is now a leader in research into heart and lung disorders.

Clara Frank, the hospital's assistant director presented a plaque to Schnitzler in recognition of his "efforts for humanitarian causes" and in "deep appreciation" for his contributions on behalf of Deborah.

She pointed out that the hospital has long depended on grants from private organizations and charities, and that Schnitzler has aided its fund-raising efforts some 35 years.

Schnitzler recalled that his interest in the hospital goes back many years, but stressed that he was accepting the award not for himself but for the entire labor movement, since many unions have joined in helping the hospital.

Pres. Johnson, Vice Pres. Humphrey, Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Wilbur J. Cohen and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany all sent messages praising Schnitzler's contributions.

Meany pointed out that Schnitzler's "devoted service to the common cause of free trade unionism and humanitarian undertakings as typified by the work of Deborah Hospital merit the recognition and honor that you have accorded him."

DEBORAH HOSPITAL of Browns Mill, N.J., honored AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler at a dinner in New York for his aid in raising funds for the institution over many years. From left, Pres. Utility Local Rejects Pact, Strikes Con-Ed

New York—Utility Workers Local 1-2 picketed around the clock at Consolidated Edison Co. locations here while union and management negotiators tried to reach an agreement that would satisfy 20.000 employes.

The strike—the first in 42 years for Local 1-2—started when members voted by a margin of 9,000 to 6,000 to reject a company offer that union bargainers had recommended. Also striking are some 500 members of Local 3, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, who refused a company proposal.

While union members walked the picket lines, a force of 4,000 supervisors manned the big electric firm's 12 generator stations and performed emergency repairs.

Negotiations to settle the dispute were resumed at the request of Chairman Vincent D. McDonnell of the State Mediation Board. No progress toward a new agreement was reported after the first day of the renewed talks.

Major issues in the Local 1-2 strike are pension benefits, premium pay for holiday work, and vacation improvements.

Morse Asks Oregon For Vote Recount

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) has formally requested a recount in the Oregon senatorial race.

The initial tally showed a 3.446-vote victory for Republican Robert Packwood out of more than 813,000 ballots cast. Morse, who was running for a fifth term, must pay the cost of a recount if the result is unchanged. If he should emerge the winner, the state will pay the entire cost.

High Auto Repair Costs Laid to Pricing System

more time or less is "immaterial." He explained that the customer is charged not for the time spent repairing his car and the mechanic is paid not for the number of hours he actually works, but according to the time set in the manufacturer's book.

The IAM vice president cited many built-in drawbacks of the flat-rate system.

For one example:

"The flat-rate system does not allow the mechanic any time to do any checking, diagnosing or trouble-shooting on the customer's behalf. When a car owner comes into a dealer's shop he is sold repairs by a so-called service salesman—who often doesn't even look under the hood to find out what actually is needed. At best the service salesmen only guesses at what needs to be done.

"At worst, the service salesman may be a 'con artist' padding the sales sheet with unnecessary repairs to improve his salary which is usually based on a percentage of the gross business. In either case, the mechanic is paid only for the time the manufacturer has allowed for the work specified on the ticket. If he takes time to check further he does it on his own, without pay. He may even get into trouble."

For another example:

"When a mechanic works on a flat rate he has no incentive to use any imagination or ingenuity. If he does figure out a better and faster way to perform an operation, the manufacturer when he hears about it will then reduce the time allotted for the job.

"In other industries, collective bargaining translates increased productivity into higher hourly wages. In auto repair the mechanic simply gets less for the same result."

The union officer emphasized that piecework, based on the flat-rate system, was not labor's idea. It was introduced by the auto manufacturers and the mechanics have been stuck with it.

In many areas the mechanics are not well enough organized to insist upon an adequate hourly wage rate. In these areas mechanics generally demand the right to supplement their incomes with piecework.

"As a democratic organization we cannot ignore their wishes," Winpisinger explained, "although we know that the evils inherent in piecework will eventually emerge."

Winpisinger listed five steps the union takes through collective bargaining to minimize the abuses of the flat rate system:

- Guaranteeing the mechanic an hourly or weekly minimum assuring him of at least a basic wage.
- Providing every mechanic with a copy of his own performance and production records on which piecework earnings are based.
- Giving the mechanics the right to sit down with management to discuss obviously unfair time allowances.
- Insisting that identical work is paid for at identical rates whether it be for cars under warranty, on used cars or for the general public.
- Distributing all available piecework fairly among the qualified mechanics.

Winpisinger pointed out that the piecerate system has obstructed the normal progression of the auto mechanic's hourly wage rates. The result has been to drive skilled mechanics into more lucrative fields. At the same time, he added, promising young men are unable to find apprenticeship opportunities.

Stayout Ends:

Unit Votes Pledged At N.Y. Hospitals

New York—Staffs of four state hospitals won a victory and ended a stayout when the state Public Employment Relations Board ruled that they could pick their own bargaining agent.

The workers, members of four locals of the State, County & Municipal Employes, had left work to demonstrate for union recognition. They returned when the state board ruled that they and more than 100,000 other state employes, formerly represented by the Civil Service Employes Association, should be separated into five bargaining units for election purposes.

Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) then directed that all negotiations should stop until each group of employes picks a bargaining agent. At the same time he directed that hearings be held on charges against all state employes accused of striking in violation of the Taylor Act forbidding strikes by public employes.

Two hospital union leaders were freed from jail pending appeal of their contempt-of-court sentences for helping lead the walkouts, but their union pledged a continuing fight against the Taylor law. So did other unions whose members have been charged with violating it.

Released from Civil Jail after serving six hours were Mrs. Lillian Roberts, directors of organization for mental hygiene locals affiliated with SCME District Council 50, and Pres. Robert Fuller of SCME Local 69, representing workers at Creedmoor State Hospital, Queens.

Mrs. Roberts had been fined $250 and ordered to serve 30 days in jail on a charge of disobeying an order forbidding strikes at four state hospitals. Fuller was fined $150 and sentenced to 20 days. Both were due in court Dec. 5 when their appeal was to be argued.

Members of four SCME locals walked out at Creedmoor and three other hospitals in Manhattan, the Bronx and Buffalo in November.

Mrs. Roberts issued a statement saying she was "not at all happy at being sent to jail because of my role as a union representative" but "if that's part of what it takes to win this fight against . . . an unfair law, it is well worth it."

A year ago, the statement said, the governor "under the guise of adhering to the principles of the Taylor Law unilaterally selected the Civil Service Employes Association as sole bargaining agent for the state's public employes."

The CSEA never has functioned as a bargaining agent for state workers and its main purpose was to administer a low-cost insurance plan for employes, Mrs. Roberts said.

In response to protests, Rockefeller "promised that after one year, an election would be held so workers could vote for the union of their choice." When the year came to an end without any move toward an election, the hospital workers left work in protest, the union statement charged.

The governor told newsmen he had no choice under the Taylor Act except to file charges against all who went on strike.

Four New Units Added by Teachers

Three new election victories for the Teachers and one vote to affiliate brought to 10,332 the number of newly represented members since Jan. 1, AFT Pres. David Selden announced.

The union announced it will issue a new charter to the staff of Middlesex, N.J., County College, which voted to leave an unaffiliated organization and join the AFT.

The AFT organizing department reported recent votes for the union in Woodbridge, N.J., 1,093 teachers; Minot, N.D., 432, and Ontario, Ohio, 109. Since the first of the year, the union has chartered 52 new locals in 17 states.

George M. Harrison Dead at 73; Served Labor, Nation, Presidents

He helped shape the nation's first Social Security Act in 1935 as a labor member of Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt's Citizens Advisory Council.

The year before, he had been elected a vice president of the AFL and had advanced to second vice president at the time of merger.

At the time of his death, Harrison was chairman of the AFL-CIO's Intl. Affairs and Ethical Practices committees. For the past six conventions of the AFL-CIO, he served in the major role of chairman of the Resolutions Committee.

He helped draft the 1937 Railroad Retirement Act, served as chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association from 1935-1940.

During the World War II era, his major posts included service on the National Defense Mediation Board and the President's Joint Railroad Labor-Management Committee on the War Effort.

He became a member of the executive committee of the President's Management-Labor Committee in 1945 and during the Korean conflict was assistant to the directors of the U.S. Economic Stabilization Administration and the Office of Defense Mobilization.

Pres. Eisenhower named him a member of the U.S. delegation to the United Nations; Pres. Kennedy appointed him to the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy.

Harrison served as a top-level delegate to Intl. Labor Organization conferences dating back to 1936. He was a member of the board of directors of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, the Afro-Asian Institute in Israel, the Afro-American Labor Center. He served on the executive boards of the Intl. Transport Workers Federation and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

GEORGE M. HARRISON

Other responsibilities included service on the Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial Foundation and as a trustee of both the Harry S. Truman and John F. Kennedy Library foundations.

During all this period, he helped lead his union at the bargaining table and in organizing efforts that tripled its membership.

In 1963, Harrison stepped down from the presidency of the Railway Clerks to take the title of chief executive. In 1965, he became president-emeritus.

BRC Pres. C. L. Dennis described Harrison as "a devoted union man" and "one of the great figures of the American trade union movement." His friends and colleagues, Dennis said, will "miss him greatly."

Funeral services were held Dec. 4 in Cincinnati, and AFL-CIO Pres. Meany led a delegation of trade union leaders to pay final respects. Burial was in Rest Haven Cemetery.

Survivors include Mrs. Harrison, three daughters, three brothers, nine grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Network Musicians Approve New Pact

New York—Network musicians voted by a narrow margin to accept contract offers from the American, Columbia and National Broadcasting companies and to end a four-week stint on the picket lines in Los Angeles, Miami and New York.

The vote was 270-263 to return to work. Two-year contracts, retroactive to Aug. 1, will give higher wages and some measure of job protection to 600 members of the Musicians. The contracts provide:

- Raises of $23 a week for staff musicians to bring their weekly base to $280.70; overtime at $14.90 an hour, and continuation of 5 percent pension payments and residual fees.
- Improved job security provisions for staff musicians, with severance pay on discharge, for reasons other than misconduct, at the rate of a week's pay for each year of continous service. Severance will be paid in addition to eight weeks' notice of termination.
- Wage increases of 10 percent in both rehearsal and air time for casual musicians. Effective Aug. 1, 1968, rates rise from $12.20 to $13.42 per hour for rehearsals; from $40 to $44 for an hour show; from $31 to $34.10 or performing on a half-hour show; from $10 to $11 for a 15-minute program, plus continued employer contributions of 5 percent for pensions and residual fees.

The security provisions guarantee individuals now on station staffs against replacement, except for good cause, for one year. Musicians regularly assigned to specific shows are immune from replacement, except for good cause, during 13-week cycles of their program.

The stations agreed with the union that, at least until July 31, 1971, ABC will retain 30 staff musicians in New York; CBS will retain 40 staff musicians in the same city; and NBC will retain 35 staff musicians in New York and 25 in Los Angeles.

In addition the networks agreed to pay into a severance fund, for immediate distribution to musicians who have been dropped because of quota reductions, an amount computed as follows: four week's pay at the rate prevailing on July 31, 1968, times years of continuous service, for each separated musician for a minimum of 12 weeks and a maximum of 60 weeks.

The parties to the contract agreed to form a special union-industry study committee to seek establishment of a new performance rate structure for casual musicians during 1970 contract negotiations.

Additional contract changes, AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin said, include increased pay for musicians required to play more than one instrument; 24 hours' advance notice of rehearsal schedules; increased penalties of network failure to adhere to meal break schedules, and limitations on the use of recordings on musical shows.

The previous contracts between the AFM and the networks were due to expire July 31 but negotiations continued until Oct. 30, when affected members turned down the second of two management offers. Negotiations, resumed with the assistance of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, produced a third offer, which members agreed to take.

Insurance Union Upheld on Right To Roster of Prudential Employes

The right of the Insurance Workers to a name-and-address list of the 16,000 district agents it represents in Prudential Insurance Co. offices in 34 states and two cities was upheld in a National Labor Relations Board ruling.

By refusing for the last 15 months to furnish such a list, the board held Prudential "interfered with, restrained and coerced" its employes in exercising their right to information they need to bargain intelligently with Prudential and to administer the contract that IWIU has had since Sept. 26, 1967.

The company claimed that the union had ample means of communicating with its members, and that a company rule forbade giving name-and-address lists to any organization. The board disagreed, and ordered Prudential to supply such a list with monthly additions of the names of quits and new hires.

The union advised Prudential that "under existing conditions it had no effective way of communicating with bargaining unit employes," and therefore was "unable to advise employes concerning contract benefits, or enlist their support in policing and enforcing the collective bargaining agreement."

The information was especially relevant, IWIU said, at contract negotiating time because it would permit the union to poll unit employes as to their preferences and priorities on various contract proposals.

The board members ruled that "on the basis of the evidence before us, we are convinced that the information the union requested . . . was necessary and relevant to collective bargaining and the administration" of the contract.

Needed to Communicate

The duty of fair representation requires that a union extend representation to nonunion employes as well as union members, the board observed, adding "where as here the bargaining representative has no effective means of communicating with a substantial number of employes, it cannot properly meet" its obligations under the law.

Board members in their ruling said "we deem it significant that the bargaining unit . . . nationwide in coverage, including over 16,000 agents employed at 897 locations" and that in addition, Prudential experiences a 25 percent turnover of employes every year.

The union's "lack of any effective means of communication with nonunion employes is amply demonstrated" by the facts, the NLRB said. It listed the facts:

There is no union security or maintenance of membership provision in the contract; less than 60 percent of unit employes are union members; the broad scope of the unit and the high turnover of employes lends substance to the union's claim "that the low rate of union membership is a reflection of the difficulties it has experienced in attempting to communicate with unit employes."

Further, the board said, the existing contract provides only for grievance handling and the posting of "certain notices" on office bulletin boards and "it is quite apparent that the union does not have reasonable access to unit employes at their place of employment."

IWIU bargains with Prudential for district agents in Washington, D. C., Toledo, O., and these states: Alabama, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington and West Virginia.

The NLRB follows standards set by the courts in a recent case—Standard Oil of California—in determining whether a union's channels of communication with members are adequate. It does not, it said, automatically grant name-and-address list orders unless such a list is reasonable under each set of circumstances.

Guidelines on Want Ads Survive Court Challenge

The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia ruled that the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission acted reasonably when it drew up guidelines for newspaper "help wanted" ads and set Dec. 1 as the effective date.

District Court Judge Howard F. Corcoran turned down the first legal challenge to the guidelines interpreting the ban on sex discrimination in the 1964 Civil Rights Act. He refused to issue a preliminary injunction and ordered the plaintiffs to pay the cost of the proceeding.

The suit was brought by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, New York City, for itself and its member newspapers, and the Evening Star Newspaper Co., Washington, D. C., as an employer affected by the guidelines.

Corcoran said the guidelines do not have the effect of law but are interpretations by the EEOC. Any court may interpret the law differently if it chooses, he said.

The commission did not exceed its authority in setting the guidelines, and furthermore, neither the Star nor ANPA objected to the EEOC's authority to issue guidelines concerning classified advertising when asked in 1966 to do so, the judge observed.

The guidelines, revised Aug. 14, 1968, after public hearings, prohibit help-wanted ads that "indicate a preference, limitation, specification or discrimination based on sex unless sex is a bona fide occupational qualification for the particular job involved."

Placing an ad in columns headed "male" or "female" will be considered an expression of a "preference . . . or discrimination based on sex," EEOC said.

1969 Institute On Arbitration Opens Jan. 12

The AFL-CIO will conduct its 1969 Arbitration Institute Jan. 12 through 17 at the University of Illinois in Urbana-Champaign, Ill.

Purpose of the program is to acquaint full-time union representatives and staff members with the skills needed to prepare and present arbitration cases effectively.

Topics will include arbitration and the law, arbitration clause in the bargaining agreement, arbitration costs, arbitrability, selecting the arbitrator, preparing and presenting the case, and evidence, witnesses and written briefs. Participants will also gain practical experience by working in small groups on preparing actual cases.

William E. Simkin, director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, will be among the specialists in arbitration and experts from unions and universities who will serve as instructors.

Southern Labor School Stresses Union Aims

Galveston, Tex.—Anti-poverty, organizing, education, civil rights and political action programs were among key subjects covered at the Advanced Southern Labor School here.

The week-long school is held each year at a different southern city. This year's classes were attended by 45 representatives of AFL-CIO state and local bodies and 14 international unions.

The program was developed by officers of the school—Pres. Barney Weeks of the Alabama AFL-CIO, president, and Pres. J. Bill Becker of the Arkansas AFL-CIO, secretary-treasurer, with aid from Assistant Dir. George T. Guernsey of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

Instructors included Dir. Walter Davis of the AFL-CIO Education Dept.; Area 5 COPE Dir. Daniel A. Powell; Pres. H. S. Hank Brown of Texas AFL-CIO; Assistant Dir. Marvin Friedman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research and Roy Evans, Texas AFL-CIO secretary-treasurer.

Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.), speaking at a dinner opening the school, told how "liberals in Texas carried the state for Humphrey" by building "a sound coalition of Mexican-Americans, Negroes, liberals and union members."

Barbara Jordan, the first Negro state senator in Texas, emphasized the need for continuing and strengthening such a coalition in the state, and extending it throughout the South.

Ernest Green, chairman of the Workers Defense League Apprenticeship Outreach program in New York City—who was one of the first Negro graduates of Little Rock, Ark., Central High School—was another main speaker.

He reported that 10 of the Apprenticeship Outreach programs, with help from building trades unions, are now training Negroes in southern cities to help prepare them for construction apprenticeship tests.

The session at which he spoke was chaired by Al Kehrer, AFL-CIO southern civil rights director. Robert McGlotton of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights participated in a discussion of the Outreach programs.

The dramatic struggle of California grape workers for union recognition was described by Vice Pres. Delores Huerta of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee. The delegates pledged to spread the boycott of California grapes throughout the South.

The Consumer's Voice

THE TRADE UNION movement has two major reasons for its deep concern with consumer problems and its support of consumer legislation, education and the formation of consumer cooperatives:

First, as the "people's lobby" representing the millions whose voices do not often penetrate congressional hearings, the agency investigations and surveys and the other decision-making areas of the government. These millions are both the organized and the unorganized, those who need minimum wage protection and decent social security benefits in the national interest.

Second, the trade union movement is representing its own membership, the millions who have gained better wages and working conditions negotiated by unions. Having negotiated a better standard of living for these workers, the union follows through to safeguard these dollars in the marketplace. This means "truth-in-lending" legislation, strong meat and poultry inspection laws, crackdowns on frauds and deceptive practices, and the rest of the consumer shopping list.

For the past few years the consumer's voice has been raised and heard as never before. And the result has been corrective and beneficial legislation. These measures have won their way through Congress with the strong support—and at times the only organized support—of the trade union movement.

But there's much to be done before the country puts real meaning into the late Pres. John F. Kennedy's bill of rights for consumers. In his 1962 message to Congress, Kennedy spelled out those rights as:

The right to safety—to be protected against the marketing of goods hazardous to health or life.

The right to be informed—to be protected against fraudulent, deceitful or grossly misleading information, advertising, labeling or other practices and to be given the facts needed to make an informed choice.

The right to choose—to be assured, wherever possible, access to a variety of products and services at competitive prices.

The right to be heard—to be assured that the consumer interest will receive full and sympathetic consideration in the formulation of government policy.

Pres. Johnson has implemented with legislative and administrative action the concepts of the Kennedy programs so that the consumer no longer has to take a "back seat."

The consumers voice must continue to be heard. While the Republican 1968 platform did not take a position on many of the specific recommendations made by the AFL-CIO, it did say that "a new Republican Administration will strive for fairness for all consumers, including additional information and protection programs as necessary, state and local consumer education, vigorous enforcement of the numerous protective laws already enacted and active encouragement of the many consumer-protection initiatives and organizations of private enterprise."

If the incoming Administration is tuned into the voice of the consumer the progress of the last eight years in this specific area can be continued to the general benefit of all Americans.

Big Banks Use Legal Loophole For Power Grab of Business

The following editorial appeared in the Nov. 30, 1968 edition of Labor, the weekly paper of 18 unions representing railroad, airline and other workers in the United States.

"THIS IS A REAL can of worms. It can affect the whole capitalistic system in the United States. The line between banking and commerce should not be erased."

Those words come from the nation's Number One "money man," William McC. Martin, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board. Martin was referring to a huge, swift, scarcely-noticed new power grab by America's biggest bankers.

As reported recently by the New York Times: "The rush by the nation's largest banks to diversify through one-bank holding companies has turned into a stampede. . . . So far, several dozen major banks, with total assets approaching $100 billion, have taken the initiative . . . including the two largest in the nation—the Bank of America in San Francisco and the First National City Bank in New York."

As Time magazine puts it, the big banks have "found a legal loophole" in the Bank Holding Company Act that will let them branch out into any other kind of business—"into retailing, manufacturing, transportation or whatever else looks profitable"—and thereby acquire an ever-greater share of our economy.

Business Week magazine describes this movement as "the most daring enterprise that the banking world has ever undertaken," and says it has raised such questions as these: "With all their financial muscle, will banks ruin other businesses competitively? Does banking's free-wheeling style today presage an economic disaster, as it did in the late 1920s?"

Ever since New Deal days, as a result of the banking disasters of the 1920s and early 1930s, the national banking laws have forbidden banks from controlling non-banking businesses. The Bank Holding Company Act of 1956 applied the same rule to bank holding companies—with some unfortunate loophole exceptions.

Several reasons are cited for stopping banks from owning other businesses. First, banks deal with other people's money. Their primary obligation is to their depositors. Bankers should not be tempted to "milk" their bank by lending huge sums of depositors' money to some other affiliated business.

Second, banks are given very special privileges by the government to issue credit. The reason for these privileges is to supply all business with bank credit on a fair and equitable basis. But if banks own certain other businesses, they are apt to tie-in their credit in a way to favor their own businesses and to hurt the competitors.

Third, the big banks already—through their control of credit and through the vast pension funds and trust accounts they administer—exert great power over all kinds of economic decisions. Allowing the big banks to also buy direct stock control over other giant corporations, through the holding company device, would balloon the bankers' power even more.

AN EXAMPLE OF this already exists in the state of Florida: The duPont Estate, headed by financier Edward Ball, has enjoyed a special exemption from the Bank Holding Company Act, even though it operates the largest banking combine in Florida. Using this loophole, Ball built up a $2 billion financial-industrial empire, made himself the most powerful man in Florida, and abused his power unmercifully—most notably in refusing to settle the long Florida East Coast Railway strike.

This same kind of combined financial-industrial power—on an even vaster scale than Ed Ball and the duPont Estate—is what the huge banks of New York, Chicago and San Francisco are now on the way toward developing.

If they succeed—if huge financial-industrial holding companies come to dominate America the way the duPont Estate dominates Florida—it will be a sad and evil day for working people. Working people and their unions would have all too little bargaining strength against such massive combines.

Morever, as Vice Chairman J. L. Robertson of the Federal Reserve Board has warned, bankers in the 1920s engaged in the same kind of "permissiveness" the big bankers today are embarking on—which "brought almost unrestrained expansion followed by a collapse and a depression that caused untold suffering."

Labor newspaper urges the new Congress, as one of it first acts to close the dangerous loophole in the Bank Holding Company Act that allows the big bankers to make their current power grab.

Second-Class Citizens:

Big Gap in Labor Law Denies Protection to Farm Workers

The following is excerpted from an address by William L. Kircher, AFL-CIO director of organization, to the Washington chapter of the Industrial Relations Research Association.

THE FARM WORKER knows, as all the poor have known, that to move forward calls for joint action with his fellow workers—and that means organizing; and organizing—for workers—means unionism and collective bargaining.

The first obstacle he faces is the fact that the coverage of the federal law which covers millions of other workers and has for over 30 years—is denied him.

Mind you, farm workers are not denied the right to have unions and engage in collective bargaining. They are merely denied the protection and procedural assistance of federal law, as enjoyed by other citizens, in their efforts to attain them and, once established, no protection. This means that there are no labor-management restrictions upon their employers in their actions resisting the farm workers' organizing efforts. Union recognition and bargaining, therefore, must occur through the voluntary willingness of the employer.

Employers have traditionally shown themselves willing to voluntarily recognize unions when (1) they have the major say in the kind of union it is, or (2) alternatives to recognition are made more distasteful and/or economically dangerous than recognizing and bargaining with the union.

It is clear, therefore, that the farm worker is faced with building a "company union" or resorting to strikes and boycotts. Thus, the legislative situation inflicts upon the farm worker the procedures of striking and boycotting as his only method of building an honorable union.

The unfairness of this is magnified by the fact that built into the system are two factors which make successful strikes extremely unlikely. One is only indirectly related to a bad national policy but the other, and more important one, is a direct result of our immigration policy.

The first has to do with the impact of general hostile local, state and municipal courts which are able, without a federal law, to take immediate jurisdiction of any matter in the labor-management relations purview which comes before them. Because this is farm labor, such matters will occur in the agricultural or rural areas. The courts and the judges there are part and parcel of the agriculture-dominated "power structure."

THE FARM WORKER expects little justice under such circumstances, and that's about what he gets. So a strike which starts among 10,000 acres of grapes today is likely to find itself enjoined against any kind of effective picketing tomorrow, including the limitation and placement of pickets on a one-per-gate ratio in such a way as to separate and isolate them completely from their fellow workers and thereby expose them to the brutal violence of the company supervision and hired goons.

Such injunctions have even taken the union loudspeakers away so that a lonely picket could not even call for help effectively, let alone communicate with the workers in the field.

But an even more critical detriment to effective strikes is the U.S. immigration policy which permits (almost encourages) an endless supply of "scabs" and "strikebreakers" from the other side of the border to any U.S. farms within 350 miles of that border.

How does it happen? Easy! The visa which an alien gets in order to enter this country, and which carries with it his pledge to become a U.S. citizen, is treated like a "work permit" at every entry point on the Mexican border. Visa holders, referred to as "green carders" because of the color of the visa card, commute back and forth across the border without anyone ever questioning the relationship of their pledge to seek citizenship with their commuter habits. It is estimated that in certain seasons the daily commuters are as high as 60,000 per day.

It must also be pointed out that these loose practices are precisely what is responsible for much of the great population growth in the northern cities of Mexico, which has been substantial. The extreme depths of economic disadvantage suffered by the Mexican in native employment usually makes even the lowest-paid U.S. employment very attractive to him.

After three painful years of striking against all of these built-in government instigated obstacles which weigh the scales so heavily against the farm workers' chances, the farm workers union has realized that without some kind of meaningful effort on the part of the U.S. Government to give them an element of "fair play" balance in their struggle to organize, the strike has, at least, only a contributory role to play in the organizational process.

All of this leads to the last piece of machinery which the worker can hope will help him get from his present position of abject unorganized weakness to a position of some organizational form upon which he can begin to build the collective bargaining procedures for self-help and economic progress which have been available to other American citizens for so long. That machinery is the consumer boycott.

Today a national boycott against nearly all California table grapes is the major organizational machinery of the farm workers' union.

The farm workers union is established and it is here to stay. It's leadership is dedicated to its furtherance, whatever the personal sacrifice.

The labor movement of this nation—all segments of it—is united on this. Of all the things you can find about which the various elements within the house of labor can, from time to time disagree about—one thing upon which there is complete and total unanimity today is the importance of the farm workers succeeding in their effort to build their union.

Question of Human Dignity:

Grape Pickers in Semi-Slavery, Woman Strike Leader Reports

A MOTHER OF SEVEN children, who is a union official, charged that California grape growers hold workers in "semi-slavery."

Vowing that workers will fight "on and on" to build their union, Delores Huerta, vice president of the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee declared, "It is not just a question of wages."

"It is a question of human dignity, of equality," she asserted, on the network interview, Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:45 p.m., EST, on Mutual Radio.

Mrs. Huerta pointed out that "most of the field workers are Mexican-American, Filipino, Negro and Puerto Rican." The growers, she said, "try to get the idea over that workers are sub-human . . . play one race against the other . . . and actually perpetrate racial prejudice."

She noted that farm workers are denied the rights and protections other workers have under the National Labor Relations Act. They are "absolutely powerless . . . have no control over their conditions . . . no job security," she said.

"If a worker tries to find out who he is working for . . . or what his wages are going to be for the next day, he is fired," she said.

"SO MUCH VIOLENCE (was) perpetrated against our strikers and our pickets" that the union was forced to launch the nationwide boycott against table grapes, as the "safest weapon we have," she explained. Telling effects of the boycott on the table grape market, she said, are evident in shipments "far below normal" and prices substantially lower than last year.

She urged union members and others who are sympathetic to the farm workers to provide "visible, physical support" and financial contributions. "Sympathy alone," she said, "just isn't going to make it."

Reporters questioning Mrs. Huerta on the AFL-CIO produced public affairs program were Stanley Levey of Scripps-Howard Newspapers and Alex Uhl, of Press Associates, Inc.

By Press Associates, Inc.

THERE WERE A NUMBER of things about the recent election that ought to serve as a warning to the American people that all is not well in the presidential election machinery.

- There was the panicky uncertainty for far too long that the election might be thrown into the House with all the political chicanery that such a calamity might well have entailed.
- There was also the obvious failure of the Electoral College vote—302 for Nixon and 191 for Humphrey—to reflect the exceedingly narrow margin, a bare 300,000 votes out of 72 million, by which Pres.-Elect Nixon won.
- And there was a lot of worry that neither Nixon nor Vice-Pres. Humphrey might attain the needed Electoral College majority and that George Wallace might seek to bargain with the 45 Electoral College votes that were his.

Undoubtedly efforts will be made in the forthcoming 91st Congress to change the current system.

Some reformers would tamper just a little bit with the Electoral College by binding the electors to vote for the ticket on which they run. They are not so obligated legally.

Others would go a step farther and divide a state's Electoral College vote on the proportion of the state's vote that each candidate gets instead of the all or nothing system that now prevails.

Finally, there are those who would do away with the whole Electoral College business and elect future Presidents by a national popular vote.

How far any of these proposals will get in the next Congress is open to question. All of them would require constitutional amendments and Congress is traditionally loath to enter the constitutional thicket.

BUT THERE WAS one failure of the election about which all Americans can do something without waiting for Congress to act—that is the dismal failure of too many Americans not to vote at all.

On the basis of virtually complete returns only 60 percent of the eligible voters in the country voted—the lowest percentage since 1956.

An Associated Press analysis of the national total shows that only about 72 million Americans out of 120 million of voting age went to the polls and registered their political choice in an election that held vital importance for all of the 120 million and their children.

There were some unusual aspects to the 1968 statistics. The Southern states—largely because of heavy Negro registrations and white "backlash" votes—produced bigger turnouts than usual. Some of the big states didn't do too well at all.

California grew by almost a million during the past four years, yet only about 30,000 more votes were cast in 1968 than in 1964. Illinois cast 172,000 less votes in 1968 than in 1964 although it had grown by almost 200,000 during the same period. Ohio produced 23,000 less votes in 1968 than in 1964 although it had grown by 235,000 in the interval. New Jersey, which grew by 264,000 between 1964 and 1968 could produce only an extra 6,000 votes in 1968.

These were all states that Vice Pres. Humphrey lost by narrow margins and a few more votes—even that famous one extra vote per precinct—might have made a difference in the outcome.

The importance of a big voter turnout has never been lost on labor—which, perhaps, more than any other group in the country has devoted time, money and effort to persuade voters to register and vote.

It is clear, however, that labor needs to be joined by other civic minded organizations in the country in the campaign to impress upon voters the importance of registering and voting.

This is at least one job Americans can do for themselves without waiting for the Constitution to be changed.

"HUMAN DIGNITY and equality"—not just wages—are the aims of farm workers in building their union, Vice Pres. Delores Huerta of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee told reporters Stanley Levey of Scripps-Howard Newspapers, left, and Alexander Uhl of Press Associates, Inc., on Labor News Conference. The interview is broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on Mutual Radio.

How to Buy:

Labor Led Voters to Clamp Lid On Washington Credit Charges

By Sidney Margolius

THE FEAT OF WASHINGTON state labor unions in the recent elections in winning a legal ceiling of 12 percent per annum on retail credit is not only a triumph for the public over the installment sellers and lenders. It is also a clear indication to working families in every state that there is no need to pay high finance charges.

Twelve percent per annum is enough. There are plenty of places to borrow at that rate whether you need money to pay Christmas bills or for other needs. Twelve percent per annum is what you pay when a lender or dealer quotes you a finance charge of $6.50 per $100 of original balance, or a rate of 1 percent a month on your declining balance.

Credit unions, for example, charge a true rate of 12 percent per annum on member loans. In fact, many give free life insurance and rebates so that the true cost often is closer to 11 percent. Many commercial banks, too, charge only 12 percent or a little more on personal loans and auto credit.

But while 12 percent is enough to pay for credit it's a lot better than the 18-22 percent charged by most department store, mail order and bank card charge account plans, or the true per-annum rates of 30-36 percent charged by small loan companies, or the 20-36 percent permitted on installment purchases of used cars in various states.

What happened in Washington is a lesson for credit-exploited working families and their organizations everywhere else. This is the first time in any state that the public itself has had a chance to vote on credit laws. Last year the Washington state labor unions had tried to get the state legislature to put a 12 percent ceiling on rates but the retailers and lenders won out there.

This year, after the bank credit card plans raised their rates from 1 percent a month (12 percent a year) to 1.5 percent (18 percent a year), the unions decided to go right to the public.

In an all-out campaign, the State Labor Council and its allies got the necessary signatures for the petition to put the issue on the ballot, as is permitted in that state. Joe Davis, council president, and Marvin L. Williams, secretary-treasurer, were listed as the sponsors.

Then the retailers and lenders swung their big guns into action to try to beat the proposal. They formed a deceptively-named "Credit Users Committee." Revealingly, five of the 23 area chairmen of this committee were from Sears Roebuck alone. The others were from banks, department stores, and car dealers.

The retailers and lenders then started to pour out the advertising money to beat the 12 percent ceiling proposal. They spent a half-million dollars on TV, radio and newspaper ads, and plastered billboards all across the state.

The retailers and lenders also had the support of virtually every newspaper in the state except for the Catholic Northwest Progress.

THE UNIONS SPENT only $55,000, including the $20,000 it cost to circulate the petitions to get the question on the ballot. This was about one-tenth the amount the credit industry spent for its massive campaign run by a leading advertisting agency.

But you can't fool the people all the time. When the ballots were counted, the public had voted 572,000 to 509,000 for the 12 percent ceiling. The impossible had happened.

Now the Washington state trade unionists hope their success can start similar campaigns to reduce finance charges in other states. Their new law however, does not affect small loan rates which are even higher than retail finance charges.

In other states, until the public comes to realize the enormous waste of family money resulting from high finance charges, you can only protect yourself. The new federal truth-in-lending law does not go into effect until July 1.

Concern of Family Service:

Broken Homes Root Of Social Problems

FAMILY DISINTEGRATION is a root cause of "riot—violence—urban decay problems," Walter G. Barlow, president of the Family Service Association of America, said in a report on the work of Family Service agencies.

He pointed out some community danger signs that stem significantly from family breakdown: 40 percent of all children who drop out before completing high school; over 700,000 arrests of youths aged 10-17 in 3,000 cities in one month; the probability that a marriage will end in divorce is about one in four; 6.5 million people suffer from alcoholism; and 7.5 million children live in homes without one or both parents.

"Private citizens have been serving on various important commissions and planning bodies along with such organizations as the Urban Coalition and have launched significant programs," Barlow said. "Another part of the private sector—Family Service agencies—has for a long time directed its attention to helping families keep life stable enough for job-holders to stay on the job, for young people to get an adequate education, and children to have at least an even break on their start in life. Family Service believes that it is the quality of family life that helps family members to develop their potential—for good or ill—as students, wage-earners, parents, citizens."

The 36-page report published by the association addresses itself to some growing concerns of businessmen and contributors to United Funds and Community Chests. The report includes 11 illustrations of Family Service work which are typical of agencies across the country.

A Midwestern family agency manned "Operation Welcome" with volunteers to head off problems before they arose and to bridge the gaps between newcomers and their community. In a new trend, a high percentage of Family Service agencies are using agency-trained paid staff and volunteers to carry out certain programs that do not require professionally qualified social work personnel.

On the West Coast, a Family Service agency launched a program to bring services closer to the low-income neighborhoods, and develop self-help programs and new career positions for people in a poverty community. During one month, nearly 2,000 hours of volunteer service were given and 15 to 20 requests for help were met daily.

On the Eastern Seaboard, Family Service brought together a group of young unmarried mothers and their children to help them make better lives for themselves in a community strange to them. Encouraged by the group discussions, and the growing knowledge of opportunities in the city unlike what they had known in the rural south, several young women registered for evening high school classes and others entered training programs.

The report describes the variety of ways in which Family Service counselors have adapted their skills to bolster families in meeting the mounting pressures of urban living and in helping them to get into the main stream of educational opportunity and vocational training. Family Service agencies counsel families on an individual, group or family-unit basis to meet the particular needs of the individual and the family.

Soup to Nonsense:

Attempt to Kick Yule Card Habit Ends With Late Mailing Rush

By Jane Goodsell

MY STRUGGLE to break the Christmas card habit began a year ago about this time when Jim and I held our annual discussion about being sensible about Christmas. He made his usual speech about the simple, spontaneous, heartwarming Christmases he remembered from his childhood, comparing them to the meaningless spending spree and exhausting round of chores that Christmas now was.

I was willing to concede that Christmas had gotten completely out of hand, and there must be some way to de-escalate. I can't recall which of us suggested cutting out Christmas cards, but it doesn't matter because we both hailed it as an inspirational idea. That was Nov. 16.

On Nov. 21, I passed by a counter in the middle aisle of a department store, displaying a beautiful selection of Christmas cards at half-price. I was trying to decide between a delightful medieval print and a stunning abstract design when I remembered our decision. I tossed the cards back, feeling depressed. It seemed extravagant to pass up such a wonderful bargain.

On Dec. 1, I encountered a friend who announced breathlessly that she was so far behind herself this year that she'd only just bought her Christmas cards and was rushing home to address them. I explained to her that we weren't sending cards this year. She said that was very sensible, but she, herself, couldn't do it because she was a sentimental fool about Christmas and loved keeping up the old traditions.

On Dec. 9, we received our first Christmas card in the mail—from old friends spending a sabbatical year in England. Wrote them a long letter, explaining that we weren't sending cards this year but wishing them a merry Christmas anyway.

Dec. 14 brought a flood of Christmas cards in the mail, including several with family photos. Wrote 15 letters to people who'd sent us cards explaining that we weren't sending cards this year. Started 16th letter, but my hand had gone limp.

Dec. 15: Torrent of cards in the mail, including one from Jim's roommate when he was in college. Jim looked thoughtful when I showed it to him.

Dec. 16: After a sleepless night thinking about people who might wonder if we'd died or something if they didn't hear from us, rushed downtown and bought eight boxes of Christmas cards. Very poor selection and I remembered regretfully the lovely cards I could have bought earlier at half-price. Addressed the cards and rushed them into the mail before Jim got home. Felt sneaky but more cheerful. Slept better.

Dec. 22: Bumped into business acquaintance of Jim's who told me how much he liked our Christmas card. I was momentarily puzzled. What card? It took me about 30 seconds to figure it out. Passed on compliment to Jim when he got home. "Mr. McDougal said our card this year was one of the handsomest he received." Jim looked sheepish. Mumbled something about keeping up friendly business relations.

Displayed a little mean streak by waiting a full five minutes before confessing that I, too, had been sneaking out Christmas cards on the sly. We just stood there, looking at each other and shaking our heads. "Well," Jim said finally, "it was a good try."

RLEA Official Says:

Railroads Upsetting Balance in Relations

Buenos Aires—Managements are trying "to destroy the balance" that exists in handling labor-management disputes on American railroads, a top U.S. rail union official has charged.

The charge against employers and an analysis of collective bargaining on carriers in the United States came in a paper submitted to the 12th Pan American Railway Congress by G. E. Leighty, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association.

The U.S. delegation to the Congress, headed by Thomas Goodfellow, president of the Association of American Railroads, included Donald S. Beattie, RLEA executive secretary-treasurer.

Leighty described the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, including mediation by the National Mediation Board and appointment at times of presidential emergency boards to head off strikes that "threaten essential transportation services."

"This arrangement," he said, "has achieved peaceful settlements of nearly all the major labor disputes in our industry over the past 15 years."

However, he continued, "the railroad corporations have for many years tried to destroy the balance of this system by urging Congress to enact a general law forbidding all railroad strikes and imposing a system of compulsory arbitration."

The carriers' moves for an anti-strike law have been "strongly opposed by railway labor, and Congress up to now has not enacted such a law," Leighty observed.

He noted that there have been strikes on individual railroads, but they have been short, with the single exception "of a very long strike against a small railroad in Florida"—the Florida East Coast Railway.

He also acknowledged that the government has acted to head off national railroad strikes or threatened strikes six times since 1943. But in each case, he pointed out, the government limited its action "to the current situation."

When unions have threatened or engaged in strikes after emergency board procedures expired, Leighty explained, they were exercising a "right of appeal" to a kind of "super-mediation by the President or his secretary of labor."

In these "rare cases," he observed, the President acted because he did not want the nation's railroads shut down. But, he added, the President also has shown each time that he does not want to abolish the right to strike.

"This system for handling labor-management disputes is not neat," Leighty said. "It would not please an ideologist of either the right or left.

"However, in an imperfect world, it has proved on the whole a practical system for meeting the employes' basic needs (though too slowly) in an atmosphere of freedom, while preserving the railroads' economic viability and avoiding frequent disruption of essential railroad service."

"This, I think, is a substantial achievement," he concluded.

Goodfellow spoke on the future of U.S. railroads. "The population and production potential," he said, "gives the railroads unprecedented opportunities."

Railroads in America "are on the threshold of a great new era" and they must be ready to meet it, he said, adding, "we are embracing technology with all the passion of a Latin lover."

Pollsters Cite Big Labor Vote For Humphrey

The unions were the only "major apparatus" available to Humphrey to overcome "these enormous liabilities," Field reported.

"In the closing weeks of the campaign," the pollster said, "union leadership throughout the country made a determined drive to win it for Humphrey—and they almost did."

Both Field and Gallup noted that a growing number of union members have advanced into economic brackets which normally turn in Republican majorities. Unless a candidate is blatantly anti-union, Field commented, there is less economic motivation for higher-paid workers to follow traditional voting patterns.

But despite this, Humphrey made his best showing in northern industrial areas where unions are strongest.

SECRETARY-GENERAL of the Peruvian Confederation of Labor, Julio Cruzado, visits AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany on his way back from the meeting of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions executive board meeting in Brussels.

HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS learned about organizing, union elections and collective bargaining in a one-day institute jointly sponsored by the Milwaukee County AFL-CIO and University of Wisconsin School for Workers. Lynne Shifflett of the School answers a question at one of the sessions.

Students Make Do-It-Yourself Study of Labor

Milwaukee, Wis.—Mock union election and bargaining sessions highlighted the third annual High School Institute co-sponsored by the Milwaukee County AFL-CIO and University of Wisconsin School for Workers.

Eighty-one seniors, representing 42 public and parochial high schools, participated in the daylong program which was arranged with help from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

The students heard Thomas Martin, an AFL-CIO organizer, explain how a union could help them achieve dignity and economic gains. Editor Ray W. Taylor of the Milwaukee Labor Press, playing the part of an employer, urged them to vote "no union."

Each student, as a mythical company employe, then cast his ballot in a union representation election. The result was 47 votes for the union and 31 against.

Bargaining committees were then selected with five students forming the union committee and five on the employer's side. Each committee met separately and drew up its proposals and bargaining strategy.

Subsequent bargaining sessions and workshop discussion were marked by hot arguments over union security, wages, health and welfare plans, pensions, seniority and working conditions.

The bargaining concluded with the company making a final offer for settlement that the workers voted to accept against the recommendations of their bargaining committee.

Student participants then filled out a questionnaire to evaluate the program and suggest improvements for the future.

Staff of the institute included Irving Brotslaw, Lee Balliet and Lynne Shifflett of the School for Workers; Martin, Taylor and Milwaukee AFL-CIO staff members Donald Soucie, Grace Buckner, Francis Finch, Clementine Steffes and Russell Retzack.

Harold McAvoy Dies, Headed Mail Handlers

New York—Harold J. McAvoy, president of the Post Office Mail Handles since 1941, died here unexpectedly at a union meeting and was buried Dec. 4 after services in Our Lady of Mercy Church, Long Island.

McAvoy was answering questions of members about the union's recent merger with the Laborers when he collapsed and died. His wife and a daughter survive.

pay, and improvement of a company-paid insurance plan.

The parties agreed that a profit sharing plan and a Christmas bonus program now in effect will be continued. Clauses on seniority and grievance handling were added, and a voluntary arbitration provision gives employes the right to strike if management fails to agree to arbitration on a specific grievance.

Two major strike issues produced modified agreement—arbitration and dues checkoff. The union wanted arbitration of the last step in the grievance procedure, and got a method for achieving it. On checkoff, it was agreed that employes may authorize management to deduct dues and deposit the amount in a local bank, which will forward it to the union.

Last May the AFL-CIO Executive Council called for a nationwide consumer boycott of company products and all-out support of the strikers "for the duration."

After the settlement the union expressed "thanks to all our friends, in the labor movement and out, who contributed both financial and moral support to the strikers."

Benet added "we are asking our feminine supporters to put their Kayser-Roth pantie hose back on."

The company makes women's hosiery under the brand names of Schiaparelli, Mojud, Kayser, Phoenix; men's hose labeled Esquire and Bachelor's Friend, and Supp-Hose for both sexes.

Kayser-Roth workers here voted for TWUA four years ago. Management engaged in legal maneuvers until challenged ballots were finally counted and the union was certified by the National Labor Relations Board, Sept. 11, 1967.

When the company lost its legal battle it showed little desire to settle at the bargaining table from October 1967 to May 1968. Employes voted to strike, and walked out May 6. Despite strong pressure for settling from townspeople hurting from the loss of a big payroll, the strike was 100 percent effective, the TWUA said.

The AFL-CIO boycott, and support of farmers, small businessmen and other workers in the area turned the tide. But the crucial factor was labor's determination not to let the issue go down the drain, TWUA asserted.

Strikers got a lift during their long struggle when two Canadian plants of Kayser-Roth joined the union. A hosiery manufacturing unit in London, Ont., voted 71-35 for TWUA representation, and the Ontario Labor Relations Board certified TWUA as representing a majority of the 40 workers at a tricot unit in the same town.

Labor support of the product boycott was widespread. Stores in many cities were handbilled, and shoppers were called on to avoid buying company products until a settlement was reached.

After the strike started, TWUA Pres. William Pollock sent personal letters to 1,600 hosiery buyers in major cities. Their response was encouraging, Pollock said.

Labor Dept. Reorganizing Plan Delayed

The Labor Dept. has postponed implementation of a reorganization of the department's Manpower Administration pending consultation with the national conference of governors.

The reorganization of the Manpower Administration had been announced by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz "to serve the twin purposes of efficiency and economy."

In money alone, Wirtz said, it would save the government $4 million a year.

The reorganization would have separated unemployment insurance from job placement and linked job finding with manpower training operations.

It also would have set up a single chain of command for regional Manpower Administration programs, responsible to a new associate administrator for field operations.

Tennessee Gov. Buford Ellington, chairman of the governors conference, urged the department to delay implementation of the reorganization plan pending further consultation. The final decision may be left to the incoming administration.

IUD Names McIver Sectional Coordinator

Harold D. McIver has been named southeastern coordinator for the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., IUD Organizational Dir. Nicholas Zonarich announced.

McIver, 37, has worked on IUD coordinated organizing programs since 1963 and is an international representative of the Steelworkers.

Nixon Picks Moderate:

McCracken to Head Economic Advisers

Pres.-Elect Richard M. Nixon chose a middle-of-the-road Republican college professor as his chief economic adviser and told newsmen that he doesn't consider it necessary to have higher unemployment in order to control inflation.

Nixon and his choice to head the President's Council of Economic Advisers, Dr. Paul W. McCracken of the University of Michigan, met with Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), chairman of the powerful, tax-writing House Ways & Means Committee.

By all accounts, it was an exploratory negotiating session—to define the areas in which Mills might be willing to consider tax credits for business as an alternative to government spending in fields such as job training. Mills has sharply criticized tax credits as a form of "backdoor" spending in which loss of revenue to the government substitutes for federal appropriations.

Among those participating in the meeting was Alan Greenspan, a key economic adviser to Nixon during the presidential campaign. Last October, Greenspan handed a potent political issue to Humphrey by telling newsmen that Nixon "would be willing to take slightly more unemployment" for the sake of better price stability.

Pres. Johnson, meanwhile, issued a strong warning to the incoming Administration against abandonment of a full employment policy.

"God help us if we find ourselves returning to a period of high unemployment, with the 'haves' fighting off the 'no longer haves' for precious jobs," the President warned.

"That is a prescription for social disaster," Johnson told the Business Council. "Without full employment," he said, Nixon "cannot succeed in his other urgent objectives."

Nixon told newsmen that McCracken's appointment had been strongly recommended by Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers during the Eisenhower Administration. McCracken, 53, served on the council from 1956-59.

Nixon described him as "a centrist, a man who is pragmatic in his economics."

The President-elect also named Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, 45-year-old Harvard scholar, as his assistant for national security affairs. Kissinger, a highly-regarded expert, served as foreign policy adviser to New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller during his campaign for the GOP nomination.

In another major appointment, Nixon named as his science adviser Lee A. DuBridge, president of California Institute of Technology.

Among lesser appointments, the President-elect designated a former aide to South Carolina Sen. Strom Thurmond, Harry S. Dent, as a White House deputy counsel. Dent was active in the 1964 Goldwater campaign.

There were strong indications that Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge will be named by Nixon to replace W. Averell Harriman as chief United States negotiator at the Paris talks on Viet Nam. Harriman has urged Nixon "to have his own team" to carry on the negotiations.

A Nixon spokesman confirmed that Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey had declined an offer to become the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

Nixon's press aide also announced that the President-elect has asked Chief Justice Earl Warren to remain on the Supreme Court until next June, when the court completes its term. He said Warren had agreed to do so.

The 77-year-old chief justice had sought to retire last summer, leaving the exact timing to the President. But he agreed to stay on after a Senate filibuster blocked confirmation of Associate Justice Abe Fortas and the nomination was withdrawn.

Although Nixon had once praised Warren as "a great Republican chief justice," he hit hard during the campaign at decisions handed down by the Warren court.

The President-elect was expected to start announcing his Cabinet selections shortly and dozens of names figured in speculations and predictions as to his choices.

'Let's Get to Work!'

HUMAN RIGHTS were directly related to job opportunities in a program marking the 20th anniversary of the adoption by the United Nations of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. Discussion leaders in this panel were, from left, AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Donald Slaiman; AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who chaired the session; Maurice Tempelsman, business leader and moderator; Bryson B. Rash, who spoke for the National Alliance of Businessmen, and Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver. Not shown is panelist Clarence Mitchell, Washington director of the NAACP.

AFL-CIO Civil Rights Dir. Donald Slaiman; broadcast news commentator Bryson Rash, representing the National Alliance of Businessmen, and Clarence Mitchell, Washington director of the NAACP. Maurice Tempelsman, chairman of the businessmen's committee for the observance, was moderator.

Stressing the importance of a full employment economy to achieve human rights, Meany posed the alternatives.

"Without full employment," he asked, "how do we ever solve the just demands of our minorities?

"Do we fire whites to hire blacks? Fire blacks to hire Americans of Mexican descent, or Puerto Ricans, or Indians?

"Do we play a grim game of musical chairs for those scarce job opportunities available?"

And without full employment, Meany warned, "hospitals and schools will remain unbuilt and new roads, new homes, new parks all will continue to be just drawings on some planning board."

Even before the UN declaration, he noted, the 1946 Employment Act committed the United States to a job for all economy.

To achieve this, Meany stressed, "we cannot retreat from the hard, unalterable fact that there is but one clear path to the elimination of unemployment. The government must become the employer of last resort."

Only through free, fair and full employment, Meany said, can the nation "eliminate poverty, desrtoy slums, provide decent housing and schools."

Nor can the UN declaration be fulfilled, Meany said, unless workers are protected in their right to collective bargaining.

Of the farm workers, Meany declared: "All they want is the right to vote for or against a union. But they are denied the protection of the National Labor Relations Act, not because their cause is not just but because their employers have a tough and effective lobby."

This, he said, is an area of the UN human rights declaration "which cries for implementation."

In the panel discussion:

- Weaver observed that the goal of full employment is not just the chance to work in return for the necessities of life, but "the opportunity to develop and use talents" in useful occupations.
- Slaiman stressed that merely halting discriminatory practices doesn't bring about fully equal employment opportunities for minority groups unless there is active recruitment, training to overcome educational handicaps and a high level of employment.

He cited the progess made under private and government programs in which the trade union movement has been deeply involved but warned that an increase in unemployment would wipe out these accomplishments. "It would be like walking slowly up a rapidly descending escalator."

- Rash reported that the National Alliance of Businessmen is ahead of schedule in its first-year goal of placing 100,000 of the hard-core unemployed in private industry jobs.

He said the productive value of each person placed in a job pays off the cost of training in only 20 months.

- Mitchell expressed concern lest the new Administration scrap the important start that has been made for an uncertain program of tax incentives. It is necessary to build on what has been done, he stressed, not discard everything and start anew.

In other panels, experts discussed the human rights declaration as it relates to equal protection of law, youth, environment and social order. Chief Justice Earl Warren and Urban League Dir. Whitney M. Young addressed plenary sessions. Ambassador W. Averell Harriman returned from the Paris Viet Nam peace talks to serve as chairman of the program.

Pres. Johnson, in an unscheduled appearance at the closing session, called for Senate ratification of a group of United Nations conventions or treaties designed to implement its human rights declaration.

The commitments awaiting ratification include treaties dealing with abolition of forced labor, prevention of genocide, elimination of racial discrimination and political rights of women.

Earlier, Chief Justice Warren expressed high praise for the President and his Administration.

Warren, a former Republican governor of California who in 1948 was the GOP candidate for vice president, told the conference that Johnson's Administration "has probably done more than any other for human rights."

ple solve problems and become more self-reliant and self-supporting."

Meany noted that the indignities to which welfare recipients are subjected too often serve to discourage people in need from obtaining help.

"We applaud the elimination" of eligibility investigations, Meany said. "The controls which are built into the new regulations, we feel, are more than adequate to insure continued good results."

The help to recipients appealing reduction of benefits, Meany added, would change "a paper right" into "a real right for families and individuals faced with reduction or elimination of their only source of income."

Meany concluded: "The AFL-CIO, therefore, strongly supports the proposed regulations and urges their implementation at the earliest possible date."

Jobless Rate Declines to 15-Year Low

The nation's over-all unemployment rate dropped three-tenths of 1 percent to 3.3 percent in November, the lowest point in 15 years, the Labor Dept. reported.

At the same time, the Bureau of Labor Statistics said that nonfarm payroll employment rose 160,000 in November to 68.8 million, seasonally adjusted.

The 3.3 percent jobless rate is the lowest since November 1953, when it was 3.1 percent. The rate reached 3.5 percent several times earlier this year.

The number unemployed in November was 2.6 million, down 200,000 from October after seasonal adjustment. There were declines of 100,000 for adult men, 75,000 for adult women, and 25,000 for teenagers.

Jobless rates for adult men (2 percent), adult women (3.4 percent), and full-time workers (3 percent) all fell in November. The rate for adult men was at its lowest since 1948. But the unemployment rate for teenagers, at 12.2 percent was down only slightly.

Nonwhite Rate Down

The unemployment rate for nonwhites dropped significantly from 7.4 percent in October to 6.5 percent in November, but it remained more than double the rate for whites—3 percent last month.

Persons unemployed 15 weeks or more totaled 350,000 in November, seasonally adjusted, also the lowest level in 15 years. Over the year this long-term unemployment declined by 100,000.

On the jobs side of the picture, the Labor Dept. said that "all major industry divisions except con-

280,000 Members In New Unit

By Duane Emme

Chicago—Four of America's oldest labor organizations have merged into a new United Transportation Union "to meet the demands of these times" in representing men who move the nation's trains.

Formation of the 280,000-member union, effective Jan. 1, was announced here jointly by presidents of the Railroad Trainmen, Firemen & Enginemen, Switchmen's union and Conductors & Brakemen.

They released figures showing that members of their unions voted overwhelmingly for the merger in a two-month referendum—and they explained the importance of the action.

The Trainmen voted 86 percent in favor of the merger, the Firemen & Enginemen 96 percent, the Switchmen 69 percent, and the Conductors & Brakemen 75 percent.

All of the unions, except the ORC&B, are members of the AFL-CIO and the UTU has asked for affiliation with the federation. It also expects to affiliate with the Canadian Labor Congress for 30,000 members in Canada.

Under the merger agreement, UTU's president is Charles Luna, who has served since 1963 as head of BRT, the largest of the four merging unions. Heads of the three other merging unions will take offices as assistant presidents at the new union's headquarters in Cleveland. They are H. E. Gilbert, BLF&E; Neil P. Speirs, Switchmen; and Clyde F. Lane, ORC&B.

Meany Pledges Cooperation:

Nixon Picks Shultz As Labor Secretary

By David L. Perlman

Pres.-Elect Richard M. Nixon turned to the academic world to pick a Secretary of Labor who, he said, "has demonstrated in his mediation capacities that he can gain the confidence of both labor and business."

His choice to "speak for labor" in the Nixon Cabinet is George P. Shultz, 48-year-old economist and dean of the Graduate School of Business at the University of Chicago.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent a letter of congratulations and a pledge of cooperation to Shultz.

The Labor Dept. has always had the support of the trade union movement in carrying out its mandate to promote the welfare of wage earners and improve working conditions, Meany said.

"We in the AFL-CIO look forward to working closely with you and your associates in the achievement of those objectives."

New NLRB Count Hits J. P. Stevens

J. P. Stevens & Co., Inc., major supplier of textile goods to the U.S. government, deliberately reduced the flow of cotton into a company warehouse to give itself an excuse for getting rid of union supporters prior to a National Labor Relations Board election, an NLRB aide said.

The ruling, by Trial Examiner Owsley Vose, marked the sixth straight time since 1966 that unfair labor practice charges against the nation's second largest textile maker have been upheld. Two of the

Tax Reform Held Key In Solving Nation's Ills

Tax reform is essential to the massive public investment needed to overcome America's accumulated social and economic problems, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany stresses in an article written for a prestigious academic journal.

The article "Labor Looks at Government Finances," appears in the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

It discusses the impact of the "rapid and radical changes in technology, urban growth and race relations."

It notes the problems created because "millions of people have been leaving depressed rural areas of declining job opportunities to seek their future in the cities. Additional millions have been moving from cities to suburbs. Industry, too, has been leaving the city for suburbs and outlying areas."

The article warns that the public investment in facilities and services—however large it may appear in dollar terms—has not been adequate to meet the backlog of needs and keep up with rapid changes.

As a result, Meany points out,

Railway Patrolmen Seal Unity Pact with Clerks

The Railway Patrolmen have completed action on a merger plan that will bring the union into the Railway Clerks as an autonomous section of BRC's Allied Services Division.

Under the merger, effective Jan. 1, the Patrolmen will be in seven locals of exclusive membership within the division. The union now has about 2,000 members in 52 locals holding 65 contracts with U.S. railroads.

The Patrolmen's convention in Portland, Ore., in October approved the merger plan and instructed its executive board to work out details to effectuate the merger.

BRC Pres. C. L. Dennis and Patrolmen's Pres. William J. Ryan announced in Washington that the board completed this process in meetings held in Chicago Dec. 5 and 6.

Details of the merger were negotiated by the board in conferences with L. E. Dennis, BRC's administrative coordinator and W. J. Donlon, the union's general counsel.

Under the merger agreement, Ryan will become a vice president in the BRC division. The Patrol-

Appeals Court Upholds Name-and-Address Rule

The right of the National Labor Relations Board and federal courts to require an employer to furnish a name-and-address list of his workers in advance of an NLRB election has been affirmed by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Three judges of the New York-based court, saying they disagreed with a contrary ruling by the 1st Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston, upheld a lower court ruling requiring Beech-Nut Life Savers, Inc., to provide a list of its salesmen and their addresses to the Office & Professional Employes, Local 153.

The decision was the second in which appeals courts have disagreed with the Boston ruling. The NLRB is carrying the latter decision to the Supreme Court, which recently agreed to hear arguments for and against.

The refusal of Beech-Nut to give the NLRB an address list has prevented the holding of an election for more than two years. Further delay is ahead for the union and its prospective members if the company files another appeal.

The union lost a first election held July 20, 1966, one day after Beech-Nut gave the NLRB the names of eligible voters but not their addresses.

OPEIU Local 153 filed objections to the election because the company had not complied with the board's so-called "Excelsior" rule on names and addresses. The NLRB regional director set aside the election and ordered a new one. Beech-Nut called the Excelsior rule improper and continued its refusal to supply names and addresses.

The judges in the latest case, rejecting company arguments, held that the Excelsior rule was not adopted in violation of the Administrative Procedures Act requiring extensive hearings before a new rule is set. It was on this procedural ground that the 1st Circuit judges had refused to enforce the rule.

The Excelsior rule and the subpoenas issued under it, the 2nd Circuit Court said, are "designed to assist the board in fulfilling its statutory duties to investigate questions of representation and to supervise representation elections. . . .

"An employer-furnished list supplied the day before an election does not provide adequate time for fair scrutiny and appraisal. . . . Accuracy, completeness, and opportunity for scrutiny are all necessary if the policies underlying the Excelsior rule are to be fulfilled."

Utility Workers Vote on Con Ed Offer in N.Y.

New York—Members of Utility Workers Local 1-2 were to vote Dec. 13 on an improved contract offer aimed at ending the strike called Dec. 1 by the 20,000 employes of the Consolidated Edison Co.

The strikers will ballot all that day on acceptance or rejection of a proposal recommended by local union officers. The latter "strongly urged" membership approval of a contract they called the "best in the utility industry."

The new offer contains improvements in three areas stressed by members—vacations, Sunday premium pay, and pensions.

Con Ed now proposes to pay all pension costs except for a 25 percent deduction, instead of the current 50 percent, from Social Security benefits. It offers paid vacations of three weeks after 7 years of service, four after 17, five after 25 years, with one extra day per year in between. For all Sunday work it offers to pay time and a half instead of the present time and a quarter.

All other terms of the rejected contract remain unchanged. They include wage increases ranging from $17 to $48 a week; increased progression pay and holiday pay, plus complete insurance coverage for workers and their families.

The new proposal calls for a contract expiration date of Mar. 10, 1971. If members vote to ratify, the first shifts will return to work Dec. 14, and the others Dec. 16.

Lagging Revenues:

States, Cities Financial Woes Stem from Unfair Taxes

Almost every state and city faces a financial crisis. Their revenues come nowhere near meeting the costs of their operations and the needs of their citizens.

The financial crisis is laid to inadequate taxes. And the answers are not in more taxes so much as more effective use of state and local income taxes, writes Arnold Cantor in the December issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO magazine.

Income taxes are the fairest and best revenue-producers available to the state and local governments, says the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research economist. Yet most states make only a token effort to tax incomes. Their main source of revenue is in sales and property taxes.

The states rely largely on sales taxes and local governments depend almost entirely on property taxes, Cantor notes, while income taxes play a rather small role in underpinning their finances.

"Currently, only $8 billion of state and local government revenue is raised through individual and corporate income taxes, compared to $26 billion levied on property and $21 billion on sales to consumers."

"This extraordinarily heavy reliance upon sales and property taxes," Cantor comments, "is one of the keys to why state and local revenues have failed to grow in line with needs."

Both of these taxes are unfair because they put the heaviest burden on low- and middle-income groups, he says.

Compared with income taxes which tend to grow at a faster rate than the economy—as employment, personal income and profits rise—sales and property tax revenues grow at a much slower pace. For that reason local and state governments have repeatedly had to increase tax rates and adopt new taxes over the last 15 years. Cantor points out that between 1959 and 1967 states alone have enacted 258 major increases and adopted 24 major new taxes.

The federal government has proved the effectiveness of income taxes which account for four-fifths of its tax collections. Since World War II, it has been able to reduce tax rates and yet support substantial increases in domestic and defense spending. At the same time, the national debt grew only 20 percent, and actually fell sharply in comparison to the nation's wealth, Cantor reports.

He further notes that in 1964 "America's federal taxpayers received the largest tax cut in history and yet federal revenues actually increased with the growth of employment, profits and personal incomes."

General and selective sales taxes, Cantor points out, account for 60 percent of all state tax revenue, as 44 states—encompassing all but 2 percent of the U.S. population—now collect sales taxes.

The rates range from 2 percent in six states to 6 percent in Pennsylvania. In most states, the rates are 3 percent or higher.

Some states depend on sales tax more heavily than others. Illinois, Nevada and Washington look to consumer sales for more than 80 percent of their tax take, while Alaska, Delaware, Minnesota, Oregon and Wisconsin rely on sales taxes for less than one-third of their total revenue.

Families of low and moderate means are hit hardest by a sales tax because they must spend most of their income on their needs and virtually all of it is taxed.

But for the wealthy, Cantor notes, a relatively smaller part of their income must be consumed and their sales tax bite is much less compared to their ability to pay.

A number of states have moved to ease this burden by exempting food and medicines from sales taxes. Currently 14 states do not levy taxes on food and 22 fully or partially exempt prescription drugs.

Local governments depend on property taxes for 87 percent of their tax revenue, according to the article.

Like sales taxes, property taxes fall hardest on those least able to pay, Cantor notes, since rent or payments on a home take a large chunk of a low or a moderate income.

Because the property tax is the single most important revenue source for cities, it must support most public education outlays and also pay for such other community services as police and fire protection and sanitation.

Cities must pay more for services than the suburbs, Cantor notes, citing a report of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. And since education must compete for the same tax dollar, it suffers in the inner city.

"Among the nation's 37 largest metropolitan areas, the suburbs spent $146 per capita on education and $132 per person for police and fire protection, sanitation and the like.

"At the same time, these non-educational functions cost $232 per person in the center city and only $99 was spent on education. Where educational improvements are needed the most and the tax base weakest, the competition for available funds is the greatest," Cantor observes.

He points out that most of the states that use some form of income tax either levy a flat rate on personal income or the rate stops at $10,000. This means a family earning $8,000 a year pays about the same percentage as one making $100,000.

At the local level, income taxation is common in only five states—Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Ohio and Pennsylvania, Cantor reports. And only a few cities outside these states levy income taxes.

Since most of these taxes are flat-rate systems, they are nothing more than wage taxes. Usually, they do not tax income from dividends, sales of stock or other capital gains. In many ways, these income taxes are no more fair than sales tax or property tax, Cantor comments.

He suggests that states and local governments "focus more on progressive income taxes based on ability to pay and limit their present reliance on sales and property taxes."

He also recommends more cooperation from the federal government to meet the problems and needs of the states, cities, counties and townships.

"Most important, the federal government through grants-in-aid will have to continue to expand its role as anchor man in federal-state-local financial partnerships." he concludes.

New Rallying Cry Stirs Far Right—'Eat Grapes'

The American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Right to Work Committee and the John Birch Society have called on their members to eat all the California grapes they can stuff down.

The goal is to break the AFL-CIO United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, whose national boycott of struck California table grapes has the solid support of the trade union movement and the endorsement of leading church groups.

At the Kansas City convention of the Farm Bureau, Pres. Charles B. Shuman called for a counter-boycott of food stores which have stopped carrying California grapes.

"Buy and eat grapes and have some on your table for Christmas," Shuman urged delegates.

The pitch to the conservative big farmers' establishment was that organization of grape workers in California would spread to farm workers elsewhere.

Posters in the convention hall warned, "Grapes today—bread tomorrow." The head of the California Farm Bureau reported on the "almost traumatic experience" of union organizing and passed out baskets of grapes to the delegates.

Local chapters of the John Birch Society have held "counter-picketing" demonstrations to try to nullify protests against the sale of California grapes.

And the National Right to Work Committee has a leaflet it is passing out which terms the grape boycott a weapon to bring about "compulsory unionism."

It says grape pickers are really well off and are covered by "more protective laws than farm workers in any other state."

What the "work" committee doesn't mention is that the farm workers aren't covered by a law giving them the right to union organization and collective bargaining.

Sixth Union-Busting Case:

New NLRB Finding Scores J. P. Stevens

NLRB rulings have been sustained by the U.S. Supreme Court. Three company appeals still wait to be ruled on by other U.S. appeals courts.

Vose concluded after hearing the latest charges that Stevens "deliberately changed its past methods of doing business so as to be able to reduce the volume of cotton moving" into and out of the company's Black Hawk warehouse at Greenville, S.C. The purpose, he found, was "to have an excuse for laying off a substantial number of the group of employes which . . . the company had heard contained the largest number of union supporters, namely the warehouse employes."

The examiner recommended that 17 warehouse employes, whom he held to have been unlawfully discharged, should be reinstated—all of them with backpay except three who were laid off after the election.

Challenges to ballots cast by the 14 should be overruled, Vose said. He advised the NLRB to open and count the ballots; to certify TWUA as the bargaining agent for warehouse employes if it wins a majority of the valid votes cast; and if it does not get a majority, that the election be set aside and a new election ordered.

Vose's report will go to the NLRB for review if the company files exceptions, as it has in the five preceding cases. The first two of five NLRB findings against Stevens were refused review by the Supreme Court.

Workers unlawfully fired by Stevens in the first two cases have collected $666,895 in backpay to date. Stevens' union-busting policies have prevented any successful union organization in the past. TWUA Pres. William Pollock predicted that the Black Hawk workers will give TWUA its first "foothold" in the Stevens chain.

Stevens management started its union-busting tactics when it learned in the fall of 1967 that its warehouse employes were interested in joining the Textile Workers Union of America, the examiner reported.

Though its Black Hawk warehouse was only about half full in September of 1967, Stevens "commenced consigning the great bulk of its shipments" from cotton states to an independently-owned public warehouse in Greenville, thence to its cloth-making plants.

That month Stevens consigned 73 of the 88 carloads of cotton shipped from the South to Greenville for warehousing at the independent warehouse, the examiner related.

Policy Changed

"Earlier in 1966 and 1967, almost all the cars placed at the [independent] warehouse had originally been consigned to Black Hawk. However, apparently realizing that it did not make sense to consign cotton to Commodity [the independent warehouse] when it had plenty of space available at Black Hawk, and when its own warehouse staff was comparatively idle, Stevens had 37 of the 73 cars originally consigned to Commodity" switched to its own warehouse, the examiner related.

The remaining 38 cars comprised a "significantly larger number of cars than Stevens had previously had Commodity handle," Vose said, citing the record of shipments. Next Stevens increased its use of warehouses at Gulfport and Clarksdale, Miss., instead of Black Hawk, and at the same time laid off 20 Black Hawk employes to bring the warehouse workers to 28—a reduction in force of unprecedented size.

And just before the eligibility period for voting in the NLRB election expired, Stevens hired three new shop employes, Vose noted. The shop employes, who repair equipment, are mainly white and the warehouse workers predominantly black, according to the report.

An NLRB agent who conducted the representation election at Greenville challenged the ballots cast by 14 of the laid-off employes, and thus prevented the union from claiming a majority.

Tax Reform Held Key In Solving Nation's Ills

education and public transportation have deteriorated in large cities, air and water pollution have become major problems, housing for the lower income families has been grossly inadequate. And a significant minority of the nation has had little share of national prosperity.

Can the states, cities and private industry overcome these problems?

Meany thinks not. They can help, he says; they can do more than they have done. But, he adds:

"The key to the national complex of social and economic problems is federal government policy, funds and planned programs over the next 10 to 20 years—with state and local government initiative and additional funds to carry through the nationwide efforts at the local level."

Meany emphasizes labor's position that the government must be:

- "The employer of last resort—to create jobs for the unemployed and seriously underemployed in providing needed public services.
- "The landlord of last resort—to build and rehabilitate housing that poor people can afford."

But can the government, itself, afford this?

Yes, Meany insists. The growth in the national economy will generate additional revenue. But, he stresses, to gain continued public support for heavy federal expenditures, the public must be convinced of the fairness of the taxation system.

The fact is that we don't have an equitable tax system, even though it is superior to most state and local tax structures.

Specifically, Meany proposes "elimination of those gross inequities that impose full tax rates on workers' earnings while there are various loopholes that permit wealthy people and corporations to escape payment of full tax rates and, in some cases, to escape from paying any federal taxes at all."

He calls also for reform of state and local tax policies, consolidation of small local government jurisdictions and a federal tax credit for state income tax payments to encourage states to base taxation on ability to pay.

Meany firmly rejects the conservative call for "no strings" handover of federal money to the states. "Since unconditional grants would not be tied to specific programs, there is no assurance they would not be used for less urgent or even wasteful purposes," he notes. Nor could enforcement of federal civil rights or labor standards be assured.

Genuine problems resulting from uncoordinated grant programs can be overcome by less drastic remedies, Meany suggests.

Basically, his article insists, "America has the manpower, skills and productive ability to achieve solutions" to the nation's problems.

Rail Patrolmen Seal Merger With Clerks

men's Sec.-Treas. L. Powell will become a member of the division's board of trustees.

In announcing the merger, Ryan said: "We are very happy with the negotiated agreement, which brings our members into a large and effective union."

Stressing that the need for mergers among transportation unions has been apparent for many years, he added that he was "proud that the Railway Patrolmen have taken this forward step" with the Railway Clerks.

In welcoming the Patrolmen into the Railway Clerks, Dennis said he was certain that the union's members will find their new union "hospitable and beneficial."

Separate Contracts

A very important point in the merger plan, he explained, is "that the existing craft and class lines for Patrolmen will be continued, and there will be maintenance of separate agreements."

There also will be maintenance of separate seniority, promotion rights, bargaining rights and responsibilities, jurisdiction rights and craft and class determinations, Dennis added.

He expressed hope that the merger "will demonstrate that large and small unions can join together on an equitable and workable basis."

Like Ryan, Dennis emphasized that "unions in the transportation industry need merger. Our members are calling for it all over the United States and Canada."

"The merger trend is clearly at hand in railway labor, and our union expects to play a major role in developing a situation in which there are fewer, but better unions to represent the needs of the employes," he concluded.

Dock Workers Reject Final Offer Under T-H

Union longshoremen voted by a 13-1 margin in a National Labor Relations Board referendum to reject "final offers" of their employers in 1968 contract bargaining.

The vote, conducted under Taft-Hartley injunction procedures, removed legal barriers to a walkout by some 60,000 ILA members Dec. 20. The NLRB gave the vote results as 14,359 against the offers, 1,112 in favor, out of 30,859 eligible dockworkers.

Mediator David L. Cole, head of the Presidential Inquiry Board in the contract dispute, summoned the negotiators to the New Yorker Hotel to resume bargaining. The ILA wage scale committee met with Cole's panel before resuming talks with New York Shipping Association representatives Dec. 12.

ILA Pres. Thomas L. Gleason told reporters that a settlement still is possible, and that "a strike no one really wants can be averted." But the employer associations will have to show more evidence of their good-faith bargaining intentions than they have in the past, Gleason said.

The ILA and its locals from Searsport, Me., to Miami, and from New Orleans to Brownsville, Tex., insist on major improvements in these areas, Gleason said:

- The size of the money "package."
- Containerization and resultant job losses.
- Work rules in New York, the biggest ILA port.
- Pension benefits.
- A master contract for all ports, and settlement of local issues in each ILA port.

Dock workers struck after their contracts expired Sept. 30 without any acceptable employer offers. Pres. Johnson halted the strike when the three-member inquiry board reported that it would imperil the U.S. economy and the national defense effort if it continued.

ILA members returned to work in compliance with an 80-day court order while negotiations resumed under supervision of the Cole panel.

The rejected offers of employers—in all ports except in the lower Gulf of Mexico—were for hourly wage increases of $1.01 over three years in annual steps of 48, 30 and 23 cents; a guaranteed work year of 2,080 hours starting next Apr. 1, and a $300 monthly pension benefit at age 62 after 25 years of service.

In five ports, longshoremen had the alternative of voting for a two-year offer with lower wage increases—63 cents. The ports were Boston, Providence, New York, Philadelphia and Hampton Roads, Va. They turned down the offers in those ports, and also in all others—Searsport and Portland, Me.; Baltimore; Miami and Port Everglades, Fla.; Burnside, La., and nine South Atlantic ports in North and South Carolina, Florida and Georgia.

Court Rebuffs NLRB In Bid to Bar Picketing

Los Angeles—The Service Employes were acting lawfully when they picketed a maintenance firm at Los Angeles Intl. Airport to protest wage-cutting, a U.S. District Court ruled here.

Judge William Gray turned down a petition by the National Labor Relations Board's general counsel for a Section 10(l) Taft-Hartley injunction against SEIU Local 399.

SEIU Pres. David Sullivan said that, while federal District Court judges seldom refuse a 10(l) injunction petition against a union under the Taft-Hartley law, "this case indicates that upon a clear showing that a union is protesting unfair cutting of standards, a District Court can refuse a restraining order" for good cause.

Local 399 since last May 1 has been picketing the City Building Maintenance Co. at the United Air Lines terminal to call public attention to the fact that the firm pays its employes at least 50 cents an hour less than union janitors at other airport locations.

The picketing started when UAL changed its policy of signing contracts with maintenance firms that preserved AFL-CIO contract standards. For many years, SEIU said, area wages and conditions had been provided in United maintenance contracts but the new contractor signed with a local of the expelled Teamsters.

When picketing began, the NLRB counsel applied for an injunction on the ground that the picketing grew out of a jurisdictional dispute with Teamsters Local 986.

After a hearing in which the SEIU produced evidence that the contractor and United Air Lines were undercutting the standards won after many years of effort by AFL-CIO unions, the court dismissed the NLRB petition.

Local 399 officers testified that for a number of years the union's jurisdiction had been disputed by one Anthony Doria, claiming to represent a union which signed contracts with several maintenance firms. When Doria left the maintenance scene after a long fight, the firms that had done business with him switched to the Teamsters.

The picketing at the United terminal, and the battle for fair wages and conditions will continue, SEIU said.

Bert Jewell Dies; Rail Union Leader

Kansas City, Kan. — Bert M. Jewell, 87, president of the former AFL Railway Employes Dept. for nearly a quarter of a century, died at a rest home here. He retired from the position in 1946.

Jewell, a longtime leader in the Boilermakers, also headed the negotiating committee of the nonoperating unions for many years, and represented rail unions at international labor meetings.

Merger on Track

THE MERGER of four railroad operating unions into a single union is an historic step in the evolution of the trade union movement in this country and reflects once again the ability of unions to change with economic conditions and the needs of their members.

The nation's railroads over the last decade have waged a lavishly financed, bitter attack on the rail unions. Combined with a sharp increase in automation the attack has left a string of casualties in its wake and the realization by the rail operating unions that only in unity would they find the strength to continue to represent their members effectively.

The four unions—Trainmen, Firemen & Enginemen, Conductors & Brakemen and Switchmen—have joined together in a new union, the United Transportation Union, after approving referendum votes of their memberships.

The men who run the trains will now speak with a single voice, a strong voice, reflecting the ability of the trade union movement to adapt to the needs of the nation's workers.

Reagan's Economy

THE BASIC PROBLEM at San Francisco State College is that Gov. Reagan's "economy" has so stripped it of funds that it can with difficulty do the job of education it was set up to do. One department, for instance, ran out of mimeograph paper some weeks before the end of last semester and there was no replacement to be had until the next budget. Damaged equipment, as well as exhausted supplies, cannot be replaced until the next miserly budget comes along.

Under such bare-bones financing, the college has no money to react to the emergencies, to answer the new situations which protest has forced upon it and which demand an answer. The answer—were the governor to allow the money for it—would be better education, better orientation toward minority-majority relationships, specifically better education in the field of minority studies. We note that Laney College can set up a black studies program, but San Francisco State is still trying.

Neither the governor nor that fantastic rightwinger Maxwell Rafferty (the only man in public life who can successfully combine a smile and a sneer) notes this grievous financial lack in pronouncements about San Francisco State. They talk only of force, ignoring the causes of the problem.

But the two San Francisco State presidents who have resigned this year have called attention forcefully to the financial shackles in which Reagan "economy" has placed them. Pres. Robert Smith noted "desperate limitations in financial resources" against previous college commitments, "rigid controls on the available resources" and "inability to obtain relief from financial crisis" as reasons for his resignation.

This is not to condone the tactics of the demonstrators, but the point is that "economy" has so hamstrung the college that it cannot react adequately to the crisis.

Reagan would use force alone, spending on it money he will not make available for better education.

That will enhance his image with the hardline voters.

But it will not cure the underlying cause of San Francisco State's problem.

Another Golden Spike

NAACP Warns:

Voice of Most Negroes Muted By Clatter of Black Extremists

The following is excerpted from an editorial in the November 1968 issue of The Crisis, official publication of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

THE DEEPENING SCHISM within the Negro community over tactics and goals, gleefully fostered and distorted by insensitive and irresponsible news media, is headed toward a major internal crisis requiring each of us to stand up and be counted.

Differences among black folk in this country are not new, but a new ingredient has been added—the attempt by a small minority of black extremists to force compliance with its views and tactics. This nihilistic minority professes disdain for all "white" values while at the same time invoking and utilizing, as instruments of controversy, the worst practices of the most benighted stratum of white society, to wit, obscene name-calling, threats, intimidation, suppression of opposing views and violence.

The emergence of this swaggering band of black extremists demanding abandonment of democratic methods and goals and a reversal of the trend toward integration must be met head-on by the vast majority of Negroes who reject the minority's tactics and goals. To be sure, the new mood has been generated by white America's historic racism. In turn, the new black mood nurtures further white racism.

On our part, as on the part of white folk, there is urgent need for strong and unequivocal reaffirmation of our commitment to the democratic processes as a means of attaining, here in our homeland, full, equal and unfettered rights for America's 22 million black folk. This means a repudiation of the nihilism of the extremists who are shrilly and insistently espousing apartheid; racism, including anti-Semitism; intimidation and violence.

Most fatuous of the extremists' exhortations is the call for "black revolution"—the seizure of power by the Negro minority. Any revolution remotely possible in this country at this time would not be one that advances the position and cause of Negroes. Rather it would be a revolution of the Right suppressing not only the black community but also curtailing the basic liberties of the total society.

Repeated surveys and polls by reputable and impartial opinion testers show that this minority misrepresents the true views and aspirations of the majority of the nation's Negro population.

A September 1968 survey by the Columbia Broadcasting System found that the "greater majority of Negroes still want integration and want to achieve equality through legal means. Only a very small minority of Negroes approve of violent tactics, 9 out of 10 in the survey expressing disapproval of violence to achieve equality."

Notwithstanding the evidence that the Negro masses remain committed to the program and tactics which have brought substantial gains in the struggle for equality, the voices within the Negro community which publicly express this majority view have been few and, often, lonely. Partly this has been because of a tendency on the part of the news media to by-pass spokesmen for the majority and to project the minority spokesmen as the authentic voices of the Negro community.

There is the additional factor that responsible leaders who speak out against the extremists have been subjected to threats of violence. Moreover, Negro leaders have traditionally been reluctant to speak out publicly in opposition to other black spokesmen.

BUT THE TIME has come for speaking out loud and clear lest the entire race be branded as hatemongers, segregationists, advocates of violence, and worse. The silent majority must let its views be known not merely in polls but also in print, on the rostrum, and via radio and television.

The time for silence or muted voices is past. The extremists must be answered promptly and forthrightly in the name of the majority. Their racism and anti-Semitism condemned and repudiated. The infantilism of their "governments-in-exile" exposed and scorned. Their advocacy of Jim Crowism rejected as retrogressive. Their suicidal call for violence disavowed.

Let it be known that the preachers of hate, the defeatists afraid to compete in the open market, the name callers who substitute epithets and slogans for reason, the exhorters who summon Negro youth to death in futile shoot-outs with the police and the military—let it be known that these media-created "leaders" are not our spokesmen.

Dissent, protest and militancy, yes. Intimidation, disruption, suppression of free speech, extremism and violence, no!

The time to speak up in no uncertain terms, to rally the silent black majority to a constructive program of responsible militancy and resistance to extremism, is now. Tomorrow may be too late.

Analyzing the Vote:

New Deal Coalition, Less South, Very Much Alive in '68 Election

The following is excerpted from an article in the December 1968 AFL-CIO Federationist by John M. Barry, "The 1968 Elections and Beyond."

WHILE PRECINCT BY PRECINCT breakdowns of the vote remain to be analyzed, it was clear that Vice Pres. Humphrey scored heavily among city dwellers, workers and the ethnic minorities. The Columbia Broadcasting System, on the basis of results in sample precincts, found Humphrey ahead in all cities with his margin varying directly with the size of the populace.

CBS credited Humphrey with 59 percent of the vote in cities of 500,000 or more against 34 percent for Nixon and 7 percent for Wallace. In cities of 50,000 to 500,000, the analysis showed the Democrat getting 51 percent of the vote to 40 percent for Nixon and 9 percent for Wallace. In smaller cities, the indication was 46 percent for Humphrey, 45 percent for Nixon and 8 percent for Wallace. Nixon was the favorite in the suburbs, with 51 percent to Humphrey's 40 and Wallace's 9, and in the small towns and rural areas, with 48 percent to 37 percent for the Democrat and 16 percent for Wallace.

Even so, the results in the cities were spotty. Big Humphrey pluralities in New York City and Philadelphia, for example, gave him the margins he needed to carry New York state and Pennsylvania. But the Democratic vote in Chicago was well below what Kennedy polled in 1960 when he barely carried Illinois. This time the state went to the Republicans.

The CBS analysis crediting Humphrey with 59 percent of the vote in the largest cities compares with 63.5 percent for Kennedy in 1960. The dropoff, however, was much less than the Democrats suffered in the country as a whole.

Among minorities, CBS found Humphrey scoring 78 percent in Mexican-American precincts and 79 percent in Negro ghetto areas. A sampling by the National Broadcasting Co. found the vote for Humphrey to be even higher in all-black precincts, averaging somewhat more than 90 percent.

Thus the old coalition of workers, minorities, liberals and big city organizations that has formed the core of Democratic strength since New Deal days was still very much alive. The one element that deserted the party in the 1968 election was the South, increasingly a bastion of conservatism, where Humphrey managed to carry only Texas.

One factor that may have been critical in denying Humphrey the victory was the decline in the percentage of eligible voters who went to the polls. The total vote for the presidency, now estimated at 72 million, was itself a record, but because of population growth it represented only about 60 percent of the eligible vote compared with 62.1 percent in 1964 and 63.2 percent in 1960.

In Illinois, which proved to be a pivotal state, the actual vote total this year was less than in the two previous presidential elections. A bigger vote ordinarily could be expected to benefit the Democrats and this year it could have meant the difference for Humphrey.

Analysts will be arguing for months, too, over the "spoiler" role played by Wallace, the candidate of the American Independent Party. Wallace succeeded in having himself listed on the ballots of all 50 states and the question remained: Whom did he hurt most—Nixon or Humphrey?

It is conceivable that had Wallace not been a candidate, Nixon might have carried some of the strongly conservative southern states that went to the former Alabama governor. On the other hand, a shift of just a percentage point or two might have given Humphrey some of the closely contested northern states he lost. New Jersey Gov. Richard Hughes, for one, was emphatic in blaming the Wallace candidacy for the Democrats' failure to take his state. Nixon's plurality over Humphrey in New Jersey was only 53,000, whereas Wallace received about 260,000 for 9.1 percent of the total.

From his own standpoint, however, the election produced only failure for Wallace. In the campaign, he had talked boldly of actual victory, but his realistic objective was to win enough electoral votes to deny a majority to either of the two major contenders and thus establish a bargaining position from which he could seek a deal on federal appointments and policies.

IT WAS clear, too, that a good showing for Wallace outside the South would have given him a national base on which to build for a new challenge in 1972. He failed to achieve any of these goals and emerged from the election as no more than a sectional candidate whose racist-oriented appeal was taken seriously only by the hard-core radical right.

Wallace carried only five states with 45 electoral votes—Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana and Mississippi. Three of them were among the four that went for Dixiecrat Strom Thurmond and his States' Rights Party in 1948 and four were among the six states that backed Goldwater in 1964.

Outside the South, Wallace's share of the popular vote ran less than 10 percent, hitting such low points as 1.4 percent in Hawaii, 1.7 percent in Maine, 5.2 percent in New York and 6.8 percent in California.

He ran poorly even with working-class voters among whom he had hoped to pile up his strongest support in the North.

The CBS sample precinct analysis showed that Wallace's strongest showing was in rural and small town areas, where he drew 16 percent of the vote. His main strength, CBS found, was among farm whites and this came mostly in the South.

Wallace's failure to do well among workers was credited by most observers to a vigorous campaign by organized labor that succeeded in exposing the fraudulent nature of Wallace's claims to be a friend of the working man and his links to ultra-rightwing, anti-union extremists.

In Textile Industry:

Anti-Union Conspiracy in South Seen Blocking Workers' Rights

A "CONSPIRACY" among Southern textile employers, police, courts and prominent law firms blocks workers there from enjoying "cultural, educational and health standards" equal to those elsewhere in the nation.

That charge was leveled by Sol Stetin, secretary-treasurer of the Textile Workers Union of America on the network radio interview, Labor News Conference, broadcast Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on the Mutual Radio.

Stetin said the aim of the conspirators is to "thwart unionism" in the South. He cited maneuvers to delay final disposition of National Labor Relations Board cases as one often-used tactic. He said the Deering-Milliken case, now in its 12th year, and the five-year fight of the J. P. Stevens & Co. against the union, are examples of the "constant delays" workers and their unions face.

The union official said that an employer often doesn't worry about the eventual outcome of a case if, in the meantime, he can keep the workers from organizing a union. "He doesn't care if five years later he has to reinstate" workers fired during an organizing drive, "because in the meantime, the rest of the workers are terrorized and intimidated," he asserted.

THE EMPLOYERS, he said, "dominate" the southern textile communities, just as they did the "steel towns, and the automobile factories, and the rubber communities and the mines in the old days."

But, he said, more than the lag of wages and incomes is involved. He pointed out that since workers in the South are denied industrial democracy, they don't have political democracy.

"And because they don't have political democracy, they don't enjoy social democracy."

Stetin said that the best way to ease the plight of southern workers is to strengthen the NLRB and speed up its procedures.

Reporters questioning him were Murray Seeger of the Los Angeles Times and Neil Gilbride of the Associated Press.

ONE OF THE MANY ISSUES facing the incoming Nixon Administration is housing, particularly low-income housing.

The civil disorders of 1967 and 1968 and the constant threat of more disorders in blight-ridden, decaying central cities makes this a problem of extreme urgency. And housing is closely related to the searing sores of race relations.

Simply put, the housing supply—for low-income families, especially—is pitifully inadequate in both quantity and quality. Public and private housing over the years just has not kept up with the need.

In full awareness of this, Pres. Johnson appointed a National Commission on Urban Problems on Jan. 12, 1967. Former Sen. Paul Douglas was named chairman and Pres. John Lyons of the Iron Workers a member.

The President asked the commission to generate "ideas and instruments for a revolutionary improvement in the American city." Congress appropriated funds to carry this out.

The scope of the study included building codes, technology, land use, federal and local and state taxes affecting housing, etc. For six months hearings were conducted in a score of U.S. cities.

The latest report by the Douglas Commission, entitled "More Than Shelter," deals with the social needs in low and moderate income housing. Its 213 pages provide an in-depth view of the dilemma of the urban slums and some suggested courses of action.

What is often forgotten is that public housing had a second and perhaps even more important purpose than shelter. It was a part of the drive against the depression with the emphasis on creating jobs and on pump-priming.

Although in quantity and some quality, public housing has fallen far short of the demands, it has provided important shelter for some low-income families. But in many of the larger cities it has become a part of the urban Negro ghetto and contributes to the alarming trend toward the polarization of the races.

Still, as Douglas pointed out, "public housing throughout the country apparently has suffered unfairly from too much attention to a few bad examples but is generally far superior to the slum housing it replaces."

The Douglas Commission concluded that the greatest shortcoming of public housing has been too little done to strengthen family life and individual behavioral development and almost nothing has been done to foster a sense of community either within the public housing projects or between project tenants and their surrounding neighbors.

The commission concluded that the primary problem with public housing and other federal housing programs is that there has been too little of it.

Until 1966 the average annual production of public housing was approximately 27,000 units; below-market interest rate, moderate-income housing averaged 13,000 or an average total for both types of 40,000 units. Rent supplement allocations exceeded 36,000 within a year and a half after initial authorization although only 1,700 were under payment. And unless Congress increases the authorization, the rent supplement program will be frozen at about 45,000 dwelling units.

To improve the federal effort, the Douglas Commission recommends:

- A vast increase in the production of low and moderate income housing, spread through all parts of metropolitan areas and otherwise designed to avoid economic stratification.
- The fostering of a sense of community.
- The use of a variety of special programs to cope with severe social or economic behavioral problems so that no family need be denied housing—as is now the case in some projects because of such problems.
- Accelerate the use of new approaches to public housing, such as rent supplements, community planning housing, leased housing and new cities.

The Douglas Commission study has merit that deserves serious consideration.

RENEWING THE CHARGE of "conspiracy to thwart unionism" among textile workers in the South was Sol Stetin, center, secretary-treasurer of the Textile Workers Union of America, as he was questioned by Neil Gilbride, left, of the Associated Press and Murray Seeger of the Los Angeles Times on Labor News Conference.

LOCAL TRAINING DIRECTORS of the Lithographers & Photoengravers meet at LPIU headquarters in New York for "a meaningful exchange of their experiences." The union operates training programs in 30 cities, with another seven scheduled to start soon. The international union's education director, William A. Schroeder, is at the center.

Congress, Nixon Urged to Expand Federal Housing, Urban Programs

The National Housing Conference has urged Congress and the new Administration to expand—and fully finance—programs to meet the nation's urban housing needs.

The conference, which has been crusading for slum clearance and decent housing for 37 years, warned that "America's cities are in a crisis resulting from the decay of decades."

Its board of directors, including union housing experts, approved a legislative program calling for construction of 3 million new housing units a year, including 1 million for low and moderate-income families.

It asked for expansion of nearly every phase of the 1968 housing law.

For the new low-income home ownership program, based on federal interest-rate subsidies. It urged authorization to finance 300,000 units a year—up from the present level of 375,000 units over three years.

It asked the same step-up for the similar program involving low-income rental housing.

The conference also proposed a new mortgage financing system to stimulate the rental program. In essence, it would provide a secondary mortgage market for the interest assistance program. The only budget cost would be the difference between the face value of the low-interest mortgages and the discount at which they would be resold to the Federal National Mortgage Association to bring the rate of return up to current market levels.

Increases in public housing, in rent supplements and rehabilitation loans and grants were also urged.

Conference recommendations would also increase funds for the model cities program—both the authorization, which sets a ceiling on the amount that can be appropriated, and the actual appropriations.

The statement noted that Congress appropriated only $200 million of the $400 million for supplemental grants to model cities for the 1968 fiscal year, and only $312 million of the $500 million authorized for the 1969 fiscal year.

Other proposals sought additional funds for urban renewal, mass transportation grants, federal guarantees for new community development, co-op housing assistance, rural and college housing.

The conference noted that Congress last year appropriated only $2 million of the $8 million Pres. Johnson had sought for enforcement of the fair housing provisions of the Civil Rights Act and urged fully adequate appropriation next year.

Housing Conference Pres. Nathaniel S. Keith termed the organization's proposals "essential to help solve human suffering and disillusionment and alleviate the crisis in our cities."

The conference's board of directors includes AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan; Boris Shishkin, secretary of the federation's Housing Committee; Pres. Edward K. Leonard of the Plasterers; L. M. Raftery, president-emeritus of the Painters, and Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Widow Denied Pension On Absence of Contract

New York—A widow's claim for a pension has been ruled illegal because the contribution made by her husband's employer was not covered by a written agreement as required under the Taft-Hartley Act.

The decision came from the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in a case involving Kathleen Moglia, the widow of John J. Moglia; his employer, Elmhurst Contracting Co., Inc. and the pension fund of Teamsters Local 282.

The local's fund was set up in 1955 to cover various employers with collective bargaining agreements, with a clear provision that only union employes covered by contracts could participate in it, the court said.

Despite this, according to the court, Elmhurst, a non-union employer, made payments into the fund on behalf of Moglia and other employes over a period of 11 years, without objections from the fund trustees.

When Moglia retired in 1965, he filed an application for a pension with the fund, which the trustees refused, on advice of counsel, due to the lack of a bargaining agreement with the employer.

In 1966, after he died, his widow was likewise refused a pension and she brought suit to compel the trustees to make payment of the pension.

Mrs. Moglia's claim was denied by the U.S. Southern District Court of New York and the contributions made by Elmhurst on behalf of Moglia and others were returned to the employer.

In upholding the lower court, the Appeals Court said the law's Section 302 clearly requires a written agreement specifying the basis of payments in order for an employer to contribute to a union fund.

"As compelling and as appealing as the claimant's case was," the court concluded, "the structure of the law and intent of Congress preclude any inroads . . . into its specific requirements."

Senator Bartlett Of Alaska Dies

Cleveland—Sen. E. L. Bartlett (D-Alaska), a onetime gold miner, newspaper reporter and one of his state's best known citizens, died here after undergoing surgery for a heart ailment. He was 64.

Bartlett was elected as a delegate to Congress from the territory of Alaska in 1944 and was re-elected for six consecutive terms. When Alaska got statehood, he was elected as one of its first two senators in 1958. He was re-elected in 1960 and 1966.

During his years in Congress, he worked tirelessly for federal programs to aid the territory, and later the state.

struction and government showed seasonally adjusted employment gains."

The strongest increases were in services, up 90,000 to 10.6 million, and in mining, up 48,000 to 638,000. The latter rise was attributed to the end of a bituminous coal strike.

Manufacturing employment increased by 25,000 to 19.8 million. This gain, too, was said to be due to reduced strike activity. Employment increases were particularly noted in the machinery and ordnance industries.

A 20,000 decline in November Construction employment to 3.2 million was "due primarily to bad weather conditions," the department said. Over the year, construction jobs were up by 50,000.

In the government category, an 18,000 drop in jobs reflected the effects of a New York teachers' stayout and a slight drop in federal government employment, according to the department.

November employment figures in other areas, seasonally adjusted, were:

Transportation and utilities, 4.3 million, up 21,000 from October; wholesale and retail trade, 14.3 million, up 8,000; and finance, insurance and real estate, 3.4 million, up 9,000.

The civilian labor force rose to 79 million in November, a gain of 225,000 from October.

In a section on labor force trends in 1968, the bureau noted that the civilian labor force averaged 78.7 million in the first 11 months of this year, an increase of nearly 1.4 million over 1967.

The increase, as broken down, included 500,000 adult men, 725,000 adult women and 125,000 teenagers.

The trends section of the report said the total employment gain over the 11-month period was nearly 1.5 million—550,000 for adult men, 800,000 for adult women and 125,000 for teenagers.

Average unemployment over the period was given as 2,850,000, a reduction of 125,000 from the 1967 average. The 3.6 percent average unemployment rate for January-November 1968 compared with annual average rates of 3.8 percent in 1966 and 1967.

Average weekly hours of work for rank and file workers declined three-tenths of 1 hour in November to 37.4 hours, seasonally adjusted, with nearly all major industry sectors sharing in the workweek reduction.

In the manufacturing, the workweek stood at 40.8 hours, off two-tenths of 1 hour from October but slightly higher than last November.

Average hourly earnings were unchanged in November at $2.92. Because of the drop in the workweek, however, average weekly earnings fell by $1.17 to $109.21 in November. Average weekly earnings were up $5.47 over the year.

Board Aide Raps Sears For Anti-Union Tactics

New York—Management of Sears Roebuck & Co. has been hit with new findings of union-busting tactics by a National Labor Relations Board examiner.

The giant retail store chain was found guilty of firing a supporter of Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store District 65 and threatening others to smash a 1967 organizing campaign at three Sears stores in the Bronx, Manhattan and Mt. Vernon, N.Y.

Trial Examiner Samuel Ross ruled after hearings that management of the three "hard goods" stores not only fired a union committeeman in violation of law but also acted illegally in the following ways:

- Subjecting union committeemen to "corrective" interviews and placing "memoranda of deficiency" in their personnel files to discourage their union activities.
- Threatening employes with discharge and other reprisals to discourage support of the union.
- Promising to correct long-standing grievances and to improve earnings opportunities to deter support of the union.
- Spying on union backers and maintaining an illegal "no solicitation" rule during nonworking time in nonpublic store areas.

Witnesses told the examiner that after the union began organizing "big ticket" salesmen at Sears' Fordham Road store, Charles Sigerson, the company's director of employe relations, came to the Bronx from his headquarters in Philadelphia and conducted a series of meetings with management personnel of the Fordham Road, 31st Street and Mt. Vernon stores.

Other meetings were held by the manager of the three stores at which salesmen were told "they would be better off staying with him than going along with a bunch of outsiders, strangers," the testimony showed.

This was followed by the permanent layoff of a union supporter and other acts the examiner called violations of employes' rights.

Ross recommended that Sears be ordered to reinstate the laid-off employe and to halt its union-busting activities.

Yule Shoppers Reminded To Look for Union Label

There is no finer gift than one which bears the union label, the AFL-CIO reminded shoppers in urging support of labor's Christmas Buying Campaign.

"No other occasion conveys the message of peace and joy better than Christmas; no other purchase expresses belief and sincerity in the union cause like a union product or service," said Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the federation's Union Label & Service Trades Dept. in an annual reminder to unions, central bodies, service trades councils and women's auxiliaries.

Lewis asked not only that union members patronize shops and services carrying the union label but that they make their presence known to sales people. Union buyers, when organized, can be a tremendous force in the community, he said.

Other labor activities during the holiday season include the giving of toys and food baskets to underprivileged families. Major events are scheduled in San Francisco, New York and other cities where children will receive gifts at union-sponsored Christmas parties.

New Cabinet Reflects GOP Mainstream

Nixon Names 12 to Major Federal Posts

inet member is expected to be Robert H. Finch—partly because of his designated post as Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, but particularly because of his close, long-standing personal and political association with Nixon.

Completing the trio of Cabinet members who will be dealing with the nation's most pressing urban problems is Michigan's Gov. George Romney, named to be Secretary of Housing & Urban Development.

Nixon said he chose Romney because of his ability as an administrator and because of his "tremendous missionary zeal about the need to do something about the problems of our cities."

Earlier, however, Nixon had named a Democratic sociologist, Daniel P. Moynihan to direct a new Cabinet-level Council on Urban Affairs. Moynihan is expected to be the "idea man" on urban problems.

Most of those named to the Cabinet have been described as pragmatic, friendly to the concept that private business and the states should play a dominant role in problem-solving, but free of the simplistic belief that the era of big government can be turned back.

Politically, its most conservative members appear to be Maurice H. Stans, who will have less influence on the course of government as Secretary of Commerce than he did during the Eisenhower Administration as budget director, and Melvin R. Laird, Nixon's surprise choice for Secretary of Defense.

Laird, an able, knowledgeable but strongly partisan Republican congressional leader, will administer the government's largest department and the spending of the lion's share of the national budget.

Nixon prides himself on his experience and knowledge in foreign affairs and his choice as Secretary of State is a close personal friend, William P. Rogers, attorney general under Eisenhower.

Nixon said he chose Rogers for his coolness in crisis and because as a negotiator "I would put him up against any man in the world."

His third close associate—making what may become a "kitchen Cabinet"—is his law partner and campaign manager, John N. Mitchell, who will become Attorney General.

Three of the Cabinet members are or have been construction contractors. His choice for Postmaster General, Winton M. Blount, runs one of the South's biggest construction firms as well as heading the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. And both Massachusetts Gov. John A. Volpe and Alaska Gov. Walter J. Hickel—to head the Transportation and Interior departments—have construction backgrounds.

Nixon's Secretary of the Treasury will be a banker, David M. Kennedy, who, Nixon said, combines "a good streak of midwestern conservatism" with "a deep humanitarian concern for the problems of people."

He chose as "an eloquent spokesman" for the farmer University of Nebraska Chancellor Clifford M. Hardin as Secretary of Agriculture.

In his television introduction of Shultz as Secretary of Labor, Nixon said he was searching for a man in the tradition of the late James P. Mitchell.

He said he found such a man in Shultz, "who is a great educator, but more than that he is a man who will speak for labor as did Jim Mitchell, but who also has demonstrated in his mediation capacities that he can gain the confidence of both labor and business."

Nixon said leaders on both sides of the bargaining table "have recognized that here is a man that may be able to mediate some of those devastating labor-management crises before they come to the strikes that paralyze our economy."

Shultz, who has been on leave from the University of Chicago to spend a year at Stanford University's Center for Advanced Studies in the Behavorial Sciences, was not mentioned prominantly in the early speculation about the Cabinet choices.

He was named last month as head of Nixon's task force on manpower and labor-management relations—one of a group set up to identify major problems and make recommendations to the new Administration.

Shultz was considered a knowledgeable expert by those who knew him and there was satisfaction in labor circles that Nixon had not turned to an anti-union conservative to head the task force.

Shultz, who received his doctorate in industrial economics from Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1948, served as senior staff economist for the Council of Economic Advisers during two years of the Eisenhower Administration. He taught at MIT before becoming business school dean at Chicago in 1962.

Descriptions of other Nixon Cabinet selections follow:

Secretary of State—William P. Rogers, 55, served as attorney general and earlier as deputy attorney general under Pres. Eisenhower. His early law career was spent as an assistant district attorney in New York City under Thomas E. Dewey. In the Justice Dept., Rogers helped push through the compromise 1957 Civil Rights Act.

He was a close friend and adviser of Nixon—a friendship dating back to the 1940s.

Rogers served on the U.S. delegation to the United Nations in the 1965 session and heads a prominent law firm.

Secretary of Defense—Melvin R. Laird, at 46, is an eight-term congressman from Wisconsin who ranks high in the Republican leadership as chairman of the House Republican Conference.

As a senior member of the Appropriations Committee, Laird has been hard-working, able and a staunch fiscal conservative. His COPE voting record in the 90th Congress shows him voting against labor's position on every one of 13 key issues.

Secretary of Housing & Urban Development—Michigan Gov. George Romney, 61, is probably the best known personality in the Nixon Cabinet. The former head of the American Motors Co. plunged successfully into Michigan politics with an image of being above the partisan fray. He shunned Barry Goldwater in 1964 and has shown a concern for the problems of the Negro ghetto. But he has hewed to the conservative line on labor issues, where he has denounced the "power" of unions.

Postmaster General—Winton M. Blount, nicknamed "Red," is the 47-year-old president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and his Blount Brothers Corp., at Montgomery, Ala., is one of the South's biggest construction firms. He has worked with union labor and considers himself a businessman, not a politician, although he had a role in the 1960 Nixon campaign.

Secretary of Transportation—Massachusetts Gov. John A. Volpe, 60, owns a multi-million dollar construction business and has won three terms as governor in a normally Democratic but ticket-splitting state. He also served as the nation's first highway administrator under Pres. Eisenhower.

Secretary of the Treasury—David M. Kennedy, 63, is board chairman of the Continental Illinois National Bank—a vice president of the same bank, Robert Mayo, will be director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Kennedy spent most of his career in the Federal Reserve System and is highly regarded by his fellow bankers as a man who stands for "fiscal integrity" but is not a doctrinaire conservative.

Attorney General—Two years ago, Nixon's law firm merged with a firm headed by John N. Mitchell—and the two men hit it off so well that Mitchell became manager of Nixon's presidential campaign. At 55, he is the same age as the President-elect and has been described as "very pragmatic," not committed to any political doctrine.

Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare—Robert H. Finch, California's lieutenant governor, is the youngest man in the cabinet at 43 and the man who has known Nixon longest and has been closest to him. He served as Nixon's administrative assistant from 1958 to 1960 and directed his 1960 campaign.

By contrast to Gov. Ronald Reagan, Finch has been generally labeled a moderate and has shown a concern with job training and race relations problems. His close relationship with Nixon makes it probable that, at least initially, his will be the most influential voice on domestic issues.

Secretary of the Interior—Alaska's Gov. Walter J. Hickel, 49, was chosen, Nixon said, because the post traditionally goes to a westerner and because "he has never been involved in any of the bitter struggles between private and public power . . . or the struggles between some of the western states like Arizona and California over water."

Secretary of Commerce—Maurice H. Stans, 60, was a budget-cutting, conservative budget director during the Eisenhower Administration. He has been praised as a bulwark against inflation and damned as a penny-pincher who hamstrung the nation's economic growth and weakened its defenses.

Secretary of Agriculture — Clifford M. Hardin, 53, is chancellor of the University of Nebraska and former dean of Michigan State University's School of Agriculture. Nixon said his job will be "to speak for the farmers to the President."

Former Labor Dept. Aide Moynihan To Direct Council of Urban Affairs

A new Cabinet-level Council on Urban Affairs will be set up under the Nixon Administration and Daniel P. Moynihan will direct its staff and serve as a high-level presidential adviser.

Moynihan, 41, a Democrat who once wielded a longshoreman's hook, now heads the Harvard University-Massachusetts Institute of Technology Joint Center for Urban Studies.

Moynihan served as an assistant secretary of labor under Arthur J. Goldberg and was praised and damned at the time for his authorship of the Moynihan Report, a controversial study of Negro family life.

Nixon indicated that the council will be a domestic issues counterpart of the National Security Council. Its permanent members will be the secretaries of Health, Education & Welfare, Housing & Urban Development, and Transportation, with the secretaries of Labor, Commerce and Agriculture sitting in "from time to time."

In another major appointment, Nixon designated Robert Mayo, a former career Treasury Dept. official, as director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mayo, 52, is currently a vice president of a Chicago bank. Nixon told newsmen he had picked Mayo because of his interest in urban problems as well as his expertise as an economist.

The President-elect also announced additional appointments to the White House staff, special assistants a step below the principal presidential aides.

In this group was the first Negro appointee announced by Nixon, Robert J. Brown, 33, a North Carolina public relations man who worked on the Nixon campaign. He will devote his primary effort to promoting "black capitalism" projects.

Added to the top-level White House staff was James Keogh, who is on leave of absence as executive editor of Time Magazine.

The President-elect also asked William McChesney Martin to stay on as chairman of the independent Federal Reserve Board. Martin's term does not expire until 1970.

Mayor Washington Stays On in D.C.

A Negro Democrat will remain as mayor of the nation's capital.

Pres.-Elect Nixon announced that he will reappoint Walter E. Washington as mayor-commissioner of the District of Columbia.

He said the mayor has served with "great distinction."

Sec.-Treas. John H. Shepherd, who presently holds that office in BRT, will serve until the new union's first convention in 1971.

At a press conference, Luna stressed that while UTU will be a strong single body with the strength that comes from unity, the individual crafts will keep their identity within the new union.

As the largest union made up entirely of railroad workers, he pointed out, UTU will represent brakemen, conductors, switchmen, firemen and engineers.

Luna said that UTU will press hard for improved wages and benefits for its members, a strong railroad safety law, new mass transportation programs and social measures to benefit all workers and all Americans.

Railroad managements should welcome the merger, he noted, because it will make negotiations more expedient. At the same time, he served notice on the carriers that UTU will seek "innovation in the industry."

"Railroads have followed the old ways too long," Luna declared. "Just because the tracks lie still and never move is no reason to turn the industry into stagnation."

In a joint statement, the merging unions' presidents said that "This shrinking industry no longer makes it possible for the traditional individual unions to meet the demands of the times."

Unification, they said, will end "the battle of craft against craft" and bring the combined strength of rail operating employes together for constructive purposes.

"We have united," they continued, "to provide a way for transportation workers to join and find common solutions to the problems of the working man, the public and the industry."

The amalgamation brings closer to fulfillment a dream described by Eugene V. Debs before the turn of the century. As a locomotive fireman, he attempted organization of all rail workers into one union. His advice went unheeded, however, and unions multiplied on the railroads in the 1900s. It was not until the late 1950s that rail unions began to explore mergers. Currently, there is a strong merger movement also going on among non-operating employes.

The merger of the four operating unions goes back to January of this year when their presidents met in Cleveland and agreed on the basic need for a single organization. Four top officers—one from each union—worked out preliminary merger procedures.

This committee was composed of Switchmen's Sec.-Treas. Daniel W. Collins, ORC&B Vice Pres. W. W. Carson, and M. W. Hampton and Lou Chester, assistants to the presidents of the BLF&E and BRT, respectively. In May, each of the unions sent a 10-man committee to Hot Springs, Ark., where the 40-man group labored for nearly five months on the language of the merger agreement and the constitution.

Once the documents were worked out, they were submitted to the governing bodies of each union and then sent out to all rank and file members for their vote during October and November.

Luna praised the work of the union officers and committees, pointing out that "they are the architects of this historic occasion. They toiled long, hard hours to bring out a plan in really a short time—only nine months."

When a reporter asked each of the other three union presidents to "say what they really thought about the merger," these were the replies.

Gilbert—"This is the happiest day in my 40 years in the industry."

Lane—"I am very satisfied with the merger agreement."

Speirs—"It is a great thing. I am elated that it won such a strong mandate from our members."

Luna and the three other presidents also voiced hope that the unification will lead to more merging. "We invite cooperation, a joint effort and possible consolidation with other railroad unions," they concluded.

Skill Upgrading Helps Craftsmen into Unions

Four programs under federal government contract are opening the doors of organized labor to many more nonunion construction workers through "brush-up" training, Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz reports.

The programs are operating in 22 states and the District of Columbia with labor union craftsmen providing instruction and direction in all the projects.

About 510 minority group workers, mostly Negroes, have been scheduled for skill upgrading opportunities developed and financed by the Dept. of Labor with private industry.

The Labor Dept. has authorized $1.3 million for the four programs, covering the 510 workers. Each program has a specific goal, but the overall objectives are:

- Give additional specialized and intensive training for workers with nonunion construction experience so they may qualify for trade union ranks.
- Prepare applicants for apprenticeship examinations who may have potential for construction craftsmanship but are over the normal apprenticeship age.
- Increase the versatility of journeymen skills to forestall layoffs.
- Promote the employment of minority workers in the building and construction trades.

The skill upgrading programs are an outgrowth of Apprenticeship Outreach, a project through which skilled union instructors prepare minority youth for apprenticeship entrance examinations through "tutor and cram" methods.

Three of the programs operate in Boston, Buffalo and Oakland. The fourth takes in 22 states, including Massachusetts, New York, California and the District of Columbia.

In Boston, the program is directed by the Workers' Defense League on a $238,200 Labor Dept. contract. It has 150 journeymen trainees and 50 outreach trainees.

Buffalo's Project Justice (Journeymen Under Specific Training in Construction Employment) is conducted by the Opportunities Development Corp. in cooperation with the Workers' Defense League. Fifty journeymen trainees are in the $114,225 Labor Dept.-funded-program.

The Oakland program is operated by Project Upgrade, Inc., a joint venture of the Alameda County AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Council and the Alameda County Contractors' Association, in cooperation with minority groups. It is training 100 workers with $440,000 in federal funds.

The national program is directed by the National Joint Painting & Decorating Apprenticeship and Training Committee for 210 journeymen trainees and 320 outreach trainees. It has a $496,521 federal contract.

A JOINT STATEMENT on Okinawa, trade policy, Viet Nam and Asian labor was agreed to by the AFL-CIO and the Japanese Confederation of Labor (DOMEI) at a meeting in Washington. Pres. George Meany headed AFL-CIO representatives who met with DOMEI Pres. Minoru Takita, center, and Takumi Shigeeda, DOMEI general secretary.

AFL-CIO, Japan Labor Back Okinawa Return

The AFL-CIO and the Japanese Confederation of Labor (DOMEI) have joined in supporting the desire of the Japanese people for the return of Okinawa to Japan "at the earliest possible moment."

Representatives of the two federations also reached agreement on U.S.-Japan trade, Viet Nam and the need for stronger unions in Asia at a three-day meeting in Washington, Dec. 9-11.

The meeting brought an agreement that AFL-CIO and DOMEI representatives will henceforth meet annually to discuss matters of mutual interest. Additional joint meetings may be held at the request of either body.

The AFL-CIO was represented at the initial conference by a special committee of the Executive Council, headed by Pres. George Meany and including Vice Presidents James A. Suffridge, Paul Hall, P. L. Siemiller and Joseph A. Beirne.

DOMEI was represented by its president, Minoru Takita, and its general secretary, Takumi Shigeeda.

In a joint statement, the leaders of the two federations said that they "anticipate that the governments of Japan and the United States will reach a full and satisfactory agreement" on the Okinawan issue.

In the meantime, they declared, there must be improvement "of the working conditions and free industrial relations in Okinawa." Specifically, they called for a review of labor ordinances and rules at U.S. military establishments, with a view toward improving them.

"More permanent tenure of management negotiators is important for continuity in establishing sound labor-management relations," the joint statement said.

These were the expressions of agreement in the other areas:

On trade, "DOMEI and the AFL-CIO continue to support free and liberal trade policy and desire for expansion thereof in the free world, bearing in mind the problems of individual unions when their workers are affected."

On Viet Nam, "DOMEI and the AFL-CIO reconfirm their desire and continue their respective efforts for an early restoration of peace in Viet Nam and achievement of a free and stable society through increasingly better conditions for the people."

Towards this end, the statement added, "we pledge full cooperation with the Vietnamese Confederation of Labor (CVT)."

On Asian labor, "DOMEI and the AFL-CIO have mutual interests in strengthening free trade unions in Asia so that they may effectively promote economic development and prosperity for the great mass of people."

They pledged to press this objective in coordination with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the Asian Regional Organization.

Meany Appeals For Boycott of Neuhoff Meats

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called on all affiliated national and international unions to support a consumer boycott against Neuhoff Co. meats.

In a letter to all affiliates, Meany said that the Meat Cutters & Butcher Workmen are involved in a strike with Neuhoff at three plants over basic trade union issues.

The strike at the Neuhoff plant in Clarksville, Tenn., began Apr. 16; at Montgomery, Ala., Sept. 21, and at Quincy, Fla., Sept. 28.

Neuhoff employes are seeking union recognition, an end to widespread unfair labor practices and a contract that will correct such inequities as 50 to 100-hour workweeks at wages as much as $1.50 per hour lower than at competing plants in the same areas.

The employes have launched a consumer boycott against Neuhoff products branded Valleydale, Frosty Morn and Reelfoot.

Top Priority Urged For Urban Housing

On Train Crews:

Rail Board Asks Talks Resume Now

A three-member presidential emergency board has summoned the management of three railroads and the Railroad Trainmen to "immediately resume negotiations" on disputes involving train-crew sizes.

In a report to Pres. Johnson, the board said that it found "no reason" why the issue couldn't be settled by "conscientious" bargaining "as has been done in the greater part of this industry."

Upon receiving the report, Johnson also appealed to both sides to use "every effort to resolve their differences through the free process of collective bargaining."

The board, appointed upon the recommendation of the National Mediation Board, held 10 days of hearings into disputes involving the BRT and the Louisville & Nashville, the Belt Railway of Chicago and the Illinois Central.

Appointment of the board ended a one-day strike on the L&N and a three-month walkout on the Belt. It also covered the union's dispute on IC even though there was no strike on that line.

Maintain Status Quo

Under the terms of the Railway Labor Act both sides must keep the "status quo" until Jan. 13, which means the union cannot strike before then if no settlement is reached and the railroads cannot issue threatened new rules.

The disputes go back to 1960 when BRT first served notices on railroads calling for a minimum "safe" crew of not less than two trainmen in addition to the conductor on all trains.

After a two-year compulsory arbitration award on train crews expired in 1966, the notices were upheld in litigation that went all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Since then the BRT has reached agreement on crews—some three-men and some two-men—with more than 70 railroads. But it has been unable to reach agreement with L&N, Belt and IC and several other carriers.

Union witnesses charged before the board that the three carriers have "refused to bargain in good faith." It urged the board to call for resumed bargaining, either with or without a suggested pattern for settlement.

The railroad managements, on the other hand, contended that two-men crews were adequate for safety and efficient operations. They asked for an "unfettered" right to determine crew sizes, that is without bargaining.

The board termed as "unrealistic" the railroads' request for a free-hand to set crew sizes, noting that the earlier arbitration board's findings—"that the employes have a legitimate bargaining interest in this question"—are still valid.

As for conflicting claims of what is a safe and efficient crew, the board said that "evaluation" of these factors "is a matter for joint consideration by the bargainers on the properties."

During the hearings, there also were charges by the BRT that railroads management had il-

Critical Lag Spelled Out In Report

By John M. Barry

The President's National Commission on Urban Problems called on the nation to "put housing on the front burner" with an immediate five-fold increase in homes for low-and moderate-income families to at least 500,000 units a year.

The Commission urged an increase in "the total housing inventory" to 2 to 2.25 million units a year as against the current rate of about 1.5 million.

It noted that not even the goals of the Housing Act of 1949 have so far been met by the nation and that the federal government, for example, had torn down more housing units than it had built over the past ten years.

The 14-member panel on urban problems was headed by former Sen. Paul H. Douglas of Illinois and included Pres. John H. Lyons of the Iron Workers.

Its sweeping report to the President, totalling some 325,000 words in 1,500 typewritten pages, dealt with a wide range of urban problems affecting the nation's ability to meet its housing needs. It produced more than 100 specific recommendations in such areas as the need for uniform standards for local building codes, zoning and land use, restructuring of local government, construction industry practices, taxation and financing.

The overall report, based on the testimony of 347 witnesses at hearings in 22 cities since January 1967, had the endorsement of all members

Council Bars UAW Bid:

Firm Action Sought On ICFTU Policy

By Saul Miller

The AFL-CIO Executive Council called on the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions for a specific, definite answer to the AFL-CIO's request that it reject applications for membership from hostile, secessionist unions.

Until it receives such an answer—specifically on the bid by the Auto Workers—the council said that the AFL-CIO will not participate in any activities of the ICFTU.

Federation Pres. George Meany reported the action to a press conference following a one-day meeting of the council in Washington.

Meany said that the council strongly reiterated its position taken at the September 1968 meeting in New York that "the AFL-CIO cannot agree to the affiliation of the UAW to the ICFTU in any shape, manner or form," in view of the withdrawal of the UAW from the federation and its continuing efforts "to split the American trade union movement."

Board Asked for Rejection

He noted that the AFL-CIO had asked the ICFTU to reject at its November 1968 Executive Board meeting the affiliation application from the UAW on the basis of trade union principle.

The question before the ICFTU board, Meany had written to ICFTU Sec. Gen. Harm G. Buiter, goes beyond that posed by the UAW's application. "It involves not only the integrity of the AFL-CIO but that of every other trade union center affiliated to the ICFTU."

The AFL-CIO, Meany had noted, "is faced with the dual activities of a hostile secessionist union in alliance with an expelled union. Dual membership of rival competing national trade union centers in the ICFTU from any union is unthinkable and indefensible."

The ICFTU should do more than "merely refrain from taking action detrimental to the interests of its United States affiliate," Meany wrote, and the AFL-CIO

Panel Urges Overhaul In Health Care

Comprehensive health care systems — incorporating community, area, state and regional facilities—are needed to meet the nation's medical needs.

This is the major conclusion of the National Advisory Commission on Health Facilities as it recommended in its report to the President:

"The nation must now concentrate upon organizing health facilities and other health resources into effective, efficient and economical community systems of comprehensive health care for all."

America's health care systems should combine private and public responsibility, the commission report to Pres. Johnson said. The blue ribbon membership of the commission includes AFL-CIO Vice Pres. David Sullivan, president of the Service Employes.

Commission Chairman Boisfeuillet Jones said that "existing frag-

Labor Board Slaps Down 2 Firms That Scrooged on Christmas Bonus

Two employers who took away a Christmas bonus from employes must give it back, the National Labor Relations Board decided in a pair of holiday season rulings.

Found guilty of unlawful acts were the Beacon Journal Publishing Co. in Akron, Ohio, and Wisconsin Aluminum Foundry Co., Inc., of Manitowoc, Wis.

In the Manitowoc case, Office & Professional Employes Local 9 charged that the employer dropped a payroll clerk off its yearly bonus list because of his union membership and union activities.

The company president denied the firm was biased against employe Lorin Haver. He admitted that Haver had received a bonus of up to $500 for 19 years but last Christmas he was dropped because the bonus went only to supervisors, and Haver no longer was a supervisor, Haver's boss told the NLRB.

The withholding of the bonus for the reason given was, the board ruled, a "plain violation" of the labor act. It reasoned as follows:

"There was no change in Haver's duties and responsibilities" from one Christmas to the next. What had changed was that in the interval, Haver had organized the clerical workers into a union and was now included in the union bargaining unit.

To withhold a bonus payment solely because the employe is represented by a union "serves naturally to discourage membership in a labor organization," the board said.

Two board members reversed a trial examiner's recommendation that the complaint be dismissed. Member John H. Fanning dissented, saying he agreed with the examiner that the bonus was negotiated into Haver's new pay rate.

In the Beacon Journal case, the NLRB reaffirmed an order handed down 18 months ago but remanded to the board by the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Cincinnati, for additional testimony.

The board said the newspaper broke the law in 1966 by unilaterally changing its formula for the payment of a Christmas bonus to its union employes without bargaining collectively with the Printing Pressmen, Paper Handlers, Mailers and five other unions.

It ordered the company to bargain with the unions about the bonus, and to pay all eligible employes the difference between the bonus actually paid and what should have been paid, plus interest at 6 percent.

New York Locals Plan to Keep Up Worker Rehabilitation Program

The New York City Central Labor Council's "Project Rehab" has reached the stage of its "final report" on a five-year program of worker rehabilitation counseling aided by government grants.

But the project has proved so successful, Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., notes in a foreword to the report, that the 500 unions affiliated with the central body are determined to carry it on through voluntary contributions.

First copy of the report was presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by Michael Sampson, chairman of the project and of the labor council's Community Services Committee.

It analyzes the cases of 3,261 workers or members of workers' families who were guided to rehabilitative services for physical, emotional or vocational impairments. In many of the cases, the counseling and treatment meant the difference between holding a job or being unemployed.

Actually, Sampson pointed out, for purposes of the report the analysis was limited to cases referred prior to Nov. 15, 1967. In the past year, he noted, additional hundreds of workers were helped, bringing the total to nearly 4,000.

The project was initiated in 1963 as a demonstration of what labor could do in liaison and counseling services to help its own members in need of rehabilitation.

At the start, it received a three-year grant of $270,000 from the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare's Social Rehabilitation Service with the labor council to supply matching funds over the period. It was the first such grant ever given to a central labor body. Six months before the grant expired, the project had proved so productive that the government provided funds for two more years.

In all, some $580,000 in federal funds have gone into the demonstration project, with the city AFL-CIO supplying an additional $280,000.

The funds enabled the Community Services Committee to launch the project with a professional staff and to recruit and train hundreds of volunteer counselors in local unions throughout the city.

First director of "Project Rehab" was Louis L. Levine, who continues as a consultant. His successor and current director is Gerald R. Waters, Sr. Margaret Barry is assistant director and John J. Gehan associate director.

Medical advisers to the project are Dr. Guy F. Robbins and Dr. Howard A. Rusk.

Van Arsdale paid tribute to all of them, and to Sampson who had assumed overall responsibility for the program. He also gave special credit to Administrator Mary Switzer of HEW's Social Rehabilitation Service who encouraged the city AFL-CIO to undertake the project and carry it through.

But the key to the project's success, the report makes clear, have been the local union volunteers.

"The union representative became an important member of the team," the report observes.

"For all practical purposes he was an effective vocational counselor to the professionals involved in treatment. He knew the job duties on which job recommendations could be based. He could negotiate with an employer in a way that no professional counselor could approximate.

"Because of his special relationship to the patient and co-workers, he could make the member's return to work a relatively smooth process. The project made a beginning in developing this particular aspect of vocational rehabilitation. It is worth further consideration."

Sampson noted that throughout the five-year period, the project had the strong support and cooperation of voluntary and government agencies, the medical profession, medical centers and schools.

As for the future, he reported that 180 local and international unions already have contributed some $30,000 to continue the program. But the real answer, he suggested, may lie in efforts now being explored to establish it as a tax-exempt, non-profit organization that will be able to attract large contributions and establish working relationships with labor-management health and welfare funds.

Firm Loses Contracts For Cheating on Wages

San Francisco—A government contractor who underpaid his employes $16,786 on $50,000 worth of janitor-service contracts has been ruled ineligible for further federal contracts for a three-year period.

The Labor Dept. said John B. Marshall, doing business as the Marshall Co. and as Mande Grounds, both of Oakland, Calif., drew the penalty for violating federal minimum wage provisions in the McNamara-O'Hara Service Contracts Act.

The department said the Marshall Co. was awarded two contracts on its bid of $30,585 at George Air Force Base in Victorville, Calif., and $20,200 at Paine Field Air Force Base in Everett, Wash.

Federal agents found that workmen employed to perform the contracts were owed $16,786 in back wages. Of the amount, $5,669 was withheld by the Air Force for pro-rating among the affected workers, while $11,117 still is owed by Marshall, the Labor Dept. reported.

It said Marshall, trading as Mande Grounds, was awarded a previous contract for $38,800 to maintain landscaping at two military installations near Seattle in 1967. In that case, investigators found underpayments of more than $4,700, of which $2,127 will be pro-rated among the employes and $1,034 still has not been collected.

Evidence of the violations was brought out at Labor Dept. hearings here and in Seattle, based on evidence reported by the department's Wage-Hour Division.

Ruth Colombo Gets COPE Post in East

Mrs. Ruth Colombo has been named eastern region director of the Women's Activities Dept. of COPE, to succeed Mrs. Esther Murray who has retired, COPE Dir. Al Barkan announced.

Mrs. Colombo, who has been active in the women's program for 10 years, formerly headed the department's Vermont program. She worked with Mrs. Murray during this year's national political campaign.

Mrs. Murray has held the post of eastern region director since the AFL-CIO merger in 1955. Before that she was women's director of CIO-PAC for three years.

Rights Panel Told:

Green Carders Take Farm Jobs in Texas

San Antonio—Witnesses told the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights here that American farm workers live in destitution while the Immigration & Naturalization service lets 44,000-150,000 "commuters" cross the border every day to take farm jobs.

At the close of six days of hearings, acting Chairman Theodore M. Hesburgh asked the commission staff to seek a legal opinion on whether federal anti-peonage laws have been violated by Texas employers.

The testimony tended to show, Rev. Hesburgh said, that many migrant farm workers in the lower Rio Grande Valley are living in conditions close to slavery. He is president of Notre Dame University, and one of five commission members.

Father Hesburgh asked for a lawyer's opinion on peonage, noting that, if the workers try to organize, "they get thrown in jail and have to put up $500 bond, a third of their yearly income, to get out."

Arnulfo Guerra, attorney from Roma, Tex., told how Mexican "green carders" are permitted to take farm jobs while U.S. citizens cannot find work at a living wage. Last year, he testified, Texas Rangers and Starr County court officers helped employers break a strike of American farm workers.

Manuel Ramirez of Laredo, Tex., member of Volunteers in Service to America, testified that 2,500 Mexican nationals cross the border daily to work in Laredo while an equal number of Laredo residents cannot get work.

The Rev. Edward Krueger, sent to the area by the Texas Council of Churches as an observer last year, testified that he was arrested and slapped after taking pictures of Rangers breaking up a farm worker picket line at Mission, Tex.

Ranger Capt. A. Y. Allee was booed and cheered when he denied any brutality or strikebreaking tactics.

Asked whether he had conferred with the growers during the organizing effort of the United Farm Workers Organizing Committee, Allee said he had been "in and out of Starr County for 32 years" but denied the employers talked to him about the strike.

The commission, authorized by Congress to make recommendations, will report its findings. The states under study are Texas, California, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico.

The Texas committee includes Henry Munoz, civil rights director for the state AFL-CIO, and Paul Apolonio Montemayor of the Steelworkers, Corpus Christi.

In its most recent report, called Cycle to Nowhere, the commission detailed living and working conditions for black citizens in the Montgomery, Ala., area.

Council Asks Definite Action From ICFTU

"should receive the complete backing and support of the ICFTU in its effort to defend and preserve the integrity of the only national trade union center in the United States."

The ICFTU board postponed action on the UAW application, leading to the council's demand for a specific answer to the trade union principle it raised.

In reply to queries, the AFL-CIO president said that the trade union movement is in good shape and that "life will go on" under the Nixon Administration. He said the AFL-CIO hopes to cooperate with the new leadership and that there is some indication that "they want that cooperation."

In other actions the council:

- Approved the merger of four rail operating unions and the name change to the United Transportation Union. Three of the unions—Firemen & Enginemen, Switchmen and Trainmen—are AFL-CIO affiliates; the Conductors were unaffiliated.
- Heard officers representing the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association of New York City ask for affiliation with the AFL-CIO and voted to name a committee to secure more information on the request. Meany named Vice Presidents Herman D. Kenin, Paul Hall, Paul Jennings, Joseph Curran, David Dubinsky and Max Greenberg to report back to the next council meeting.
- Received an interim report from Al Barkan, national director of COPE, on the 1968 elections. A full report will be made to the council at its next meeting in February.
- Voted contributions to the Jewish Labor Committee, the Joint Council on Economic Education and the Inaugural Committee's guaranteed fund. The latter is to help underwrite inaugural costs and the funds are usually returned from ticket sales, etc.

Children's Hospital Aided In Tribute to Harrison

A donation of $2,500 to Children's Hospital, Cincinnati, was voted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in memory of the late George M. Harrison, long-time member of the council.

Harrison was an AFL-CIO vice president and president emeritus of the Railway & Airline Clerks when he died early this month.

In a resolution of tribute, the council said Harrison "served as an outstanding member of this Executive Council" since 1955, when he "helped forge the bonds of unity" between the AFL and CIO.

Noting that Harrison had "devoted his entire life to trade unionism" and served his fellow union members as a national officer for more than four decades, including 35 years as president, the council added:

He combined his "great contributions to the labor movement with equally outstanding service to his nation" and the world.

The Cincinnati hospital was one of his many civic and charitable interests.

GOP Holds 5 Others:

Alaska, Maryland Posts Seen Shifting

Pres.-elect Nixon's selection of five current office-holders to serve in his Cabinet—three governors, a lieutenant-governor and a member of Congress—is unlikely to result in any party shifts when the impending vacancies are filled.

But the Democrats seem certain to pick up a governorship when Maryland Gov. Spiro T. Agnew leaves that office to become Vice President. And the Republicans stand to gain another senator as a result of the death of Sen. A. L. Bartlett, the Alaska Democrat.

Alaska Gov. Walter J. Hickel, designated by Nixon to be Secretary of the Interior, will be succeeded by Alaska's current Secretary of State, Keith Miller, also a Republican, who will serve until 1970.

Meanwhile, it falls to Hickel to appoint a successor to Bartlett's Senate seat. He has until Jan. 10 to make the appointment under state law and will probably do so before the 91st Congress convenes on Jan. 3. His choice is expected to be a Republican.

This would further narrow the Democratic majority in the Senate to 57-43, compared with the 63-37 margin the party held before the election.

In Massachusetts, the successor to Gov. John A. Volpe when he takes over as Secretary of Transportation will be Lt. Gov. Francis W. Sargent, whose term also will expire in 1970. He, like Volpe, is a Republican.

In Michigan, Gov. George W. Romney, who will be the new Secretary of Housing & Urban Development, will be succeeded by his Republican lieutenant-governor, William G. Milliken, who will be eligible to run for re-election in 1970.

In California, the choice of a successor to Lt. Gov. Robert H. Finch, due to become Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, will be made by Republican Gov. Ronald Reagan. He has announced that he will not make the appointment until Finch actually resigns. And Finch has said that he will wait until after the state legislature opens on Jan. 6. In California, the lieutenant-governor serves as president of the state senate.

Wisconsin Special Election

In Wisconsin, it will take a special election to fill the 7th District House seat to be vacated by Rep. Melvin R. Laird when he becomes Secretary of Defense. But the district is strongly Republican and Laird has represented it since 1953. Gov. Warren P. Knowles (R) is expected to schedule the special election in February or March.

In Maryland, Agnew has announced that he plans to resign as governor effective at noon on Jan. 7. He also announced that he would call the state's general assembly into special session on Jan. 6 to choose a successor.

Both houses of the legislature are dominated by Democrats and the leading candidate to take over from Agnew is considered to be House Speaker Marvin Mandel.

HUMAN RIGHTS award of the Jewish Labor Committee is presented to Pres. I. W. Abel, right, of the Steelworkers at a dinner in New York attended by Vice Pres. Hubert H. Humphrey and more than 1,000 labor and civic leaders. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, last year's recipient of the award, makes the presentation. Assisting Meany is Charles S. Zimmerman, left, president of JLC and vice president of the Ladies' Garment Workers.

Abel Honored For Efforts In Human Rights

New York—More than 1,000 labor and civic leaders, including Vice Pres. Humphrey, attended a dinner in honor of Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers, at which he received the second annual human rights award of the Jewish Labor Committee.

The presentation was made by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who a year ago received the first such award. Other speakers were Pres. Louis Stulberg of the Ladies' Garment Workers; Bayard Rustin, executive director of the A. Philip Randolph Institute and Charles S. Zimmerman, president of the Jewish Labor Committee, who was chairman.

An unplanned highlight of the dinner was an outpouring of support for Albert Shanker, president of the New York teachers union. Rustin in particular, whose general theme was a plea for unity and mutual understanding between the labor movement and the Negro community, heaped scorn on "so-called intellectuals and liberals" who have tried to paint Shanker as "the worst rascist in America." Meany and Stulberg also paid tribute to the teachers' official.

In their brief addresses, Humphrey, Meany and Abel all expressed optimism that the nation would continue to progress despite the outcome of the national election.

Abel put special stress on "what is right with America," as a solid foundation for a better future. Meany noted that the labor movement is geared to move ahead "in foul weather as well as fair," if that proved necessary.

Dock Union Rejects Offer, Talks Continue

New York—The Longshoremen rejected a new management proposal on terms of a three-year contract but continued negotiating with the New York Shipping Association in hopes of reaching a settlement before a Dec. 20 deadline.

The new offer to the union's Atlantic ports committee was made a few days before expiration of the 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction ending a strike of more than 60,000 dockers in ports from Searsport, Me., to Miami and Brownsville, Tex. It followed a referendum in which ILA members voted by a 13-1 margin to turn down previous "final" offers.

A major sticking issue is loss of jobs due to cargo shipped in containers loaded off the docks.

Up for settlement here is a pacesetter contract that can be applied to other ports. The ILA represents dockers in more than 20 ports but Gulf port employers have made no complete offers, the union said. Other negotiations are continuing also in Miami, New Orleans and Galveston, Tex.

Grim Alternative Cited To Job Safety Standards

A labor safety expert offered an alternative to federal occupational safety and health standards in a debate with management and state officials who saw no need for a federal law.

Alan Burch, safety director of the Operating Engineers, said even better results in reducing on-the-job accidents might be obtained if the head of each company were required to personally notify the family of each worker killed on the job.

If this were done, Burch suggested, next year there might not be 14,200 Americans "killed by crushing, slicing, burning, strangling or smothering" as the result of work hazards.

The debate took place during the 50th anniversary meeting of the USA Standards Institute, a private organization set up to encourage voluntary standard-setting by industries.

Joining Burch in urging passage of federal legislation was David A. Swankin, director of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Standards.

Swankin noted the sharp differences in work accident statistics among states with varying safety programs—or with no programs at all.

"A worker in a high accident state," he said, "is only about a third as safe as he is in a low accident state."

After reporting that state expenditures on safety range from 2 cents per worker per year to $2.11, Swankin asked his audience, "Which state would you rather work in?"

The safety manager of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., J. S. Queener, argued that "federalized" industrial safety and health programs would destroy the "partnership" between private industry and state regulatory agencies.

Claims 'Power Play'

And Commissioner Edmond M. Boggs of the Virginia State Dept. of Labor & Industry termed the proposal for a federal law "a power play" by the U.S. Labor Dept. which states should resist.

Burch accused management and state opponents of "setting up straw men and knocking them down" in their arguments against a federal law.

The states have had years to act to improve job safety, Burch pointed out, "and only a few have done anything effective."

As for management, he said, it seems "caught in a bind between the necessity for making a profit on the one hand, and competitive costs on the other." Burch suggested that "uniform regulations would help to remove industrial price-cost competition from the safety picture."

Fire Fighters Come to the Rescue Of People With Personal Problems

Dayton, O.—This city's professional fire fighters are on the road to becoming trained counselors for the communities and neighborhoods they serve.

Prime movers in the operation are the Fire Fighters and the AFL-CIO Community Services Activities. Working in close cooperation are the Dayton city government and a number of the city's welfare and service organizations.

The objective is simple: make each fire fighter a trained referral specialist, who can direct people in trouble to the city or private agency best able to provide counsel or help.

There is hope that the fire stations may become a center for friendly guidance for citizens of the neighborhood as well as a garage for expensive fire fighting equipment.

In Dayton, 88 members of Local 136 of the Fire Fighters invested 21 hours of time over a seven-week period for a series of classes and seminars held in the fire station.

The fire fighters, through their briefing, learn where to refer citizens with calls like:

". . . My wife is despondent and I'm afraid she might try suicide."

"My father-in-law is becoming an alcoholic; what shall I do?"

"I'm broke and my kids need medicine."

"Where can I get some decent clothes so I can apply for a job?"

In many of these cases, the fire fighters will be able to make appointments with the proper person at the proper social agency, and cut through delays or red tape. Many citizens—particularly those in lowest-income areas—have only the scantiest knowledge of the services available to them in the city.

The graduation dinner at Fire Station 10, where the first "graduates" got their Certificate of Merit awards, included representatives of the AFL-CIO and the city government.

Pres. Claude Henley of Local 136, which sponsored the program, announced proudly that "Dayton is Number One" in the nation, so far as the Fire Fighter community service program is concerned. Similar programs are in the planning stage in Birmingham, Bridgeport, Des Moines and New Orleans.

Robert Rosekrans, assistant director of AFL-CIO Community Services, noted that 60,000 union counselors have been trained in 100 communities, with the voluntary goal of steering people with a personal problem to the agency with the solution."

The fire fighter union's interest in the program was expressed by Sec.-Treas. Albert E. Albertoni.

"We are public servants—but more than that, we try to be the public's friend and the public's protector."

Utility Workers OK Con Ed Pact in N.Y.

New York—More than 20,000 members of Utility Workers Local 1-2 returned to work after voting by a 3-1 margin to end a two-week strike.

Wage increases of $17 to $48 a week are included in a 27-month contract which won approval after an earlier offer was rejected Nov. 30.

The vote to accept an offer with better fringe benefits was 11,741 in favor, 3,760 opposed. Earlier, a local of 500 members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers also voted to return to work with a better contract.

Fashion Center Gets Dubinsky Fund Grant

New York—A grant of $50,000 to the Fashion Institute of Technology here, a center of learning for the garment industry, has been announced by the David Dubinsky Foundation.

The grant is among the first of nine awards made by the foundation, established by the Ladies' Garment Workers to help worthy projects in the name of the man who headed the union for 34 years.

A fund of $1 million was set up to make awards over a period of 12 years. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is foundation chairman and he also serves on the awards committee along with ILGWU Pres. Louis Stulberg and prominent labor and civic leaders.

The money for the institute, granted in two awards of $25,000 each, is earmarked for a David Dubinsky Student Center. The center, previously endowed by management leaders, is part of the school's expansion program.

Other awards announced by the foundation ranged from $3,000 to $16,000. They included grants to:

The National Council of Negro Women and the North Carolina College at Durham for scholarship aid to poor students; the National Catholic Social Action Conference; the Bund Archives for microfilming rare materials on the Jewish labor movement of Eastern Europe; and to the David Shub Book Committee for publication of a book on the early days of the ILGWU.

The foundation also announced an award to cover the cost of the 1968 Conference on the Immigrant and the Labor Movement, which is sponsored by the Center for Migration Studies at Brooklyn College.

The Search for Peace

ON THIS CHRISTMAS of 1968 the world is still struggling to establish peace and freedom on a lasting basis, a struggle that has continued without let-up since the end of World War II.

It is as clear now as it was in 1945 that there is no alternative to peace in this age of intercontinental missiles and space satellites; peace today is a condition of survival.

There are those, however, who have yet to understand this basic lesson, who use aggression and subversion to keep the world in a state of crisis. They are the blackmailers attempting to buy power by threatening to annihilate the people of the world.

They can be stopped by a free world that continues to have faith in its own institutions, that will not bend to threats of aggression or aggression itself as the price for peace.

The free world has the resources, the manpower and the ability to rid the world of hunger and disease and to provide the basis of social justice so that all men can taste of bread and freedom.

Cooling the Economy

THIS IS THE TIME of year when economic forecasters unsheath their slide rules and crystal balls and make pronouncements on the future course of the economy. This year they are deeply puzzled and beset by economic indicators seemingly going off at cross purposes, an economy that doesn't quite behave in terms of the "new" economics and the latest conventional wisdom.

The forecasts are of some interest. But more basic is the essentially simple question of the cost of price stability. The concern with rising prices is real and nowhere more pertinent than among the nation's workers who see hard-earned wage gains wiped out by higher and higher prices.

The conventional wisdom of the "new" economics dictates that the way to stop the price rise is to "cool off" the economy—in other words to depress the rate of economic growth.

Cooling off the economy translates quickly into an increase in unemployment. And in our economy an increase in unemployment basically means joblessness among the lower paid, the minorities, those of the working poor most in need of jobs and income.

Current economic theory holds that government insurance and welfare programs can take care of the unemployed while the economy adjusts to a lower level of growth—in other words the poorest in the country will pay for the economic adjustment by sinking even further into poverty.

This may be conventional but it's hardly wisdom. And it fails, of course, to touch on the fundamental problem of exhorbitant profits—the direct result of the higher prices—and a tax system so riddled with loopholes that these profits and other income escape their fair share of taxation.

The hope for the new year is that the "dismal science" of economics can begin to focus on human needs and social justice rather than pat formulas that are indifferent to people and their problems.

The Greatest Gift

For Labor, Industry, Community:

Best Path to Solving Conflict Seen in Collective Bargaining

The following is excerpted from an address by Theodore W. Kheel, arbitrator and mediator, to the New York Society of Security Analysts.

MUCH OF THE DISORDERLY or untidy quality of bargaining is due to the difficulties of communicating through representatives. For collective bargaining, as the name implies, is a form of group talk, when spokesmen negotiate for a larger group. These representatives must look in both directions—they must get the best deal they can, and they must also convince the membership they have represented their interests effectively.

The most important principle of negotiation, and one which I constantly urge on management representatives is to recognize and support the leadership position of their adversary. There is a natural trade off between cash and credit in bargaining, and the negotiator who is willing to give credit can often save cash. Many of our current disputes are not examples of breakdowns in bargaining but of repudiation of leadership. The phenomenon of an embittered rank and file rejecting an agreement reached by their representatives in negotiation has become an all too common feature of the labor scene.

We saw this happen in the sanitation dispute last winter, and we witnessed similar rejections more recently by police and Con Ed workers. In each case an agreement was reached at the bargaining table only to be rejected by the membership, often in unruly proceedings. These acts of repudiation are a particular form of the more general happening in our society—the tendency toward organization and group conflict, the demands for participation justly felt by all groups, but which are sometimes translated into a tendency to show independence by voting "no," and proclaiming the position loudly. We can understand this happening without condoning it. For the path to labor peace lies not in supplanting bargaining but in developing support for leadership and a climate of respect for agreements reached at the bargaining table.

I take this time to explain the bargaining process because I believe it is the only viable path to labor peace. What we must do is support this security . . . help it regain its proper value by enhancing public understanding and regard for its potential. This means, too, a recognition of the limitations of bargaining.

The charge is always heard that wage settlements made through negotiation are responsible for price inflation. But it is debatable whether collective bargaining should be blamed for inflation or whether spiralling prices are not primarily a result of the tight labor market. Experience indicates that it is the nonunion employer who is more apt to raise wages in order to attract persons in categories where the supply is short, while the unionized employer who must deal across the board is not likely to grant excessive increases.

THOSE WHO LOOK to the unions with pleas of wage restraint should recognize that it is generally labor shortages in particular markets that contribute most substantially to inflation.

But I believe that in a democratic society there is no surer path to harmonious industrial relations than the promotion of collective bargaining.

Around the country, millions of public employes, providing a full range of services for state, local and federal government, are following the example of their counterparts in private industry and organizing for their mutual benefit. With the spread of organization comes, quite naturally, a demand for a greater voice in the determination of their working conditions.

These millions of workers—a substantial proportion of the 12 million public employes in the nation—seek to bargain collectively with their employer. And across the nation, other groups with common interests—from race horse owners to tenants to black Americans—are forming groups to speak with one voice and pursue their aims through joint action.

In this area, too, there may be a new challenge and new potential for application of collective bargaining techniques. Wherever the parties recognize that they must reach agreement, that they cannot exist without each other, then there exists the possibility for effective resolution of the dispute through bargaining. Acknowledgment of the need for agreement is the predicate of bargaining—it cannot take place where either party is out for the kill.

Organization and militancy—whether in industry, public employment or community conflict—does place new strains on bargaining procedures, and does seem to produce still louder cries for replacing the system. But that is no solution. As long as we value a diverse and vibrant society we must expect conflict between rival groups, and as long as we cherish individual participation in determining individual destiny, we must value the search for accommodation of conflict, through bargaining.

In 91st Congress:

Nixon Must Go to Democrats For Votes to Pass Programs

The following is excerpted from "The Shape of the 91st Congress," by David L. Perlman, which appears in the December 1968 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

IN MEMBERSHIP, PARTY CONTROL and its liberal-conservative division, the new 91st Congress will be at least a fraternal twin of the departing 90th Congress.

The House of Representatives changed hardly at all. There was normal attrition through retirements, but only nine incumbents were defeated for re-election. The freshman crop of 39 new congressmen out of 435 is the smallest in years.

Not a single committee chairmanship will change hands. Power in the House remains where it has been—with the very senior chairmen of the major committees leavened somewhat by the gentle persuasion of Speaker John W. McCormack, who will be starting his 41st year as a congressman.

From the viewpoint of the conservative-liberal division in the House, it would take calipers to measure the difference between the 90th and 91st Congress.

Everyone, of course, has his own definition of liberal and conservative. Congressional Quarterly, a nonpartisan press service, considers 172 members of the outgoing House as liberals, 193 as conservative and 70 as moderates. It says the new House will have two fewer liberals, four fewer conservatives and six more moderates.

The 1968 elections confirmed the Democratic Party as the majority party in Congress—a position it has held for 34 of the past 38 years. Nevertheless, the 243-192 Democratic majority in the House is the smallest in 10 years.

Only 34 of the 100 Senate seats were at stake in the November election, but 14 of them will be filled by newcomers. The 14 include Barry Goldwater, not exactly a freshman, who returns to the Senate as a replacement for the retiring 91-year-old Carl Hayden.

Six senators retired, four lost out in their party's primaries and four were defeated for re-election.

The departures will bring about a reshuffle of committee chairmanships and, of nearly equal importance, subcommittee chairmanships.

Yet despite the new forces and a net Republican gain of five seats, the change in the Senate does not go very deep, although it has significance.

The Senate had a moderate-to-liberal majority before the election—and it still does.

It had a hardcore conservative coalition big enough to conduct a successful filibuster—and it still does.

The swing man in determining by his support or opposition whether a filibuster will succeed or fail has been Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen. There is no reason to think that it will be any different in the 91st Congress.

But even with virtually the same cast, it would be rash to assume that the performance of the 91st Congress will follow the script of the 90th.

Lyndon Baines Johnson, in the tradition of liberal Democratic presidents, kept a steady flow of legislative requests moving to Capitol Hill.

His proposals sought to utilize the vast resources and power of the federal government to solve problems confronting the nation—problems of poverty and pollution, of education, housing, health, job training, crime, safety and traffic congestion.

These ambitious but necessary programs had to run the gauntlet of a conservative coalition made up of most Republicans and most southern Democrats. Where it could not ignore the pressing messages from the executive branch of government, it usually was able to modify the requests to more digestible size—particularly when it came to backing up legislation with appropriations.

There is also a liberal-moderate coalition made up of most Democrats and a minority of Republicans. Not even in the heavily Democratic 89th Congress, elected in 1964, were there enough Democratic votes alone to pass all the major legislation. About 20 Republicans can be counted on to vote with northern Democrats on most social issues.

It is this alternate coalition that Democratic presidents have counted on to enact at least a substantial part of their programs.

A REPUBLICAN PRESIDENT needs a coalition also. Dwight D. Eisenhower needed Democratic votes in the first two years of his Administration, even with a Republican majority in Congress, because some congressional Republicans had become so accustomed to saying "no" that they were unable to accept even the modest program of a president of their own party.

This blend of cooperation and criticism awaits Richard M. Nixon as he assumes the presidency.

Mr. Nixon, facing a Democratic Congress, has a unique choice of allies for his legislative program.

Whatever he proposes will normally receive substantial support from congressional Republicans, if only out of party loyalty.

He has the option of looking for the balance of the votes from either the liberal majority or the conservative minority of the Democratic Party.

In effect, the choice of a liberal or a conservative coalition is up to him.

If he should choose the liberal road—admittedly a highly unlikely prospect—Nixon would be able to gain majority support for some programs that, with the same Congress, would probably be rejected if proposed by a Democratic president.

Mr. Nixon can, of course, look to the conservative coalition for support of programs strongly opposed by liberals and labor. But the coalition does not have control of the Senate and liberals have either a majority or the chairmanship of several important House committees, as well as the support of the House Democratic leadership on most issues.

In practical political terms, Congress as well as the President has a veto.

More Humane, Democratic:

Proposed Improvements Backed For Federal Welfare System

TWO NEWLY-PROPOSED federal welfare rule changes would make the system more efficient, as well as more "humane" and "democratic," the AFL-CIO director of social security declared, as he urged their adoption.

Questioned by reporters on Labor News Conference, Bert Seidman said the proposals, which would minimize welfare applicant investigations and provide legal aid in agency ruling appeals, have both been tested successfully—on a voluntary basis—in several parts of the country.

Seidman turned aside the contention that putting prime reliance on welfare applicants' personal statements of eligibility would open welfare rolls to "large numbers of cheaters and undeserving people."

The same kind of "declaratory statement" system is used for income tax returns, he asserted, and there is no more "reason to think that poor people are liars than to think that rich people are liars."

THE UNION SPOKESMAN said that the big advantage of the declaratory statement regulation will be to release trained social workers from the "investigations of people on relief" that now take up "all of their time . . . or almost all of their time."

Instead, he noted, they will be able to spend more time on things they are trained and "qualified to handle," such as guiding families to "opportunities for improving their health, for improving their training and education."

Seidman said he hoped that the new Administration won't "wipe out these changes . . . with a stroke of the pen," as it could. He stressed Pres.-elect Nixon's support for the declaratory statement system during the campaign.

With both the out-going and in-coming Administrations favoring the proposal, it has "very strong bi-partisan support," he said.

Washington Window

By Press Associates, Inc.

WHEN HENRY WALLACE wrote a book predicting that the United States some day would need to provide 60 million jobs, he was laughed at by a good many people as an impossible dreamer. Now the Labor Dept. is predicting that the nation's labor force will pass the 90 million mark by 1975.

It won't be the same labor force that Wallace had in mind. There have been great changes in the economic structure of the country since Wallace wrote his book and with these changes have come corresponding shifts in jobs.

So important are these changes for the nation's potential job hunters that the Labor Dept. has issued a highly important pamphlet called "Employment Outlook for Tomorrow's Jobs." It is "must" reading for today's youngsters who are choosing their life's careers.

First of all there are now some 80 million Americans who work for a living, a little more than 50 million men over 16 and 27 million women. Of these three-fourths work in private industry, about 13 percent work for government, 12 percent are self-employed and the rest are family workers.

Almost 20 million work in manufacturing, about 14 million in trade, roughly 13 million in service industries, almost 10 million in government, state and local jobs; not quite 5 million in agriculture, another 5 million in public utilities and contract construction and the rest in finance, insurance and real estate. At the bottom of the heap is mining.

That's the picture as it exists today, but when it comes to growth, the story is quite different.

On the whole there will be an increase of 20 percent in total employment over the next decade, but the growth in the various job segments of the economy will vary widely.

Biggest gainer—about 41 percent—will be the service industries. This will be especially true in the fields of education, manpower training, health and welfare. There will be a need for 650,000 more teachers over the next decade if the jobs for 1.8 million teachers that the nation will need are to be filled. More doctors, more registered nurses, more medical technicians will be urgently needed. Sales jobs will increase by at least 20 percent with most of the openings in insurance and real estate.

Government jobs will constitute the second largest gainer, almost 40 percent, with the emphasis largely on state and local jobs where public services are rapidly increasing.

Contract construction will be another job gainer at more than 30 percent. Transportation and public utility jobs will increase somewhat more than 10 percent and manufacturing by just under 10 percent.

Actual losers will be mining where jobs will go down slightly and agriculture where jobs are expected to drop more than 20 percent after many years of steadily decreasing employment.

ALTHOUGH MANUFACTURING will not grow as fast as the top job gainers it is expected that it will still be the largest employer.

In line with the changing nature of the American job requirements, has come new educational and training requirements. Professional services will require more and more schooling—up to 16.3 years—service and clerical jobs will require up to 12.5 years, skilled workers will need up to 11.7 years schooling; semi-skilled up to 10 years, non-farm laborers up to 9.5 years and farmers 8.8 years. A high school education—now a standard requirement—will be more important than ever.

Jobs for skilled workers will rise by nearly 25 percent, nearly one-half because of new growth and the rest from deaths and retirement.

All in all the old haphazard days when a boy got out of school and took the first job that he could find in the help wanted ads are over. Higher education, higher skills, more purposeful training will be needed than ever before. Tomorrow's jobs are being made right now; youngsters still in school must get ready for them.

PROPOSED CHANGES in federal welfare rules would make the system more efficient, humane and democratic, AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Bert Seidman tells reporters on Labor News Conference. He is interviewed by James Millstone, left, of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and William Eaton, right, of the Chicago Daily News. The program is aired Tuesdays at 7:35 p.m., EST, on Mutual Radio.

CONGRESSMAN-ELECT William L. Clay welcomes Vice President Humphrey to the construction site for a Negro-owned supermarket in St. Louis during the election campaign.

Negro Congressman Packs Union Credentials

St. Louis—Missouri's first black congressman, William L. Clay of St. Louis, will take office in January with an impressive set of trade union credentials as well as a reputation as a civil rights activist.

Clay has been, for nearly three years, coordinator of a special Negro apprenticeship training program for Steamfitters Local 562—recruiting and counseling black applicants for the highly-paid, highly-skilled craft.

Earlier he served as an organizer for Local 410 of the State, County & Municipal Employes.

SCME Sec.-Treas. Joseph L. Ames, who as an officer of the St. Louis local picked Clay for the job, describes him as "a good live organizer" who helped bring in hundreds of new members.

Clay ran on a platform calling for a $2-an-hour federal minimum wage, a 35-hour workweek and repeal of Taft-Hartley's Section 14(b).

It is a platform that calls for meaningful, large-scale federal programs coupled with "neighborhood power" through "democratic participation in the decisions by the people whose lives are affected."

Clay, 37, started work at 13 and saved up enough money to pay his way through St. Louis University. He was arrested in 1959 for attempting to break the color bar at a Howard Johnson's restaurant—and that same year was elected to the first of two terms on the St. Louis Board of Aldermen.

As an alderman, he co-sponsored a public accommodations civil rights ordinance—and supported the successful battle for a local law banning the importation of strikebreakers.

Clay told an interviewer that his combination of labor and civil rights activities comes naturally.

"The goal of both is the economic elevation of the people," he said. "The civil rights movement seeks to improve the lot of the black people; the labor movement, the lot of the working people, which includes most of the black people."

Clay has been the Democratic committeeman for his ward in the West End of St. Louis. When the legislature redistricted the 1st Congressional District to incorporate most of the Negro wards of St. Louis and incumbent Rep. Frank M. Karsten stepped aside, Clay entered the Democratic primary and won a six-man race for the congressional nomination. He was an easy winner in the November general election.

The congressman-elect says he plans to be an active participant in the liberal bloc in the House "to fight for progressive measures that benefit laboring people, poor people and black people."

Five-Fold Increase for Poor:

Urban Problems Panel Asks Top U.S. Priority for Housing

of the commission. But nearly all of the specific proposals provoked disagreement from at least some of the members in the course of the panel's discussions.

"If there is a sense of urgency and alarm in our report and our recommendation," the comission said in a summary, "it is because the commission saw the cities of our country first hand and listened to the voices of the people.

"The commission members certainly were not less concerned or knowledgeable than the average citizen, but after our inspections, hearings and research studies, we found conditions much worse, more widespread and more explosive than any of us had thought."

The urgent tone of the report was expressed in its finding that "about a third of the families in the nation cannot buy or rent decent housing at market rates by paying a reasonable proportion of their income."

"We must put housing on the front burner," the panel declared. "We must focus our housing programs on housing for poor people."

It called for giving local authorities "the tools and the money" to get the job done, urged an expanded role for the states, asked simpler federal programs and speedier processing by federal agencies, and urged "the utmost cooperation" from private industry.

"If all of these fail to bring an abundance of housing for poor people, then we believe that the government must become the builder of last resort," the commission said.

We hope this is not necessary but past neglect, unfulfilled promises, misplaced priorities and the consequences of failing to act give us compelling moral and practical reasons for proposing no less."

The commission summarized its major proposals as follows:

- "We urge a program for producing at least five times the present annual rate of low-income housing To do this we urge the removal of a number of barriers so that the housing industry can meet a larger share of the market.
- "We call for a mechanism that will provide regional and state uniformity in building codes and a system to develop standards that will be more hospitable to the research, testing and application of new building material and methods.
- "We cite many paths to reduce housing costs, these to include greater use of industrialized building methods, reduction of restrictive practices, methods for lowering land costs, and ways to reduce the expense of title search and other closing costs.
- "We urge incentives to encourage larger units of local government so effective and efficient home rule becomes possible. We do not believe the federal government can or should solve all urban problems.
- "New sources of revenue must be raised to meet our urban housing and related community needs.
- "We propose (1) a revenue sharing plan that gives credit to state-local tax effort and that provides for larger urban governments to obtain their share of this revenue directly from the federal government without state intercession; (2) streamlined property tax systems; and (3) new efforts to siphon off more community created land values for public purposes.
- "Finally, we urge numerous zoning proposals and land-use techniques designed to encourage more orderly urban growth."

The commission's report seemed clearly designed to stimulate extensive discussion of ways to solve the housing crisis, and many of its proposals were certain to provoke controversy.

Its plan for revenue sharing through block federal grants to states and cities, for example, already has brought a sharp dissent from Sec. Wilbur J. Cohen of the Depart. of Health, Education & Welfare.

Cohen, interviewed on NBC's "Meet the Press," said any such system was not "sound government," "sound economics" or "sound fiscal policy."

Cohen said it would be unsound for the federal government to "bear the burden" of tax collecting and then turn the funds over to the states "to spend as they wish without a definition of national priorities."

The Urban Problems panel itself took strong issue with proposals such as those put forth by Pres.-elect Richard M. Nixon to use tax incentives to spur greater participation by private industry in the task of rejuvenating the cities.

Such an approach, the commission said, "would be inefficient and ineffective" and could cause "a drain on the Treasury as great or greater than direct subsidies."

Ruttenberg Sets Up Consulting Service

Stanley H. Ruttenberg, manpower administrator and assistant secretary of labor, will set up his own economic consulting service after he resigns his government post in January.

The new firm of Stanley H. Ruttenberg & Associates will be involved in economic consultation and research; manpower utilization and planning functions, and urban and community development programs.

Ruttenberg was the AFL-CIO's research director from 1955 until he joined the Labor Dept. in 1963, initially as economic adviser to the secretary of labor.

Credit Rating Abuses Denounced at Hearing

Malice, errors and buyer-seller disagreements can make it virtually impossible for a man to get credit anywhere in the country and could blackball him from some jobs, according to testimony before a Senate subcommittee.

The Antitrust & Monopoly subcommittee, headed by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), heard public testimony and considered staff reports on innocent victims of nationwide networks of credit bureaus. Some operate as services to retail stores, some provide information to prospective employers.

Once incorrect information is fed into a computer—sometimes because of a mistake in identity—it is almost impossible to catch up with and eradicate the error, subcommittee investigators said.

One witness, a Shreveport, La., television newsman, told the subcommittee that his credit bureau troubles began when a local bureau reported that his car had been "repossessed" even though the manufacturer agreed to take it back because of its many defects.

Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.) announced during the hearing that he will introduce a bill when Congress reconvenes to "protect consumers against arbitrary or erroneous credit rating and the unwarranted publication of credit information."

Proxmire said his bill would require credit bureaus to notify persons when an adverse item is entered in their records and to establish procedures for discarding irrelevant and outdated information in an individual file.

Coordinated Health Care Plans Urged To Meet Medical Needs

mented delivery systems must be made whole through full coordination of resources and services at the local level."

Although facilities and systems will vary according to capacities and needs, the commission recommended the following guidelines:

- Systems should be organized to assure appropriate points of entry into and continuity of health services.
- Every citizen should have ready access to quality health care.
- States, regions, local communities and all health institutions should carry out continuous planning.
- There should be community responsibility, with both the users and the providers of health care participating in decisions.
- All levels of health care should be interdependent.

Emphasis must be to the organization of ambulatory care for the individual and his family, Jones pointed out, with coordinated professional direction through the full spectrum of comprehensive health services.

The commission defined comprehensive health care as the system that takes in: health education, personal preventive services, diagnostic and therapeutic services and rehabilitation of patients.

Prepaid medical health plans must be further developed in order to provide all people with equal access to the improved health care, the report said. These plans include private health insurance, group prepayment, government welfare support, in addition to medicare and medicaid.

The nation must be prepared to finance comprehensive health services adequately, the commission stressed, to ensure the continued operation of the systems and for the development of new components in the systems.

All available sources of funds must be tapped to support the health services. These include governmental, public and private expenditures.

Federal grants and direct loans are a necessary means of building new facilities and for the expansion or modernization of existing facilities.

The report noted that federal grants for construction have attracted money from local sources, often raised through fund drives or community bond issues and do not require repayment from patient revenues.

The commission pointed to the gains made in the last 21 years in health care facilities and services through the federal Hill-Burton program, which has "vastly increased the availability of hospitals. nursing homes, diagnostic and treatment centers, public health centers and rehabilitation facilities."

It also noted the gains brough through medicare and medicaid and other progressive health legislation in the last five years.

"In the next two decades, national health policy as expressed through federal legislation and administration must foster local ability to deliver comprehensive health care to all—an accepted national goal," the commission stressed.

Board Seeks Renewed Talks On Rail Crews

legally met with individual workers, without notice to the union, to offer pay increases if the men would abandon the crew-size issue.

The board made it clear that "negotiations on the crew consist issue, now present by virtue of the notices already filed, will be better served by laying aside of this money issue."

The board said it has received some requests that it recommend a "method of finality" to resolve the disputes, but it concluded that it "should decline to interject itself into the bargaining process" in this way.

"If the parties choose to agree upon some form of referral of dispute jobs to neutrals" that is their business, the board declared.

BRT Pres. Charles Luna said the report "reaffirms the position we have held all along. We are ready to negotiate at any time and always have been."

In Race Bias Article:

Look Magazine Hit For False Charges

Look magazine has been accused by the AFL-CIO of "distortions, misinformation and just plain sloppy reporting" in an article purporting to describe discrimination by unions against Negro workers and members.

The article, titled "A National Disgrace: What Unions Do to Blacks," is itself a disgrace, according to AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, who heads the federation's Civil Rights Committee. The piece was written by Jack Star, described as a Look senior editor. But, Schnitzler said, it is laden with untrue statements and ignores facts that "any cub reporter could have discovered."

Presidents of the Railway Clerks, Firemen & Enginemen and Papermakers also have written to the magazine to refute falsehoods in the article that relate to their unions.

Schnitzler, in a letter to Look Editor William B. Arthur, took particular exception to false charges in the headline appearing over the article: "For nearly a century, most unions have forced Negroes into Jim Crow locals, given them dirty jobs or refused to admit them at all. New laws and repeated union promises are not stopping prejudice."

The facts, Schnitzler declared, are that "most unions never had any Jim Crow locals; most have always admitted Negroes; almost none hire any workers—black or white—for any jobs, dirty or otherwise."

He hit out at "six untrue, sweeping allegations" that he said Look had used to back up its "ridiculous headlines," declaring that the truth about each allegation is:

- There are more than 1.5 million Negroes in AFL-CIO unions.
- Of the 60,000 locals in the AFL-CIO, fewer than 150 are now all-Negro and the campaign to merge them with all-white locals continues even where some black locals are reluctant to change.
- Negroes now constitute 3.6 percent of the apprenticeship force, an increase of more than 100 percent in 10 years. Labor Dept. figures show that Negro participation in apprenticeship programs has nearly doubled in the past 18 months.
- Unions, including building trades, are engaged in programs to recruit Negro journeymen as well as apprentices.
- Unorganized workers — black and white—"are flocking to trade unions," because non-union craftsmen, black or white, earn considerably less than organized workers do.
- Labor was one of the principal supporters fighting for enactment of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, but long before that unions had sought at the bargaining table to eliminate segregated seniority systems.

Railway Clerks Pres. C. L. Dennis charged that the article "completely misstates the facts" in claiming that Negro freight handlers were replaced by less senior white employes and that there are no Negro rail ticket clerks.

The truth is, he said, "there is not one known instance" of a Negro freight handler being displaced by a white worker with less seniority and there are "quite a few Negro ticket clerks" at work in passenger terminals.

Pres. H. E. Gilbert said "there is not a shred of truth" in the article's contention there are no Negro firemen. There are Negro firemen in various parts of the nation "and most of them" are BLFE members, he pointed out.

Pres. Harry D. Sayre hit at allegations of discrimination in the Papermakers & Paperworkers by pointing out that the union eliminated racial wage differentials more than 15 years ago and Negro members in the South are among the region's highest paid industrial workers.

He also blasted the magazine for showing a picture of a Negro worker described as being in a segregated local when the man is a member of a local that was integrated "sometime ago."

Schnitzler charged that the article also "deceives by what it omits." He noted, for example, that there is no mention of the successful program under which building trades unions are actively recruiting minority group youngsters for apprenticeships in 44 major cities.

"We make no claim to perfection," Schnitzler concluded, "and would welcome a constructive critique of our progress in civil rights. For there has been progress and we intend that it continue despite attempts such as Mr. Star's to discourage young Negroes.

"Labor is not and has not been the foe of the quest for a better life. Indeed, it has often been the only group fighting for this goal. And invariably, it has succeeded despite the hostility of that segment of the press which cares neither for the truth nor the cause—and would sacrifice both for sensational headlines."

THE MUSICIANS will help finance a Harlem community project aimed at providing 150 new jobs with a $500,000 annual payroll, AFM Pres. Herman Kenin announced. Present with Kenin, left, at a press conference were New York State Assemblyman Charles Ronger, center, and Hulan Jack, who reported that the F. W. Woolworth Co. will sell its 125th Street store to a community group, lease it back and enlarge the store.

High Court to Review Cardcheck Recognition

The Supreme Court agreed to hear arguments in four labor cases involving the right of the National Labor Relations Board to order lawbreaking employers to recognize unions in "cardcheck" cases without holding an election.

Most courts have upheld the right of the NLRB to penalize employers for committing unfair labor practices in order to smash a union. But the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond, Va., refused to uphold the board's "Joy Silk" and "Bernel Foam" rules in three cases.

The high court granted the board's request for review of these cases. Also it granted an employer's request for review of a decision by the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, Boston, enforcing the cardcheck doctrine in a fourth case.

The 4th Circuit rulings involved Meat Cutters Local 347 and the Gissel Packing Co., Huntington, W. Va.; the same local and Teamsters Local 175 at Heck's Inc. stores in Ashland, Ky., and the Upholsterers at High Point, N.C., plants of General Steel Products Inc. and Crown Flex of North Carolina, Inc.

Sinclair Case

The 1st Circuit case involved an NLRB order to the Sinclair Co., maker of wire cloth at Holyoke, Mass., to recognize and bargain with Teamsters Local 404 on the basis of cards signed by employes designating the union as their bargaining agent.

In each of the four cases, the employers claimed to have a good-faith doubt that the union involved was the free choice of a majority. After refusing recognition and demanding an election, each then proceeded to destroy the union's majority by anti-legal means, the NLRB found.

The NLRB pointed out in its petition that the Richmond court gave the same reason in three cases for refusing to enforce the board's order to bargain.

The Court claimed that "authorization cards are such unreliable indicators of the desires of the employes" that an employer in such cases "is justified in withholding recognition pending the result of a certification election."

In recent years, the NLRB said, "unions increasingly have relied upon the authorization card method of establishing their majority status where employer unfair practices have precluded a fair election." Courts of appeals other than the 4th Circuit have enforced board orders "where the union had valid cards signed by a majority of employes, and the employer had no good-faith doubt as to that fact."

In asking review, the board said the existence of differing rules in different circuits "impairs the uniformity of national labor policy" that the labor act was designed to achieve.

Musicians Help Fund Harlem Jobs Project

New York—The Musicians will help finance a $2 million Harlem store project designed to provide 150 jobs for members of the Harlem community, AFM Pres. Herman Kenin announced.

Kenin took part in a press conference where Harlem community leaders gave details of an agreement under which the F. W. Woolworth Co. will sell the land and building occupied by its big 125th St. store to Harlem Freedom Associates, and then lease it back for continued store use.

The store will be enlarged into a two-story air-conditioned building with a restaurant and automatic escalators. Hiring of new employes will give the community an added payroll of $500,000 or more, the sponsors said.

Harlem Freedom Associates will pay $157,000 annual rent to pay off a $1.8 million mortgage over 25 years, and will turn profits into community needs, the association announced. Also it will convey title to the land to Canaan Baptist Church, to be held in trusteeship for the community.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society will provide about $1.5 million in first mortgage financing as part of the insurance industry's pledge to commit $1 billion on inner city renewal, the conference was told. Up to $210,000 in second mortgage aid will be provided by the Musicians.

The AFM's investment, Kenin said, is "consistent with the AFM's policy of conservative placement of union funds for the benefit of its membership and the desire of members to assist local community projects, especially those which will benefit citizens in disadvantaged areas."

Harlem Freedom Associates is a limited partnership of leading Harlem residents including clergymen, businessmen, professional people. Among them are Wilt Chamberlain, professional basketball player; Bill Cosby, entertainer, and Floyd McKissick, former director of the Congress on Racial Equality.

Blood Donations Needed During Holiday Season

Trade union members and their families were urged today to give the gift of life through holiday blood donations to the American Red Cross.

Kenneth L. Kramer, American Red Cross liaison with AFL-CIO Community Services, pointed out that the normal holiday drop-off in blood donations is intensified this year by the current wave of flu and respiratory illness.

"Normally, we see a drop in blood donations around holidays," said Kramer. "This season there is another serious factor —flu and illness above regular rates."

"Union members are great supporters of the Red Cross blood program and the backbone of the donor program in many cities," Kramer continued. "We ask that this support be extended by the union members individually making an extra contribution during the holiday time. The Red Cross chapters in the blood program are prepared to receive your donation. It can be credited to your group, of course."

Pointing out that whole blood has a life of only 21 days, Kramer continued with a strong appeal for outstanding effort in order that all blood needs in communities throughout the land be met by "this gift, straight from the heart of organized labor to all America."

Fraternity Honors Philip Randolph

New York—AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph was honored at a luncheon here by Phi Epsilon Pi as a man who, in 1968, did the most to advance the essentials of brotherhood.

The founder and former president of the Sleeping Car Porters accepted the national college fraternity's annual international service award. Presentation was made by Dr. Cyril H. Wecht, Phi Epsilon Pi president.

In presenting the award, the fraternity noted that Randolph has worked for more than half a century on behalf of "the little man" and civil rights for the Negro.

Labor Education Held Key to Union Strength

Cambridge, Mass.—Labor can help in solving "crucial social and economic problems" only to the extent that it is a strong, viable movement, an AFL-CIO representative stressed here.

And labor education programs are the key to developing the necessary strength and energy, Dir. Walter G. Davis of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education pointed out.

He spoke to the 44th graduating class of the Harvard University Trade Union Program. Jointly sponsored by unions and the university, it offers union leaders courses in organizing, arbitration, collective bargaining, labor law and international labor affairs.

Davis praised the Harvard program as one of the best in the country, with "all the advantages that the academic world can offer —able instructors, good materials and effective teaching methods."

Labor education programs must be directed to strengthening individual unions, equipping people to lead them and presenting the importance of the labor movement, Davis declared.

"Today's crises in education, housing, employment and medical care can be resolved only if local union leaders really get into the act," Davis said.

But before they can do this, he added, "we must prepare ourselves through education programs which address themselves to these problems."

This is the way in which labor can become "truly the spokesman for the downtrodden, the disadvantaged and those at the botton of the economic ladder," he concluded.

To illustrate labor's involvement in and concern about solving social problems, Davis reported that:

- There are now about 540 union representatives who serve on school boards throughout the country. He predicted that the number would be doubled in the next few years.
- Labor is increasing participation in anti-poverty programs. It is represented on the local community action boards of the Office of Economic Opportunity in states across the nation.
- Unions are represented on committees in a variety of programs which have resulted from federal legislation enacted in the education and health fields.

Labor's education programs also must be aimed at strengthening a "coalition" with liberal and minority groups in helping to eliminate divisiveness among persons of varying races, religions and creeds, Davis said.

Shultz Meets the Press:

Limited Role in Labor Disputes Foreseen by New Secretary

George P. Shultz, who will be Secretary of Labor in the Nixon Cabinet, doesn't think his job description requires him to intervene in every big labor-management dispute.

Pres.-Elect Nixon said in his television introduction of his Cabinet appointees that Shultz "may be able to mediate some of these devastating labor-management crises" before they reach the strike stage.

But Shultz told a news conference that disputes in which he gets personally involved will, he hopes, be "few and far between."

His own belief, Shultz said, is that unions and management are the "real experts" and it's up to them to work out their problems. "My instinct would be to leave matters as much as possible in their hands."

Where mediation is sought, he said, the major responsibility is with the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service and, for railroads and airlines, the National Mediation Board.

Shultz emphasized that most labor disputes are settled without strikes, but under a free system of government if people feel strongly enough about an issue to strike, "you have to respect that" decision.

He made clear, however, that he considers strikes of public emploves in a different category. Shultz said he "deplores" such strikes but believes problems of collective bargaining in the public sector deserve careful study.

"I intend to work on it hard and think on it hard," he said.

Shultz met the press under the ground rules laid down for all Nixon appointees — that until they take office they will not answer questions dealing with specific policies. But questions on general attitudes and approaches were acceptable.

Thus Shultz declined to comment on so-called "right-to-work" laws or to answer questions about the National Labor Relations Board which, he pointed out, is an independent agency.

He did note, in reply to a question on wage-price guidelines, that several years ago he wrote an article "quite skeptical about the workability and usefulness of guidelines."

The secretary-designate said he thought private industry should be drawn into job training programs "as much as possible." But he doesn't think "we can turn it over to the private sector and just walk away. The Government has a responsibility."

He is a registered Republican and voted for Nixon, Shultz said, "but I'm not a particularly partisan type."

So far as relations with the labor movement are concerned, Shultz plans to be a "careful listener" and hopes to develop "a good cooperative relationship."

He expressed appreciation for the letter of congratulations AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sent him, said he has talked to Meany on the phone and plans to get together with him before long.

He will try to bring into the Nixon Cabinet an understanding of "the problems of the workplace."

The Kennedy-Johnson years in which major manpower programs have been initiated has been an era of "fruitful experimentation," Shultz said, "a very worthwhile period."

He added: "I hope we can learn from that experience and build on the base" that has been developed.

An associate of his from the University of Chicago, Industrial Relations Prof. Arnold R. Weber, is helping Shultz arrange the transition at the Labor Dept.

Shultz, who has handled occasional Labor Dept. assignments while dean of the University of Chicago's Graduate School of Business, had high praise and "admiration" for outgoing Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz.

The two have conferred several times since the Cabinet appointments were announced and Wirtz referred to his designated successor as "an old and cherished friend."

Wirtz wrote Shultz that his appointment will serve the public interest "to a rare degree," and added:

"So far as the people who are the Dept. of Labor are concerned, this appointment means that their work will go ahead under the leadership of one who is thoroughly familiar with it, sympathetic to it, but in a position at the same time to give it new and vigorous direction."

PREPARING for change of Administration, Labor Sec. Willard Wirtz, right, meets with the man who will succeed him, George P. Shultz. Wirtz termed Shultz "an old and cherished friend."

Operating Engineers Ink Federal Training Pact

Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers has announced signing of a $1,355,000 retraining and pre-apprenticeship contract with the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare's Manpower Development & Training Division and the Labor Dept.'s Manpower Administration.

The program calls for six-week courses to retrain and upgrade 660 journeymen in heavy equipment operation to improve and broaden their skills to meet current industry demands.

It further provides for 26-week pre-apprenticeship courses for 123 disadvantaged youths—103 as heavy equipment operators and 20 in water treatment plant operations. Priority will be given to placement of Neighborhood Youth Corps enrollees. The courses will combine remedial education with on-the-job training.

The training will be given at sites in Alabama, Arizona, Connecticut, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Washington, D. C., Wisconsin, and at three places in California. For the most part, these are at military installations, Boy Scout and YMCA camps or land owned publicly or by non-profit organizations. It is expected that the existing structures on the sites will be extensively improved as a result of the program.

During the courses, the journeymen will be paid $45 to $75 a week, plus a $5 daily subsistence allowance. The pre-apprentices will get $1.60 an hour, or about $64 a week, plus a $5 daily subsistence.

Wharton noted that the Operating Engineers' Dept. of Research & Education, under Reese Hammond, over the last few years has developed an approach to the training of equipment operators in every skill as well as an integrated system of pre-apprentice training that offers a hand to the often-rejected youth.

"This new contract," Wharton said, "provides a significant thrust to our efforts."

Simkin Named To Steel Pay Study Panel

Pittsburgh—William E. Simkin, director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, will leave his federal post to become chairman of a panel named to overhaul incentive pay systems in the steel industry.

Pres. I. W. Abel of the Steelworkers and Chairman R. Heath Larry of the Steel Companies' Coordinating Committee announced that Simkin and two other mediators will resolve any disputes growing out of the pay study agreed to by union and management in the contract agreement reached last July 30.

The others are Sylvester Garrett of Pittsburgh and Ralph T. Seward of Washington, D.C. Garrett is chairman of the USWA—U.S. Steel Corporation arbitration panel. Seward is impartial umpire for the union and Bethlehem Steel Corp.

The joint announcement said Simkin, Garrett and Seward will "resolve possible disputes within the scope of the study" to be concluded by next Aug. 1 in plants of the 11 participating companies.

Workers whose jobs are put under incentive pay as a result of the study will receive 10 cents for each hour worked at regular rates since last August.

The union named Sec.-Treas. Walter J. Burke, District Dir. James P. Griffin, and Ben Fischer of the USWA staff to its study team.

HI-MOM CALL winners—servicemen and women who will be linked in telephone conversation with their families during the holidays—are selected from entries in the Washington, D.C. area. This is part of a national program sponsored by the Communications Workers. Participating in the selections are, from left, Frank Shore, Washington area Hi-Mom director; CWA Executive Vice Pres. Glenn Watts, Isabel Powell, USO, and CWA Vice Pres. William Edwards.

CWA Dials 'Hi-Mom' For 4,000 Servicemen

The 12th annual Hi-Mom program sponsored by the Communications Workers is under way—and local unions of CWA are expected to sponsor over 4,000 calls this Christmas season between servicemen and women overseas and their loved ones at home.

CWA's Hi-Mom program, co-sponsored by the United Services Organization (USO), is expected to touch about every location where the United States has military troops stationed.

Locals of the union generally draw the names of winners or conduct essay contests to determine winners. Each local decides how many calls it will sponsor. In addition, the CWA this year is sponsoring 200 calls—especially for servicemen who have been wounded and must spend the Christmas holidays in military hospitals.

The program was started in 1956 when a single local sponsored a few calls. The next year numerous locals took up the idea, and now more than half of the locals participate in sponsoring calls.

It is estimated that when the 1968 program ends about 16,000 GI's will have had a chance to talk with their parents at home because of Hi-Mom programs over the years.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne has pointed out that "every time a Hi-Mom call is completed, there are pleasant memories that linger for years."

Michael Gutierrez, 10 years old and living in Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1965—the year he won the chance to call his father stationed in France—used his call to tell his dad he could see again, for example. He had lost his eyesight some time earlier.

Other times the memories linger—but not so pleasantly. Mrs. Emma Gantt of Rome, Ga., was but one of the mothers who has written CWA to say that her "Hi-Mom" chat with her son was the last time she ever talked to him. They talked together in December of 1967, but he fell to enemy fire three months later.

CWA encourages local union participation by awarding $150 to the local that sponsors the most calls on a per capita basis.

A tiny CWA local—4104 in Manistee, Mich.—won the prize this year for the second year in a row by agreeing to sponsor one call for each of its 25 members.

Loyola Gives Labor Award To DeShetler

Los Angeles—Irwin L. DeShetler, national AFL-CIO coordinator for farm worker organizing, won a citation from Loyola University's industrial relations center here for his services to workers and the center.

The Loyola labor award went to DeShetler, and the management award to Board Chairman Edgar F. Kaiser, of Kaiser Industries, at a ceremony marking the 20th anniversary of the center's founding.

The university's honorary doctor of laws degree was conferred on Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service, who gave the convocation keynote.

DeShetler formerly was president of the Glass Workers, and served the former CIO as regional director. The citation praised him for helping launch labor-management classes at the center, and described him as being "on fire with zeal for the rights of working men and women."
